CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONTAINING

53

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

FORTY-THIRD CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

IN SIX PARTS, WITH AN INDEX.

VOLUME II.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1874.

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD AND APPENDIX.

FORTY-THIRD CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

PART I.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[From December 1, 1873, to January 29, 1874.]

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FORTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

FIRST SESSION.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, December 1, 1873.

The first Monday in December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Forty-third Congress commenced this day at the Capitol, in the city of Washington.

The members of the Senate assembled in the Senate Chamber, and the body was called to order at twelve o'clock noon by Hon. HENRY WILSON, Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

SENATORS PRESENT.

The following Senators were present: from the State of—

Maine—Hon. Hannibal Hamlin and Hon. Lot M. Morrill.
New Hampshire—Hon. Aaron H. Cragin and Hon. Bainbridge Wadleigh.
Vermont—Hon. George F. Edmunds and Hon. Justin S. Morrill.
Massachusetts—Hon. George S. Boutwell and Hon. Charles Sumner.
Rhode Island—Hon. Henry B. Anthony and Hon. William Sprague.
Connecticut—Hon. William A. Buckingham and Hon. Orris S. Ferry.
New York—Hon. Roscoe Conkling and Hon. Reuben E. Fenton.
New Jersey—Hon. Frederick T. Frelinghuysen and Hon. John P. Stockton.
Pennsylvania—Hon. Simon Cameron and Hon. John Scott.
Delaware—Hon. Eli Saulsbury.
Maryland—Hon. George R. Dennis.
Virginia—Hon. John W. Johnston and Hon. John F. Lewis.
North Carolina—Hon. Matt W. Ransom and Hon. Augustus S. Merrimon.
South Carolina—Hon. John J. Patterson.
Florida—Hon. Abijah Gilbert.
Alabama—Hon. George E. Spencer.
Mississippi—Hon. James L. Alcorn and Hon. Adelbert Ames.
Louisiana—Hon. J. Rodman West.
Texas—Hon. Morgan C. Hamilton.
Arkansas—Hon. Powell Clayton and Hon. S. W. Dorsey.
Missouri—Hon. Lewis V. Bogy and Hon. Carl Schurz.
Tennessee—Hon. William G. Brownlow and Hon. Henry Cooper.
Kentucky—Hon. Thomas C. McCreery and Hon. John W. Stevenson.
West Virginia—Hon. Arthur I. Boreman and Hon. Henry G. Davis.
Ohio—Hon. John Sherman and Hon. Allen G. Thurman.
Indiana—Hon. Daniel D. Pratt and Hon. Oliver P. Morton.
Illinois—Hon. John A. Logan and Hon. Richard J. Oglesby.
Michigan—Hon. Zachariah Chandler and Hon. Thomas W. Ferry.
Wisconsin—Hon. Matthew H. Carpenter and Hon. Timothy O. Howe.
Iowa—Hon. William B. Allison and Hon. George G. Wright.
Minnesota—Hon. Alexander Ramsey and Hon. William Windom.
Kansas—Hon. John J. Ingalls.
California—Hon. Aaron A. Sargent.
Nebraska—Hon. Thomas W. Tipton.
Oregon—Hon. James K. Kelly and Hon. John H. Mitchell.

PRAYER.

Rev. E. D. Owen, of Washington, offered up the following prayer:

Infinite Majesty, ever adorable Jehovah, for the sake of Him who paid our ransom and through whose mediation and intercession we now live, accept our praises, our adoration, our worship, that Thou hast defended, and guarded, and guided us; that this day we are free from the horrors of war, from its pains and from its penalties. Grant to be our deliverer still, as a nation and as individuals.

Lord, bless Thy servants the President of the United States, his Cabinet, both Houses of the National Congress, and all our rulers, at home and abroad. And grant so to infuse them with Thy grace and supply them with infinite wisdom, that in all their deliberations Thy name may be glorified, and purity, and peace, and prosperity may fill our land.

Pardon and deliver us from all our sins, nationally and individually. Confirm and strengthen us in all goodness, and bring us to everlasting life. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented the credentials of Hon. ROBERT CROZIER, appointed by the governor of the State of Kansas a Senator from that State to fill, until the next meeting of the Legislature thereof, the vacancy caused by the resignation of Alexander Caldwell.

The credentials were read; and the oaths prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. CROZIER, he took his seat in the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, are bills now in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that resolutions in relation to the organization of the body are first in order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator allow me to offer resolutions relating to the order of business?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly, with the understanding that I shall proceed as soon as those resolutions are acted upon.

HOUR OF MEETING.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the hour of the daily meeting of the Senate be twelve o'clock m. until otherwise ordered.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate has assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. ANTHONY offered the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two members be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the committee; and Messrs. ANTHONY and THURMAN were appointed.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR CASSERLY.

Mr. SARGENT. Before the Senator from Massachusetts proceeds with his bills I desire to have a telegram read from my colleague, Mr. CASSERLY, stating that he has resigned his seat in the Senate, which, as it may affect the organization of the committees, should be read in the hearing of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the telegram will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, November 29, 1873.

HON. A. A. SARGENT:

Yesterday I transmitted to Governor Booth my written resignation of my seat in the Senate for the reasons therein mentioned.

E. CASSERLY.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill without previous notice.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to protect all citizens of the United States in their civil rights and to furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask that the bill be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. SUMNER. I will simply observe that I hope the Senate, at an early day, will be willing to proceed with the consideration of that well-known bill without any reference to a committee.

I also ask unanimous consent to introduce another bill——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Massachusetts has introduced a bill which is being disposed of, and upon which he has made a remark, to which I wish to reply, with the permission of the Senator.

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say merely that I trust that bill and every other bill which involves private rights, and which, in order to make them strong and sure, ought to be considered by a committee, will be sent to a committee and reported upon in such a way as to effectuate in the best manner the real purposes that my friend and I both have in view.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator is perfectly aware that this bill has been amply, or at least very extensively, considered in the Senate and been amended, so that perhaps the Senate has acted as a Committee of the Whole on the bill. I had hoped, therefore, that at an early day we might proceed with it without any reference to a committee, so that we might speed it to its just conclusion before Christmas Day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There would be great force in that observation but for this: The Senator's bills that we have already passed have been brought under the scrutiny of the courts; some of those courts have not been friendly to the purposes of those bills, and they have found flaws in those that we have passed, and they have pointed out others which may exist in those that we are to pass, involving some of the questions in this very bill. Let us, therefore, when we pass the next bill, endeavor to so broaden and secure this subject under the Constitution, as that the courts cannot escape from it. That is my reason for desiring to have the whole subject reinvestigated as promptly as my friend can do.

Mr. SUMNER. There is still another bill, which I have sent to the Chair.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 2) to secure equal rights in the public schools of Washington and Georgetown; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask to have the bill laid on the table and printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will lie on the table until the committees are appointed.

Mr. SUMNER. I also ask unanimous consent to introduce another bill.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 3) to authorize compound-interest notes as a substitute for legal-tender notes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to have that bill printed also; and I will observe that at the proper time I shall ask its reference to the Committee on Finance. The bill contemplates a return to specie payments in about a year and a half, and by a gentle process of contraction. I shall ask the consideration of the bill by my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and trust it may find favor with him; but if it does not, if any other measure is presented by which we may reach the great end of specie payments, I shall most heartily support it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce another bill.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 4) to protect persons against inveigling from abroad, kidnapping, forcible constraint, or involuntary service; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask that the bill be printed, and I will add that it is intended to meet a class of cases that has occurred since the last session of Congress. I refer to the five thousand Italian children who are supposed to have been inveigled or kidnapped from the southern part of Italy, and who are now held in something kindred to slavery, if not slavery itself, throughout this country. The existing laws of the land do not seem to reach their case. The bill that I now introduce, I hope, will reach it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. SUMNER also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 5) to provide for the adjustment and satisfaction of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SUMNER. I also ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of President by a direct vote of the people, and abolishing the office of Vice-President; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUMNER. At the proper time I shall move the reference of that joint resolution to the committee of which my friend the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] is chairman. Perhaps I can move it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the committees have not yet been appointed.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that the committee of the Senator is constituted. Do I understand that the Committee on Constitutional Amendments, of which the Senator is chairman, is now in being, or is it to be constituted again at this session?

Mr. MORTON. The Committee on Privileges and Elections was authorized to sit during the recess and consider that subject.

Mr. SUMNER. Then the joint resolution may as well lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. SUMNER. I also send to the Chair another joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 2) proposing an amendment to the Constitution confining the President to a single term of six years; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 6) relating to certain moneys appropriated to members of Congress; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask that the bill be printed and lie on the table, and hereafter I will move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 7) creating a commission to adjust the compensation of the several claimants for damages for depredations by rebel cruisers, to be discharged out of the indemnity fund awarded by the tribunal of arbitration at Geneva, to be paid by Great Britain to the United States; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 8) changing the time for holding certain district courts of the United States for the State of Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 9) to repeal so much of the act of March 3, 1873, as increases the salaries therein named; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask that that bill be printed; and in due time I shall ask that it go to a committee, unless it be the pleasure of the Senate to pass it without a reference.

The bill was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 10) to repeal an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States;" which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LOGAN also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 11) to establish a branch mint of the United States at Chicago, in the State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 12) to repeal the sections in the bankrupt law of 1867, and acts amendatory thereof, which provide for involuntary bankruptcy; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. FENTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 13) to regulate the service in the collection of customs at the various ports of entry in the United States, and the disposition of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to customs, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FENTON. I ask that the bill be printed, and at the proper time I shall move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion to print was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 14) in relation to bounties; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I move that the bill be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, whenever such committee shall be appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table for the present. The question is on the motion to print.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 15) establishing the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the bill be printed and lie on the table for the present, until the committees are constituted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 16) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 17) relating to swamp-lands in the State of California; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the bill lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 18) relating to grazing-lands in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 19) to dedicate the public and agricultural lands in the State of California to homestead and pre-emption purposes; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 20) explanatory of an act entitled "An act to reduce the expenses of the survey and sale of the public lands of the United States;" which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 21) for the relief of aged or infirm pre-emption settlers, which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 22) for the sale of timber-lands in the States of California and Oregon, and Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 23) relating to the entry of homesteads and pre-emptions in California; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 24) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 25) to establish certain post-routes; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 3) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for an election of United States Senators by the people; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie the table and be printed.

Mr. WINDOM. At the proper time I shall move the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolutions; which were read:

Resolutions concerning arbitration as a substitute for war in determining differences between nations.

Whereas by international law and existing custom war is recognized as a form of trial for the determination of differences between nations; and

Whereas for generations good men have protested against the irrational character of this arbitrament, where force instead of justice prevails, and have anxiously sought for a substitute in the nature of a judicial tribunal, all of which was expressed by Franklin in his exclamation: "When will mankind be convinced that all wars are follies, very expensive and very mischievous, and agree to settle their differences by arbitration?" and

Whereas war once prevailed in the determination of differences between individuals, between cities, between counties, and between provinces, being recognized in all these cases as the arbiter of justice, but at last yielded to a judicial tribunal, and now, in the progress of civilization, the time has come for the extension of this humane principle to nations, so that their differences may be taken from the arbitrament of war, and, in conformity with these examples, submitted to a judicial tribunal; and

Whereas arbitration has been formally recognized as a substitute for war in the determination of differences between nations, being especially recommended by the Congress of Paris, where were assembled the representatives of England, France, Russia, Prussia, Austria, Sardinia, and Turkey, and afterward adopted by the United States in formal treaty with Great Britain for the determination of differences arising from depredations of British cruisers, and also from opposing claims with regard to the San Juan boundary; and

Whereas it becomes important to consider and settle the true character of this beneficent tribunal, thus commended and adopted, so that its authority and completeness as a substitute for war may not be impaired, but strengthened and upheld, to the end that civilization may be advanced and war be limited in its sphere: Therefore,

(1.) Resolved, That in the determination of international differences arbitration should become a substitute for war in reality as in name, and, therefore, co-extensive with war in jurisdiction, so that any question or grievance which might be the occasion of war or of misunderstanding between nations should be considered by this tribunal.

(2.) Resolved, That the United States, having at heart the cause of peace everywhere, and hoping to help its permanent establishment between nations, hereby recommend the adoption of arbitration as a just and practical method for the determination of international differences, to be maintained sincerely and in good faith, so that war may cease to be regarded as a proper form of trial between nations.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish an order to be made to print these resolutions, and at the proper time I shall ask their reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion to print was agreed to.

FREE BANKING AND SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be requested to consider the expediency of reporting a bill providing for free banking and for the resumption of specie payments, to take effect on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1875.

Mr. President, after the committees are raised, I shall move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance, and if it be the pleasure of the Senate I shall endeavor to get the floor on Wednesday, the day after to-morrow, in order to submit some remarks in support and explanation of the resolution. I think it will be agreed upon all sides of the Senate that if any action is to take place on this question, it ought to take place at an early day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

THE CURRENCY.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, submitted the following resolution; which was read:

A resolution suggestive of a remedy for monetary derangement.

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to consider the expediency of providing for a national system of banking and currency in lieu of the present one, which shall embody the substantial features following, to wit:

1. Banking to be open and free to all individuals and associations without limitation of capital.

2. The maximum currency circulation to be $800,000,000, exclusive of fractional, and to be issued and authenticated solely by the Government, of uniform character, with "United States currency" imprinted on its face, made lawful money and a legal tender for all public and private dues, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt, and convertible on demand into Government bonds bearing interest at 3 65-100 per cent. per annum in currency.

3. The Government to issue bonds stamped "currency bonds," of denominations of $100 and multiples bearing interest at the rate of 3 65-100 per cent. per annum, convertible into currency on demand, and to be exempt from taxation by Federal, State, municipal, and local authority.

4. Substitution of United States currency for national currency to be done at the convenience of the Government, without diminishing the volume of current circulation, and the bonds held for the security of the national currency to be adjusted with the banks by purchase or surrender; substitution of United States currency for other existing forms, bringing about uniformity of currency, to likewise be done without lessening the current circulation.

5. For immediate relief to existing monetary stringency the forty-four millions Treasury reserve to be issued without delay in the purchase of Government bonds bearing the higher rates of interest, and as fast as practicable additional purchases of like bonds to be made with United States currency, until the maximum circulation be reached.

6. Preparatory to withdrawal of the fractional currency the Secretary of the Treasury is required to make public designation of a period after which to begin the redemption in silver of denominations of twenty-five cents and under; also a second period designated at which to commence like redemption of the remaining fractional currency then in circulation, and all, when so redeemed, to be destroyed; and that the committee report at as early a day as practicable by bill or otherwise.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I ask that that resolution lie on the table and be printed. I shall avail myself of some early day to call it up for reference to the Committee on Finance, and propose then to address the Senate on the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed, if there be no objection.

HARBOR OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of the appointment by the United States of a commission to act with a similar commission to be appointed by the State of California, to examine and report upon the condition of the harbor of San Francisco; what causes, if any, are permanently injuring said harbor; what means should be used to protect the harbor from injury, and whether the national interest requires that the United States Government should require the construction of a sea-wall in said harbor, and aid the State of California in its construction.

I should like to have the resolution adopted now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is not any Committee on Commerce now; and such a resolution cannot be adopted at this time according to the course of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are no committees in the Senate now.

Mr. SARGENT. Let it lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

ANNUAL REPORTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the report of the Secretary of the Senate, made in obedience to law, showing the receipts and expenditures of the Senate from July 1, 1872, to June 30, 1873; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a statement from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the property in his possession belonging to the office; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the annual report of the Congressional Printer; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RESIGNATION OF CHAPLAIN NEWMAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 1, 1873.

To Hon. HENRY WILSON,
Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate:

SIR: I desire, through you, to resign my position as Chaplain to the Senate, which office the Senate has thrice done me the honor to confer upon me, and to express my thanks for so signal a mark of its favor.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. P. NEWMAN.

DISPATCH FROM MADRID.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I have in my hands a cable dispatch from Madrid, which I found on my table upon my arrival at Washington, purporting to be signed by several members of the Spanish Cortes. I have prepared a literal translation of it, and find that it is addressed to "Senators Sumner and Cameron." On consultation with the Senator from Pennsylvania, and at his suggestion, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to read this dispatch.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, in my judgment, it would be unwise at this time to read any document which may precipitate remarks and debate on a subject-matter now under negotiation. I must object to the reading of any paper on that subject. It is a matter that we ought to consider in executive session, if at all.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the Senator would regret his objection, if he were aware of the contents of the paper.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the Senator would be glad to hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) Does the Senator from Ohio object to the reading of the paper?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do. It is not in the nature of a petition; nor do I think it wise now to discuss the matter to which it relates.

Mr. CONKLING. I think we shall be able to restrain our curiosity until we get the President's message, at all events.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the paper cannot be read.

Mr. CAMERON. It seems to me that there would be no objection to reading this paper if it was understood. It does not look to legislation. It is a communication from abroad—from Spain.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would object to any communication from anybody, a member of a foreign government. It is contrary to the rules of the Senate to receive such a paper even as a petition, much more as a mere matter of information; especially when we are about to receive information of an official character on the subject-matter. I hope my friend from Pennsylvania will see that there is indelicacy in bringing up the subject here now in any way. Remarks might be made in regard to the contents of this paper when it was read which might be injurious.

Mr. CAMERON. The Senator has certainly a right to make his objection. I see that very plainly; but I do not see that there is any rule against it. Of course I shall not persist as the Senator has made an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ask to have the document read at the desk?

Mr. SUMNER. I asked the unanimous consent of the Senate to read it. I understood the Senator from Ohio to object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I understand, however, the only objection is one of the order of the business of the Senate, and it is not implied by any gentleman who has spoken that it is out of any disrespect to the authors of this communication or hostility to the subject. It is merely a point of order.

Mr. SUMNER. It is an aspiration for peace.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing before the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF RULES—SALARIES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As it may be some time before we are able to go on with the regular business, and be informed of the organization of the House, and so on, I move that the Senate take a recess for half an hour.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask my friend from Vermont to withdraw that motion for a moment until I make a statement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. WRIGHT. It will be remembered that near the close of the last session of Congress I introduced certain proposed amendments to the rules of the Senate. Upon my motion the further consideration of those amendments was postponed until this day. My purpose, as then announced, was to have the proposed amendments referred to a committee. As the committees have not yet been organized, of course I cannot press the motion at this time, but I give notice now that when the committees shall be organized, those propositions of amendment shall either go to the committee upon the general order or upon my own motion.

While I have the floor I wish to state another thing. I had the honor, this morning, to introduce a bill to repeal the act of March 3, 1873, touching the subject of salaries. If the subject shall not be disposed of before next Monday, and I can get the floor, in moving its reference to a committee I propose to address the Senate on the general subject.

RECESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CARPENTER in the chair.) The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate do now take a recess of half an hour.

The motion was agreed to; and at twelve o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m. the Senate took a recess till one o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m., at which time it was again called to order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think it will not promote the public interest for us to remain here longer to-day. We shall not be able, evidently, until very late, to obtain the President's message on account of the delay at the other end of the Capitol. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at one o'clock and sixteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 1, 1873.

This being the day prescribed by the Constitution for the meeting of Congress, the members elect of the House of Representatives for the Forty-third Congress assembled in their Hall, and at twelve o'clock m. were called to order by Hon. EDWARD MCPHERSON, Clerk of the last House of Representatives.

The CLERK. The time having arrived for the meeting of the Forty-third Congress of the United States, it becomes the duty of the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Forty-second Congress to read the roll of the members elect returned to him in pursuance of law. Gentlemen whose names are called will please answer in their order.

The roll was then called, and the following members answered to their names:

MAINE.

John H. Burleigh.
William P. Frye.
James G. Blaine.
Eugene Hale.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

William B. Small.
Austin F. Pike.
Hosea W. Parker.

VERMONT.

Charles W. Willard.
Luke P. Poland.
George W. Hendee.

MASSACHUSETTS.

James Buffinton.
Benjamin W. Harris.
Henry L. Pierce.
Samuel Hooper.
Daniel W. Gooch.
Benjamin F. Butler.
E. Rockwood Hoar.
John M. S. Williams.
George F. Hoar.
Alvah Crocker.
Henry L. Dawes.

RHODE ISLAND.

Benjamin T. Eames.
James M. Pendleton.

CONNECTICUT.

Joseph R. Hawley.
Stephen W. Kellogg.
Henry H. Starkweather.
William H. Barnum.

NEW YORK.

Henry W. Scudder.
John G. Schumaker.
Stewart L. Woodford.
Philip S. Crooke.
William R. Roberts.
Samuel S. Cox.
Thomas J. Creamer.
John D. Lawson.
David B. Mellish.
Fernando Wood.
Clarkson N. Potter.
Charles St. John.
John O. Whitehouse.
David M. DeWitt.
Eli Perry.
James S. Smart.
Robert S. Hale.
William A. Wheeler.
Henry H. Hathorn.
David Wilber.
Clinton L. Merriam.
Ellis H. Roberts.
William E. Lansing.
R. Holland Duell.
Charles D. MacDougall.
William H. Lamport.
Thomas C. Platt.
H. Boardman Smith.
George G. Hoskins.
Lyman K. Bass.
Walter L. Sessions.
Lyman Tremain.

NEW JERSEY.

John W. Hazleton.
Samuel A. Dobbins.
Amos Clark, jr.
Robert Hamilton.
William Walter Phelps.
Marcus L. Ward.
Isaac W. Scudder.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Samuel J. Randall.
Charles O'Neil.
Leonard Myers.
William D. Kelley.
Alfred C. Harmer.
James S. Biery.
Washington Townsend.
Hiester Clymer.
A. Herr Smith.
John W. Killinger.
John B. Storm.
Lazarus D. Shoemaker.
James D. Strawbridge.
John B. Packer.
John A. Magee.
John Cessna.
R. Milton Speer.
Sobieski Ross.
Carlton B. Curtis.
Hiram L. Richmond.
Alexander W. Taylor.
James S. Negley.
Ebenezer McJunkin.
William S. Moore.
Lemuel Todd.
Charles Albright.
Glenni W. Scofield.

DELAWARE.

James L. Lofland.

MARYLAND.

Ephraim K. Wilson.
Stevenson Archer.
William J. O'Brien.
Thomas Swann.
William J. Albert.
Lloyd Lowndes, jr.

VIRGINIA.

James B. Sener.
James H. Platt, jr.
J. Ambler Smith.
William H. H. Stowell.
Alexander M. Davis.
Thomas Whitehead.
John T. Harris.
Eppa Hunton.
Reese T. Bowen.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Clinton L. Cobb.
Charles R. Thomas.
Alfred M. Waddell.
William A. Smith.
James M. Leech.
Thomas S. Ashe.
William M. Robbins.
Robert B. Vance.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Joseph H. Rainey.
Alonzo J. Ransier.
Robert B. Elliott.
Alexander S. Wallace.
Richard H. Cain.

GEORGIA.

Morgan Rawls.
Philip Cook.
Henry R. Harris.
James C. Freeman.
James H. Blount.
Pierce M. B. Young.
Alexander H. Stephens.
Hiram P. Bell.

ALABAMA.

Frederick G. Bromberg.
James T. Rapier.
Charles Pelham.
Charles Hays.
John H. Caldwell.
Joseph H. Sloss.
Alexander White.
Christopher C. Sheats.

MISSISSIPPI.

Lucius Q. C. Lamar.
Albert R. Howe.
Henry W. Barry.
Jason Niles.
George C. McKee.
John R. Lynch.

LOUISIANA.

Chester B. Darrall.
Frank Morey.

OHIO.

Milton Saylor.
Henry B. Banning.
John Q. Smith.
Lewis B. Gunckle.
Charles N. Lamison.
Isaac R. Sherwood.
Lawrence J. Neal.
William Lawrence.
James W. Robinson.
Charles Foster.
Hezekiah S. Bundy.
Hugh J. Jewett.
Milton I. Southard.
John Berry.
William P. Sprague.
Lorenzo Danford.
Laurin D. Woodworth.
James Monroe.
James A. Garfield.
Richard C. Parsons.

KENTUCKY.

Edward Crossland.
John Young Brown.
Charles W. Milliken.
William B. Read.
Elisha D. Standeford.
William E. Arthur.
James B. Beck.
Milton J. Durham.
George M. Adams.
John D. Young.

TENNESSEE.

Roderick R. Butler.
Jacob M. Thornburg.
William Crutchfield.
John M. Bright.
Horace H. Harrison.
Washington C. Whitthorne.
John E. C. Atkins.
David A. Nunn.
Barbour Lewis.
Horace Maynard.

INDIANA.

William E. Niblack.
Simeon K. Wolfe.
William S. Holman.
Jeremiah M. Wilson.
John Coburn.
Morton C. Hunter.
Thomas J. Cason.
James N. Tyner.
Henry B. Saylor.
Jasper Packard.
Godlove S. Orth.
William Williams.

ILLINOIS.

John B. Rice.
Jasper D. Ward.
Charles B. Farwell.
Stephen A. Hurlburt.
Horatio C. Burchard.
John B. Hawley.
Franklin Corwin.
Greenbury L. Fort.
Granville Barrere.
William H. Ray.
Robert M. Knapp.
James C. Robinson.
John McNulta.
Joseph G. Cannon.
John R. Eden.
James S. Martin.
William R. Morrison.
Isaac Clements.
Samuel S. Marshall.

MISSOURI.

Edwin O. Stanard.
Erastus Wells.
William H. Stone.
Robert A. Hatcher.
Richard P. Bland.
Harrison E. Havens.
Thomas T. Crittenden.
Abram Comingo.
Isaac C. Parker.
Ira B. Hyde.
John B. Clarke, jr.
John M. Glover.
Aylett H. Buckner.

ARKANSAS.

Oliver P. Snyder.
William J. Hines.

MICHIGAN.

Moses W. Field.
Henry Waldron.
George Willard.
Julius C. Burrows.
William B. Williams.
Josiah W. Begole.
Omar D. Conger.
Nathaniel B. Bradley.
Jay A. Hubbell.

FLORIDA.

Josiah T. Walls.
William J. Purman.

TEXAS.

William S. Herndon.
William P. McLean.
De Witt C. Giddings.
John Hancock.
Roger Q. Mills.
Asa H. Willie.

IOWA.

George W. McCrary.
Aylett R. Cotton.
William G. Donnan.
Henry O. Pratt.
James Wilson.
William Loughridge.
John A. Kasson.
James W. McDill.
Jackson Orr.

WISCONSIN.

Charles G. Williams.
Gerry W. Hazelton.
J. Allen Barber.
Alexander Mitchell.
Charles A. Eldredge.
Philetus Sawyer.
Jeremiah M. Rusk.
Alexander S. McDill.

CALIFORNIA.

Charles Clayton.
Horace F. Page.
John K. Luttrell.
Sherman O. Houghton.

MINNESOTA.

Mark H. Dunnell.
Horace B. Strait.
John T. Averill.

OREGON.

James W. Nesmith.

KANSAS.

David P. Lowe.
Stephen A. Cobb.
William A. Phillips.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Frank Hereford.

NEVADA.

Charles W. Kendall.

NEBRASKA.

Lorenzo Crounse.

The following members failed to answer to their names:

SAMUEL F. HERSEY, of Maine; FREEMAN CLARKE, of New York; and RICHARD H. WHITELEY, of Georgia.

During the roll-call, when the State of Louisiana was reached—

The CLERK said: In Louisiana there are unchallenged certificates from the third and fifth districts only. In the remaining three districts, and the Representative at large, two conflicting sets of papers have been presented, each certifying the election of a different person, and each purporting to have been issued by a proper State officer. There is no substantial difference in form. The one set of papers purports to have been executed on the 4th of December, 1872, and to have been signed by Governor Warmouth, though not transmitted by him to the Clerk's office. They were received, one of them early in March last, another later in that month, and two of them in the latter part of April, 1873. The other set of papers purports to have been executed on the 30th of December, 1872, and to have been signed by Acting Governor Pinchback, and transmitted by him to the Clerk's office by mail, and received early in January last. The Clerk accordingly enrolls the two unchallenged members, Hon. CHESTER B. DARRALL and FRANK MOREY.

When the State of Indiana was reached—

The CLERK said: In Indiana, the paper issued by the governor respecting the ninth district cannot be accepted as a credential within the meaning of the law, and neither of the claimants is enrolled.

When the State of Arkansas was reached—

The CLERK said: In Arkansas but two valid certificates have been presented.

When the State of West Virginia was reached—

The CLERK said: In West Virginia there is a peculiar complication. There were two elections in 1872, at which Representatives in the Forty-third Congress were voted for, one of them in August, at the time of the adoption of the new State constitution, and the other on the fourth Thursday of October. In the first and second districts different persons were chosen at these elections; in the third district the same person was chosen at both. The proclamation and certificates of the governor reciting these various facts have been filed in the Clerk's office. The certificates of election are issued in the alternative, setting forth the due election of these respective parties, provided the time at which they were chosen was the time prescribed by law for holding the election. The Clerk considers these certificates inadmissible for enrolling either of the claimants in the first and second districts. Assuming that the one or the other of those days was the legal day of election, Mr. HEREFORD, who was chosen at both, would appear to be entitled to be enrolled, notwithstanding the technical defect in each of his certificates, separately considered. He has accordingly been enrolled.

A fresh series of certificates, dated November 22, 1873, and issued under an act of the legislature of that State, dated November 15, 1873, by a new canvassing board specially created for that purpose, and intended to supersede the papers issued by the governor under the then existing law, and which certify in form the due election of the persons who received a majority of the votes at the October election of 1872, have been presented, but appear to the Clerk to be of doubtful validity, and have not been accepted by him as credentials within the meaning of the law.

At the close of the call—

The CLERK said: Two hundred and eighty-one members having answered to their names, being more than a quorum, the Clerk is now ready to receive a motion to proceed to the election of Speaker.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the House do now proceed to the election of Speaker, preparatory to the organization of the House.

Mr. COX. Will it be in order for me to make a motion now to have a name put on the roll?

The CLERK. The Clerk thinks it would not be in order. He has always declined to receive such a motion at this stage.

Mr. COX. I desire to make a motion to have enrolled the name of John E. Neff, as Representative-elect from the ninth congressional district of Indiana.

The CLERK. The Clerk must decline to entertain the motion.

The motion of Mr. MAYNARD was agreed to.

The CLERK. Nominations to the office of Speaker are now in order.

Mr. MAYNARD. I nominate to the office of Speaker of this House for the Forty-third Congress Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, a Representative-elect from the State of Maine.

Mr. NIBLACK. I place in nomination to the office of Speaker the name of Hon. FERNANDO WOOD, a Representative-elect from the State of New York.

Mr. HOLMAN. I place in nomination to the office of Speaker the name of Hon. S. S. COX, a Representative-elect from the State of New York.

Mr. COX. I appreciate the courtesy of my friend from Indiana, in presenting my name; but I beg to say to the House that I do not wish to be placed in the position of a candidate for the office of Speaker. I requested my colleague, Mr. CREAMER, to withdraw my name from the caucus the other night. This was not done, owing to a misadventure; but I am not a candidate for the position.

The CLERK. The Clerk requests that Mr. WHEELER of New York, Mr. MCCRARY of Iowa, Mr. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. ROBINSON, of Illinois act as tellers. The tellers will please take their places.

The House then proceeded to vote viva voce for Speaker, with the following result, which was announced by Mr. WHEELER on behalf of the tellers:

Whole number of votes cast, 269; necessary to a choice, 135; of which—

JAMES G. BLAINE received 189
FERNANDO WOOD received 76
S. S. COX received 2
HIESTER CLYMER received 1
ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS received 1

The following is the vote in detail:

For Mr. Blaine—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Bromberg, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Crocker, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Elliott, Farwell, Field, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Kasson, Kellogg, Kelley, Killinger, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McDougall, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Mellish, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Niles, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Saylor, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Sheats, Sherwood, Shoemaker, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Stanard, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Taylor, Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodford—189.

For Mr. Wood—Messrs. Adams, Atkins, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Barber, Beck, Bell, Barry, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, DeWitt, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Giddings, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hereford, Herndon, Hunton, Kendall, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Magee, Marshall, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Mitchell, Morrison, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Potter, Randall, Rawls, Read, Robbins, W. R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Schumaker, Sloss, Southard, Speer, Standeford, Stephens, Stone, Storm, Swann, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitehead, Whitthorne, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, John D. Young, and P. M. B. Young—76.

For Mr. Cox—Messrs. Holman and Whitehouse—2

For Mr. Stephens—Mr. Bland—1.

For Mr. Clymer—Mr. Creamer—1

The Clerk announced that JAMES G. BLAINE, one of the Representatives from the State of Maine, having received a majority of all the votes given, was duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Forty-third Congress.

At the suggestion of the Clerk, Mr. MAYNARD, of Tennessee, and Mr. WOOD, of New York, conducted Mr. BLAINE to the chair, when he addressed the House as follows:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

The vote this moment announced by the Clerk is such an expression of your confidence as calls for my sincerest thanks. To be chosen Speaker of the American House of Representatives is always an honorable distinction; to be chosen a third time enhances the honor more than threefold; to be chosen by the largest body that ever assembled in the Capitol imposes a burden of responsibility which only your indulgent kindness could embolden me to assume.

The first occupant of this chair presided over a House of sixty-five members representing a population far below the present aggregate of the State of New York. At that time, in the whole United States, there were not fifty thousand civilized inhabitants to be found one hundred miles distant from the flow of the Atlantic tide. To-day, gentlemen, a large majority of you come from beyond that limit, and represent districts then peopled only by the Indian and adventurous frontierman. The National Government is not yet as old as many of its citizens; but in this brief span of time, less than one lengthened life, it has, under God's good providence, extended its power until a continent is the field of its empire and attests the majesty of its law.

With the growth of new States and the resulting changes in the centers of population new interests are developed, rival to the old, but by no means hostile, diverse but not antagonistic. Nay, rather are all these interests in harmony; and the true science of just government is to give to each its full and fair play, oppressing none by undue exaction, favoring none by undue privilege. It is this great lesson which our daily experience is teaching us, binding us together more closely, making our mutual dependence more manifest, and causing us to feel, whether we live in the North or in the South, in the East or in the West, that we have indeed but one "country, one Constitution, one destiny."

Mr. DAWES, being designated by the Clerk as having served longest continuously as a member of the House, administered to the Speaker-elect the oath prescribed by law.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER proceeded to administer to the members in attendance the oath of office, members presenting themselves as their names were called, by States, and taking respectively the "test oath" prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862, or the special oath provided by the act of July 11, 1868, for those who, having participated in the recent rebellion, have had their legal disabilities removed by the vote of two-thirds of each House of Congress.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is the election of a Clerk of the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. The complete organization of the House requires the election of five additional officers—the Clerk, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Doorkeeper, the Postmaster, and the Chaplain. It is very manifest from what we have already seen, that the election of those officers seriatim would consume a great deal of time. I propose, therefore, and I invite the attention of gentlemen on the other side, especially of my distinguished friend from the State of Indiana, (Mr. NIBLACK)—I propose to introduce the resolution which I send to the desk, and which, it will be seen when it is read, contemplates their election by a single vote. An amendment can be offered, and the sense of the House tested.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. Edward McPherson, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, be, and is hereby, elected Clerk of the House of Representatives for the Forty-third Congress; that Nehemiah G. Ordway, of the State of New Hampshire, be, and is hereby, elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives for the Forty-third Congress; that Otis S. Buxton, of the State of New York, be, and is hereby, elected Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives for the Forty-third Congress; that Henry Sherwood, of the State of Michigan, be, and is hereby, elected Postmaster of the House of Representatives for the Forty-third Congress, and that the Rev. J. G. Butler, D. D., of the District of Columbia, be, and is hereby, elected Chaplain of the House of Representatives for the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. NIBLACK. I offer as an amendment that the following names be substituted for those in the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee:

For Clerk—George C. Wedderburn, of Virginia.
For Sergeant-at-Arms—Peter Rupp, of Wisconsin.
For Doorkeeper—Charles W. Combs, of Missouri.
For Chaplain—Rev. R. H. Mahon, of Kentucky.
For Postmaster—Andrew J. Starling, of California.

Mr. MAYNARD. I call for the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The main question having been ordered, the question will be first on the amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. No! No!

Mr. NIBLACK. I join in the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative; yeas 85, nays 178; not voting 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barnum, Beck, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Davis, De Witt, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunton, Jewett, Kendall, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Luttrell, Magee, Marshall, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Mitchell, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Potter, Randall, Rawls, Read, Robbins, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Saylor, Schumaker, Sloss, Southard, Speer, Stephens, Stone, Storm, Swann, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Cotton, Crocker, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Elliott, Farwell, Field, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Kasson, Kellogg, Kelley, Killinger, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McDougall, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Mellish, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Niles, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Saylor, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Sheats, Sherwood, Shoemaker, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Stanard, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Taylor, Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, White, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodford—178.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banning, Bell, Corwin, Crossland, Dobbins, Fort, Knapp, Perry, Ransier, Richmond, Ross, Standeford, Wheeler, Charles G. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodworth—16.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The officers elect then appeared and qualified by taking the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before we pass from this subject I ask, for the benefit of any gentlemen who may not have been in the Hall, that they be allowed to record their votes at the desk.

Mr. DAWES. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the rules do not permit it, and, at all events, it is a practice that ought not to be encouraged.

Mr. MAYNARD. I only made the suggestion because we are making a sort of initiatory record.

ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform that body that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled, and that JAMES G. BLAINE, one of the Representatives from the State of Maine, has been chosen Speaker, and that the House is now ready to proceed to business.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed on the part of the House, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote, by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SWEARING IN OF DELEGATES.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suppose it is now in order that the Delegates be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to call them.

Mr. MERRIAM. Before the Delegate from Utah is sworn in, I have a resolution which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman objects to the swearing in of any Delegate, he will stand aside until those Delegates who are not objected to have been sworn in.

Mr. MERRIAM. I object to the Delegate from Utah being sworn in.

The Delegates-elect from the Territories who were present, with the exception of the Delegate from Utah, then qualified by taking the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862, as follows:

New Mexico.—Stephen B. Elkins.
Washington.—Obadiah B. McFadden.
Colorado.—Jerome B. Chaffee.
Dakota.—Moses K. Armstrong.
Arizona.—Richard C. McCormick.
Idaho.—John Hailey.
Montana.—Martin Maginnis.
Wyoming.—William R. Steele.

DELEGATE FROM UTAH.

Mr. MERRIAM. I offer the following preamble and resolution; upon which I demand the previous question:

Whereas it is alleged that George Q. Cannon, of Utah, has taken oaths inconsistent with citizenship of the United States and with his obligations as Delegate in this House, and has been, and continues to be, guilty of practices in violation and defiance of the laws of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the credentials of said Cannon, and his right to a seat in this House as a Delegate from Utah, be referred to the Committee of Elections, and that said Cannon be not admitted to a seat in this House previous to the report from said committee.

Mr. COX. I call for the reading of the credentials of the Delegate from Utah.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the credentials.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, TERRITORY OF UTAH.

I, George L. Woods, governor of Utah Territory, do hereby certify that at an election held in and for the Territory of Utah, on the 5th day of August, A. D. 1872, for Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, 22,913 votes were cast, of which number George Q. Cannon received 20,969, and Ferry R. Maxwell received 1,942, and that 2 votes were cast for other persons; and that the said George Q. Cannon, having received the greatest number of votes for said office at said election, is by me hereby declared duly elected Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States from the Territory of Utah to the Forty-third Congress.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Territory of Utah to be affixed.

Done at Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, on this the 11th day of October, 1872.

GEORGE L. WOODS,
Governor of said Territory.

By the governor:
GEORGE A. BLACK,
Secretary of said Territory.

Mr. COX. Will my colleague allow me to say a word?

Mr. MERRIAM. Having moved the previous question, I now demand a vote.

Mr. COX. I would like my colleague to yield to me for a moment only.

Mr. MERRIAM. I do not yield.

The question was put on seconding the previous question, and there were ayes 69, noes 74.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. COX. I do not raise any moral questions here. I do not care any thing about Mormonism; but the point is, that this gentleman has a prima-facie right to the seat, and we are setting a precedent that may be dangerous. I know my friend and I should agree in regard to some practices in Utah, but I hope the House will not depart from the regular, established custom, and break down the prima-facie certificate of the governor of the Territory. Let us stand on principle. I move that the Delegate from Utah be sworn in.

Mr. KELLOGG. I would inquire if there is any other certificate or credential from the governor of Utah?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that this is the only credential that has been presented from that Territory.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] allow me a single word?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say to the House that I do not believe that when a man comes here with proper credentials from the proper authority it has ever been the custom of the House, or ever ought to be, that he shall not have prima facie his seat, because the moment we break away from that rule, then in high party times the House could never be organized. That is all that any of us have when we come here. While I do not mean to give any opinion or to intimate any as to the merits of this case, of which I know nothing, yet I will say that here is a case where a man holds from the governor of a Territory the proper credentials, and that Territory is entitled to be represented on this floor until something shall be shown to the House to take away that right. I trust, therefore, that my friend from New York [Mr. MERRIAM] who offered this resolution will withdraw it, and allow Mr. Cannon to be sworn in.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move that the pending resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. NIBLACK. I will do so.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. This precise question came up in the last House in the case of Mr. Clark, of Texas. His credentials were referred to the Committee on Elections, and that committee reported that the only question for the House to consider was, whether Mr. Clark's credentials were regular in form, and whether the officer certifying them was entitled by the law of the State and the usages of the House to give him those credentials. Thereupon the House seated Mr. Clark, though, a few weeks after, the committee reported upon the whole case, and the House decided that Mr. Clark was not entitled to the seat he had been occupying, and gave it to his competitor, Mr. GIDDINGS.

Mr. POTTER. There is no question about certificates presented in this case. As appeared by the very proper inquiry of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] this is the only certificate presented, and the only pretense that anybody has to the seat. The resolution of my colleague [Mr. MERRIAM] goes, by way of objection to this gentleman being sworn in, upon the ground that he is guilty of certain practices contrary to the laws of the United States. Now the difficulty with my colleague's objection is, that the statute has prescribed certain qualifications for the office of Delegate from the Territory, but among those qualifications is not innocency in respect of practices to which my friend alludes.

We had that precise question in the Forty-first Congress, when a gentleman from Virginia was charged with disloyalty and other offenses; and it was agreed, almost without a dissenting voice upon this side of the House, that the House had no power to consider or determine, as a prerequisite to admission, whether or not he had been guilty of those or any other offenses, provided he came here with the constitutional requirements in reference to his qualifications; and provided also he brought prima-facie evidence of a right to a seat, in a certificate from the governor. Were there two certificates here, or any contest about the office, it would then be proper to refer the question to the Committee on Elections. But when there is no question as to who was elected, we cannot now try or even consider the suggestion that this man was guilty of the offenses charged, because that has nothing whatever to do with his right to a seat here.

Mr. MAYNARD. There is another question in connection with this case to which I desire to call attention. It is that this resolution is introduced with a preamble which asserts certain propositions to be facts. We have no evidence to that effect; we have no documents presented; the mover of the resolution has made no statement upon his own authority or otherwise, and it seems to me that it would be very rash for us to assume the truth of those statements, and to act upon them, so far as to prevent the swearing in of this Delegate.

It is in that aspect of the case that I am prevented from making the motion that I first thought of making—to refer this resolution to the Committee on Elections. I think it very unsafe to adopt a resolution, or any other proceeding, in this House reflecting upon a member of the House, unless we first have some ground laid, either by documentary evidence introduced, or by statements made by the gentleman who introduced the proposition upon his own authority and responsibility.

Mr. NIBLACK. I now insist upon my motion, that the pending resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

There being no further objection, Mr. CANNON again presented himself and qualified by taking the oath prescribed by the law of July 2, 1862.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I offer the following resolution, and call the previous question upon it:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House do forthwith place in a box the name of each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives, written upon a separate slip of paper, that he proceed, in the presence of the House, to draw from said box, one at a time, the said slips of paper, and as each is drawn he shall announce the name of the Member or Delegate upon it, who shall choose his seat for the present Congress: Provided, That, before said drawing shall commence, the Speaker shall cause each seat to be vacated, and shall see that every seat continues vacant until it is selected under this order; and that every seat, after having been selected, shall be deemed forfeited, if left unoccupied before the calling of the roll is finished.

The question was upon seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I suggest to the gentleman who has offered this resolution [Mr. SCOFIELD] to make an amendment to it, that has for years past been adopted without dissent; and that is that before the drawing begins the member of this House of longest continuous service, be allowed to select his own seat.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I will allow the amendment to be offered and voted upon.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. As this is the first day of the session, and many members may have supposed the drawing of seats would not take place till to-morrow, will not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] modify his motion so as to allow the drawing to take place in the morning, when everybody will be here?

Mr. SCOFIELD. I will yield to the gentleman to move to amend by inserting in lieu of "forthwith," the words "to-morrow at twelve and a half o'clock p. m.," and take the sense of the House upon it. I think a large majority of the House wish to draw seats to-day and get settled.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that amendment.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I now call the previous question on the resolution and amendments.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS. I hold in my hand a telegraphic dispatch from Mr. FREEMAN CLARKE, of New York, who is ill. I ask unanimous consent that at the time his name is drawn, the doorkeeper of the House be allowed to select a seat for him.

Mr. MAYNARD. I make the same request on behalf of Mr. WHITELEY, of Georgia, who is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. SCOFIELD. As that requires unanimous consent, it can be asked as well after the previous question is seconded as before.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me ask whether all the gentlemen present, and ready to take the oath as members, have been sworn in? I understand that there are three or four gentlemen, in relation to whose seats a motion is almost immediately to be made; hence it would seem something like injustice if the drawing for seats should take place, and then, a few moments afterwards, two or three members be sworn in.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] did not, perhaps, hear the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who has an amendment pending to fix half-past twelve o'clock to-morrow as the time for the drawing. All gentlemen who think as the gentleman from Ohio does can vote for that amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make my suggestion, then, in the way of argument, rather than as a proposition for amendment.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I renew the call for the previous question.

Mr. WOOD. I desire to inquire as to the form in which the vote will be taken if the previous question should be seconded. Will there be a vote upon the proposition to draw for seats now, and a separate vote upon the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER]?

The SPEAKER. The two questions will of course be taken separately. The amendment will be first voted upon, and then the resolution.

Mr. SCOFIELD. If the amendment be voted down——

The SPEAKER. Then the question will recur on the original resolution without amendment.

Mr. COX. I rise to what I consider a question of privilege.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. A question of privilege takes priority of a question of order.

Mr. COX. I wish to make a motion to place the name of a member upon the roll in anticipation of the vote upon this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would not be in order. The rule of the House declares that the drawing for seats is a question of privilege once during each Congress. That question of privilege being now under consideration, the Chair cannot admit another question, even a question of privilege, to conflict with it. The pending question must now be decided.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] to yield for another amendment to his resolution.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent, as two amendments are already pending.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to state, for the information of the House, the amendment I wish to offer. It has been the custom (and I believe no objection will be made to it to-day) to permit the member oldest in consecutive service to select his seat before the drawing commences.

Mr. MAYNARD. An amendment to that effect is now pending.

Mr. PLATT. I understand that; but I wish to say that there is another member of the House who, though not oldest in consecutive service, is, perhaps, as old in service as any other member, and who certainly, by reason of age and infirmity, is entitled to consideration on the part of the House. I move, therefore, that the privilege of selecting a seat, before the drawing commences, be accorded to the honorable gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS.]

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. SCOFIELD. As an amendment, that proposition is not in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order; but the proposition can be submitted afterward as a matter of consent. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question upon the resolution and pending amendments.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I hold in my hand a resolution providing for presenting the credentials, and the swearing in, of certain members-elect. Is not this a question of higher privilege than drawing for seats?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, because the pending resolution relates to the convenience of members who actually constitute the House, the object being to facilitate the transaction of business as regards all questions, including that suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The pending resolution being privileged but once during the Congress, the Chair cannot allow another privileged question to conflict with it while it is actually before the House. Were a contrary practice adopted, then, so long as any contested-election case or any other question of privilege remained undecided by the House, the drawing for seats might be prevented.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] that the member oldest in continuous service [Mr. DAWES] be allowed to select a seat before the drawing begins.

The amendment was agreed to unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The next question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER], that the drawing, instead of taking place forthwith, be fixed for to-morrow at half-past twelve o'clock.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurring on agreeing to the resolution, as amended, it was adopted.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] now asks unanimous consent that the honorable gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] shall have the right to select a seat regardless of the drawing.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. As the gentleman from Georgia has left the hall for the day I modify my request, and ask that the Doorkeeper be authorized to select a seat for Mr. STEPHENS, placing a page in the same before the drawing begins.

Mr. KELLEY. I suggest that the gentleman from Georgia be permitted to occupy permanently the seat which he has occupied this morning so long as he has been able to remain here, and which is evidently the seat of his choice; I mean the front seat at the corner of the center aisle.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the order suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS. I hold in my hand a dispatch from my colleague, Hon. FREEMAN CLARKE, stating that he is ill and consequently unable to leave his home. I ask unanimous consent that when Mr. CLARKE'S name shall be called the Doorkeeper may select a seat for him.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I make the same request in behalf of my colleague Mr. HERSEY, who is also sick at home.

The SPEAKER. All requests for unanimous consent should be submitted separately. The first question is upon granting, by unanimous consent, the privilege asked on behalf of Mr. CLARKE.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to granting the request made in behalf of Mr. HERSEY?

Objection was made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I wish to make a similar request in behalf of the Delegate from the District of Columbia, [Mr. CHIPMAN,] who has been sick for some weeks.

Mr. COX. I was about to submit the same request.

Objection was made.

The members and delegates then, in accordance with the resolution adopted, retired beyond the outer row of seats, and as their names were drawn and called came forward and selected their seats, the first name called being that of Mr. WILLIAM S. HERNDON, and the last that of Mr. HORACE H. HARRISON.

INDIANA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. McCRARY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, and move the adoption of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the credentials and papers on file in the Clerk's office concerning the election of a Representative in this House from the ninth congressional district of Indiana be referred to the Committee of Elections, when appointed, with instructions to report at an early day.

Mr. McCRARY. I ask for the reading of the credentials referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF INDIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

I, Conrad Baker, governor of the State of Indiana, do hereby certify that it appears by the records in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Indiana, as certified to me by that officer, that at the general election held on the 8th day of October, A. D. 1872, in the several election precincts in the counties composing the ninth congressional district of Indiana, John E. Neff and John P. C. Shanks were opposing candidates, and the only candidates for the office of Representative in the Congress of the United States for the said ninth congressional district of said State of Indiana, and by the certificates of the clerks of the several circuit courts of the several counties composing said ninth congressional district now on file in the office of said secretary of state, it is certified that the said John E. Neff received for the office of Representative in the Congress of the United States votes at said election in all of said counties, amounting in the aggregate to the number of seventeen thousand and eighty-two votes, (17,082,) and by the same certificates it is also further certified that the said John P. C. Shanks received at said election for the same office, in all of said counties, votes amounting in the aggregate to the number of seventeen thousand and sixty-eight votes, (17,068;) the said certificates thus certifying or showing that the said John E. Neff received fourteen (14) votes more for said office than were received for the said John P. C. Shanks.

Now, if, in the judgment of the House of Representatives of the United States, the said certificates of election of the said clerks of the several circuit courts of the several counties of the said ninth congressional district of Indiana shall be conclusive evidence of the facts therein stated, so as to preclude either the secretary of state or the governor of Indiana from making inquiry into the truth thereof, then, and in that case, I desire that this instrument shall be considered and taken to be a certificate of the election of the said John E. Neff to the said office of representative in the Congress of the United States for the said ninth congressional district of Indiana, but, on the contrary, if, in the judgment of the House of Representatives of the United States, the said certificates of election of the said clerks of the several circuit courts of the several counties of the said ninth congressional district of Indiana shall not be conclusive evidence of the facts therein stated, so as to preclude the secretary of state or the governor of Indiana from making inquiry into the truth thereof, then, and in that case, I desire that this instrument shall be considered or taken to be a certificate of the election of the said John P. C. Shanks to the same office, I being abundantly satisfied that the said John P. C. Shanks, in point of fact, received, in the several counties of the ninth congressional district of Indiana, votes at said election for said office amounting in the aggregate to the number of seventeen thousand one hundred and fifteen (17,115) votes, instead of seventeen thousand and sixty-eight (17,068) votes, as is certified by the said clerks' certificates; that the evidence upon which I base this conclusion consists of an affidavit of the inspector, judges, and clerks of the election held on the day aforesaid, in and for the township of Wabash, in the county of Adams, in the ninth congressional district aforesaid, in which said officers state that forty-seven (47) ballots were voted at said precinct at said election, which, after having been received and placed in the ballot-box, upon the counting out of the votes, were rejected, and not counted in the returns of said election, for the reason that said ballots were headed on the top of the face thereof with the words "Republican ticket," and that the forty-seven ballots thus rejected, in counting out the vote cast at said precinct at said election, contained printed upon the face of all of said ballots, "For Representative in Congress, 9th District, John P. C. Shanks." There can be no doubt that the rejection of these forty-seven ballots, because they were headed on the inside or face thereof with the words "Republican ticket," was an unauthorized and illegal act, on the part of the election board for said township. The affidavit above-mentioned is filed in the office of the secretary of state, of the State of Indiana, and a copy thereof is certified to me by that officer in connection with his, certifying to me the result of said election, as shown by the clerks' certificates aforesaid. I, therefore, make this certificate in duplicate, delivering one of the duplicates to the said John E. Neff, and the other to the said John P. C. Shanks, to the end that the House of Representatives may draw its own conclusions as to the rights of the parties from the facts, instead of seeking to control its action by any conclusions of my own.

In witness of all which I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the seal of the State of Indiana to be affixed at Indianapolis this 12th day of November, A. D., 1872.

[SEAL.] CONRAD BAKER.

By the governor:

JOHN H. FARQUHAR,
Secretary of State.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to make an amendment which is in the nature of a privileged question?

Mr. McCRARY. I will yield to hear what it is.

Mr. COX. It is a question of privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the roll of the members of the Forty-third Congress be amended by the addition of the name of John E. Neff, as the representative of the ninth congressional district of Indiana, and that the said John E. Neff be called and admitted as the sitting member, prima facie, entitled to represent said district.

Mr. McCRARY. I cannot admit that.

Mr. COX. Would I have the right, as a privileged question, to offer my resolution?

The SPEAKER. This presents the same privileged question, but only one phase of it. Should the House not agree to the resolution the gentleman from New York will then have a right to offer the resolution which has been read.

Mr. COX. I hope the House will allow me to make a statement about this case—only a short statement.

Mr. McCRARY. I think the certificate which has been read is very full.

Mr. COX. The certificate is an ambiguity.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa declines to yield.

Mr. COX. The resolution does not decide anything.

Mr. McCRARY. I demand the previous question.

Mr. COX. I beg the courtesy of the gentleman from Iowa to state that I think it is due to the sitting member whose seat is being contested here—to Mr. Neff, whose seat is being contested by Mr. Shanks—that we should have a statement of all of the facts in the case before a vote is taken.

Mr. McCRARY. I decline to yield.

The House divided, and there were ayes 128, noes 74.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. COX. I do not wish to make any dilatory motions; I do not wish to move to adjourn; but Mr. NEFF, who is, or ought to be, the sitting member here, has the prima-facie case, and should first be admitted to his seat.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the adoption of the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCRARY.]

Mr. COX. It should not go to the Committee on Elections.

The House divided, and there were ayes 141, noes 77.

Mr. COX demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ARCHER. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the papers which I hold in my hand, so that when the House comes to vote on this question to-morrow morning, it will do so intelligently.

Mr. McCRARY. I do not object to any papers being referred to the Committee on Elections, but I do object to their being ordered to be printed.

The question recurred on the motion to adjourn, and there were ayes 87, noes 122.

Mr. ARCHER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative; yeas 80, nays 163, not voting 37, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Beck, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, De Witt, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Elliott, Giddings, Glover, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, John B. Hawley, Herndon, Holman, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Luttrell, Magee, Marshall, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Mitchell, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, Parker, Potter, Randall, Read, Robbins, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Milton Saylor, Schumaker, Sener, Sloss, Small, Speer, Standeford, Storm, Swann, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolf, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Bromberg, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Cotton, Crocker, Cooke, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Field, Fort, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Havens, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kasson, Kellogg, Kelley, Kendall, Lamport, Lansing, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McDougall, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Mellish, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Niles, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pendleton, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Putnam, Rainey, Ransier, Ray, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Saylor, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Sherwood, Shoemaker, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Sprague, Stanard, Starkweather, St. John, Stone, Stowell, Strait, Thomas Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Woodford, and Woodworth—163.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Bell, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Cannon, Corwin, Creamer, Crounse, Farwell, Freeman, Hamilton, Hays, Hereford, Hunton, Jewett, Killinger, Lawrence, Nunn, O'Brien, Page, Pelham, Perry, Poland, Rapier, Rawls, Rice, Ross, Henry J. Scudder, Sheats, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Stephens, Strawbridge, Taylor, Thornburgh, Jasper D. Ward, and James Wilson—37.

So the house refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCRARY,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 176, nays 69, not voting 34; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Biery, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Buffington, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Cotton, Crocker, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Elliot, Farwell, Field, Fort, Foster, Frye, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kasson, Kellogg, Kelley, Lamar, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McDougall, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Niles, Orr, Crih, Packard, Packer, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Potter, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rice, Richmond, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Saylor, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Sherwood, Shoemaker, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Taylor, Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Vance, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodford—176.

NAYS.—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barnum, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Crossland, De Witt, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Jewett, Kendall, Knapp, Lamison, Luttrell, Magee, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Mitchell, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Randall, Read, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Milton Saylor, Sloss, Southard, Speer, Standeford, Stone, Storm, Swann, Waddell, Whitthorne, Willie, Wolfe, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—69.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Begole, Bowen, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Clinton L. Cobb, Corwin, Creamer, Crittenden, Curtis, Freeman, Garfield, Hyde, Killinger, Marshall, Mellish, Nunn, O'Neill, Page, Perry, Ransier, Rapier, Rawls, Ray, Schumaker, Henry W. Scudder, Sheats, J. Ambler Smith, Stanard, Stephens, Wilber, George Willard, Ephraim K. Wilson, and Woodworth—34.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McCRARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER announced as the committee appointed by resolution of the House to wait on the President, Mr. GARFIELD of Ohio, Mr. E. R. HOAR of Massachusetts, and Mr. COX of New York.

INDIANA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. COX. I desire to have certain papers in my possession, relating to the contested election for the ninth district of Indiana, sent to the Committtee of Elections, along with the credentials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

LOUISIANA ELECTIONS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That J. H. Sypher of the first district of Louisiana, L. A. Sheldon of the second district, and P. B. S. Pinchback, Representative at large of the said State, having the prima-facie evidence of the right to seats in this House, be admitted to take the oath, respectively.

I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

SALARIES INCREASE.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I wish to give notice that I will to-morrow introduce, and push to a speedy issue, a bill to repeal the increase of certain salaries, and to return the undrawn balances into the Treasury.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. STARKWEATHER: The petition of Hon. C. F. Cleveland, Daniel P. Tyler, and other citizens of Windham County, Connecticut, asking that pensions be granted to all the soldiers of the war of 1812, without regard to length of service.

By Mr. MOREY: The petition of Edward H. Wilson, of New Orleans, Louisiana, for relief.

Also, the petition of Samuel Jamison, of New Orleans, Louisiana, for relief.

Also, the petition of A. J. Sypher, of Louisiana, for relief.

Also, the petition of James Rainey, D. F. Boulin, M. B. Brady, and E. Sachet de St. Isle, of New Orleans, Louisiana, for relief.

Also, the petition of Henry Ware, of Louisiana, for relief.

By Mr. HANCOCK: The petition of Josiah R. Sypher, of Louisiana, for relief.

Also, the petition of W. H. Hooper, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for relief.

Also, the petition of Joseph Clymer, of Texas, for relief.

Also, the petition of John P. Kelsey, of Camargo, Texas, for relief.

Also, the petition of W. A. Sayler, of Texas, for relief.

Also, the petition of Mary E. Purnell, of Jefferson, Texas, for relief.

Also, the petition of James Glover, of Pennsylvania, for relief.

Also, the petition of the administratrix of Christian B. Morrison, of New York City, for relief.

By Mr. WALLS: The petition of Susan P. Vance, of Indiana, for relief.

Also, the petition of John Randolph, administrator of S. A. R. Lord, for relief.

Also, the petition of Alfred H. Brooks, of New Jersey, for relief.

Also, the petition of John Milton Best, of Paducah, Kenucky, for relief.

Also, the petition of Peter Nodine, of West Virginia, for relief.

Also, the petition of J. C. Lewis, of Washington, D. C., for relief.

Also, the petition of John Randolph, administrator of Sarah R. Lord, deceased, for relief.

Also, the petition of Williams H. Akins and Jacob D. Felthousen, for relief.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

By Mr. HALE, of Maine: A bill to repeal the increase of salaries and to cover undrawn and returned balances into the Treasury.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 2, 1873.

Prayer by Rev. E. D. OWEN, of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Hon. THOMAS J. ROBERTSON, of South Carolina, Hon. JOHN B. GORDON, of Georgia, and Hon. PHINEAS W. HITCHCOCK, of Nebraska, appeared in their seats to-day.

ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Edward McPherson, its Clerk, as follows:

Mr. President, I have been directed to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled; that the House has elected Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, one of the Representatives from the State of Maine, Speaker, and is now ready to proceed to business.

Also, that the House has passed a resolution directing the appointment of a committee on the part of the House to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make, and has appointed Mr. JAMES A. GARFIELD of Ohio, Mr. E. ROCKWOOD HOAR of Massachusetts, and Mr. S. S. COX of New York, the committee on the part of the House.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in obedience to law, an inventory of all the property belonging to the United States in the buildings, rooms, offices, and grounds occupied by that Department and under its charge; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of March 26, 1873, a report relative to the pneumatic tube from the Capitol to the Government Printing-Office; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a statement of the clerk of the Court of Claims, in compliance with section 9 of the act entitled "An act to provide for appeals from the Court of Claims, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1868, of all judgments rendered by that court for the year ending December 1, 1873; the amounts thereof; the parties in whose favor rendered; and a brief synopsis of the nature of the claims upon which the judgments have been rendered; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

SUPPLEMENTARY CIVIL RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, if the Senate has no business before it, I think it cannot do better than to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1, the bill supplementary to the civil rights act. It is a well known bill, and I do not see how it will require any debate. I think its reading will be enough. Its terms are expressive; the bill proves itself. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] yesterday expressed an interest in this bill, and an earnest desire that it should be referred to a committee. I sympathize with the feeling of the Senator from Vermont, that the bill should be so referred; and especially at this time is there a reason why the bill should be referred, because the constitutional question which was prominent in the former debate on this bill has been submitted to the consideration of the Supreme Court of the United States, and their decision promulgated since the Senate last met. Certainly, after a decision of that court, we ought not to proceed hastily to pass a bill involving the very questions which the court has considered, without a reference of those questions to our own appropriate committee.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, this bill has been before a committee. What the committee did in the way of consideration, I know not; I had not the honor of being a member of it. But it was afterward, as all know, completely, most thoroughly, considered and canvassed in this Chamber. Never in the history of our legislation was any bill more considered; never has any bill been more minutely matured. Why, then, refer it to a committee? I do not say that Senators propose delay, but it is obvious that such a reference will cause delay.

Now, sir, I am against delay in the enactment of this measure. It should pass promptly. It is a great act of justice, to which, as I understand, the political parties of the country, in solemn convention, are pledged. Why, then, wait? Why charge a committee with this burden? Why continue on the country the burden of the injustice which this bill proposes to relieve?

We are reminded of a recent decision of the Supreme Court. I have yet to learn how that decision has any practical bearing on the present bill. I do not believe that it touches it; but I confess that I do not know to what decision he refers. Why, then, interpose this delay? Why not go forward promptly, swiftly, according to the merits of this measure and give it, like a benediction, to the land? Here are our colored fellow-citizens, many millions strong, all of whom have votes, and they every one unite in asking it. Your table has literally groaned under petitions presented from month to month, from year to year; and unless the bill is speedily passed, I predict that it will groan again with similar petitions, and justly, for our colored fellow-citizens ought to exercise that great right of petition in favor of this measure until it is finally adopted.

I am sorry that the suggestion has been made. I had hoped that there would be nothing but welcome and consideration for a measure so truly beneficent, and which is absolutely needed to crown and complete the great work of reconstruction.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. The Senator from Massachusetts, with some significance, reminds us that our colored fellow-citizens have votes. If they have also that intelligence which an American citizen entitled to vote ought to have, they will not be willing that a measure whose consonance with the Constitution of the United States is gravely doubted, whose constitutionality in principle has been by the Supreme Court of the United States substantially decided against, shall become a part of the law of this land, when other remedies in entire accord with the Constitution have been provided and may be provided to secure them in all their rights.

The Senator from Massachusetts and many Senators know that from the outset I have opposed this bill. It is easy to charge upon those of us who stand in that position hostility to human rights, and therefore attempt, by casting opprobrium on us, to invalidate our arguments; but the ground upon which I stand is simply the Constitution of the United States, as it is. We have been long enough setting aside that sacred instrument upon every occasion of mere expediency, upon every occasion of fancied wrong, nay, even upon every occasion of real wrongs. Remedy the wrongs of our people wherever they exist in conformity with, not in violation of, the Constitution of the United States. It is because this bill, which has been discussed here at two sessions upon grave constitutional questions, has, in its principle, been considered by the Supreme Court of the United States——

Mr. SUMNER. When, and on what occasion?

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. In the New Orleans slaughter-house cases; and I have read in the newspapers of the country during the recent vacation what purported to be the opinion of the Supreme Court; and if the paper which I read was the opinion of the Supreme Court, that court, by a majority, holds in principle that the bill which the Senator has presented is a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

But, sir, that is not all. We have here in the Senate, since the last discussion of this bill, a large number of new Senators, who have not participated in that discussion at all; who have heard no report of a committee upon it; who are unaware of the fact—which I believe to be a fact—that the Judiciary Committee of this body reported against the bill which the Senator presents, and asks us now to pass in hot haste, without a reference to any committee at all. And, sir, in common courtesy to a Senator, who here yesterday asked that this bill might not be pressed upon the consideration of the Senate now, and who is himself the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and happens at this time to be out of his seat, I think the Senator from Massachusetts ought to consent that the matter should lie over, at any rate until that Senator is in his place.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I would not fail in any courtesy to any Senator, especially in any courtesy to the Senator from Vermont, for whom I have all kindness and honor; but I think Senators will agree that nothing passed yesterday between us by which I am in any way constrained, so that I may not ask the Senate to proceed at once with this bill. If I could see the question as my friend from Connecticut sees it, he may be assured that I should not press the bill. I do not see it so; but I do see that this bill is now on our table numbered one. It is the first bill of the calendar. I see also that at this time the Senate has no business before it, and should I not fail in duty if I did not ask the Senate to proceed during this unoccupied time with a bill which I regard as so important, and which is actually the first in order, being foremost among all bills?

But my friend from Connecticut reminds me of a recent decision of the Supreme Court. For that court I have great respect. Personal and professional familiarity with the court, and study of its judgments running now for much more than a generation, incline me always to deference when its decisions are mentioned; but if I understood my friend he relies upon a newspaper report. Sir, I have read the judgment of that court, communicated to me by one of its members in an official copy, and I have no hesitation in saying that the Senator is entirely mistaken if he supposes that by a hair's breadth it interferes with the constitutionality of the bill which I now move.

Sir, there is no such lion in our path. It exists only in the imagination of my friend, or in the desire, which he has so often manifested, to interfere with the adoption of this measure. But the Senator is mistaken if he supposes that I charge upon him any indifference to human rights. Never, in any debate, has any word fallen from me which that Senator can so misinterpret. I know too well his heart, his excellent and abounding nature, his New England home, to attribute to him any such indifference. But I do know full well, for the Senator has often declared it, that he acts under interpretations of the Constitution which it seems to me belong to the period anterior to the war rather than since the war. It seems to me—I may be mistaken, but I cannot help saying it—that the Senator has not yet recognized that greatest of all victories by which a new interpretation is fixed upon the national Constitution, so that hereafter all its sentences, all its phrases, all its words, shall be interpreted broadly and emphatically for human rights. How often have I been obliged to say this? But the Senator forgets that victory. There is his error. Most sincerely, most ardently, do I trust that the Senate will never forget it; I hope we shall duly act upon it, and celebrate it in our acts.

Sir, I have been betrayed into these remarks simply by way of answer to what has been said by my friend. I had hoped that this bill might be proceeded with without debate. I had trusted that this benign measure was so clear and refulgent with justice that no Senator would rise in his place to oppose it. I had indulged the longing that those especially in favor of amnesty for all would adopt that other greater and more comprehensive principle of justice for all. Strange, sir, that the sensibilities of so many are aroused in favor of amnesty, and yet those same Senators are so dull when the rights of men are presented. I, sir, am anxious to see universal amnesty, but with it must be asserted also universal justice. Our colored fellow-citizens must be admitted to complete equality before the law. In other words, everywhere, in everything regulated by law, they must be equal with all their fellow-citizens. There is the simple principle on which this bill stands. Who can impugn it? Who can throw upon it the shadow of question? Sir, if the Constitution of the United States does not sanction a bill like this, then forthwith should we proceed to amend that Constitution, and make it more worthy of our regard. Much as has been done, this bill must also be added to the trophies of congressional action; this bill must be enumerated among the great results of our recent legislation. Terrible war will have been, then, a beneficent parent.

I hope, sir, there can be no question on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, what is the question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On taking up bill number one.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. For consideration?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hardly suppose that the Senator from Massachusetts expects the Senate to do any such thing. This bill has not been read; it was introduced yesterday, and no Senator can know better than the Senator from Massachusetts that he moves this bill under circumstances not calculated to challenge the good will of the Senate at the present time; in other words, to express myself differently, under circumstances not at all calculated to a reasonable consideration of any proposition.

Sir, if this bill had no history at all in the Senate, and if some of us here had no recollections upon it; if it were a new-comer even, introduced by the honorable Senator from Massachusets with all the fervor and zeal that he puts into this subject, we should hesitate still, because it relates to a great question of civil rights. That the honorable Senator from Massachusetts is satisfied with this bill as it is, and would take it as it is, and would have the Senate adopt it now as it is, we can understand, because heretofore many times he has so declared. He has declared his entire confidence in it and his belief that it is justified by the Constitution of the United States and demanded as an act of public justice. There is no doubt as to how he feels on that subject; but the misfortune, after all, is that the Senate has never agreed with him upon that subject. He has pressed it, I do not say "in season and out of season," in the beginning, the middle, and the end; but he has pressed it with great zeal and always with great ability; and still he has never got a recognition of the bill, either from the committee or the Senate. So far as the action of the Senate has been concerned, on the floor of the Senate or in committee, it has been against the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. Allow me to remind my friend that it has been adopted by the Senate several times, once by the casting vote of the Vice-President.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Never—not this bill.

Mr. SUMNER. Substantially this bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Not this bill by any means, with great respect to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, but an altogether different proposition; and I venture to say that the honorable Senator never will get the recognition of the Senate of the United States to this particular bill. Never will he succeed in getting the indorsement of the legal organ of this body that this bill is within a long range of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

The misfortune has been from the beginning, the honorable Senator will allow me to say, that this bill has not been presented to us under circumstances and at a time when fair deliberation could have been had upon it. It was presented at a time and under circumstances, originally, when men were forced into false positions, in a certain sense, upon this bill. A bill that had been to a committee and failed to get its recognition, in any other sense than that of hostility to it, was made to be a rider on a bill which required a different principle, which required a two-thirds vote to pass it.

Now, I submit, Mr. President, that that honorable Senator under these circumstances, and particularly after what fell yesterday from the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, who is now absent, brings this bill again before the Senate under circumstances exceedingly inopportune. That Senator, I cannot believe, expects the action of the Senate now. Why the necessity of presenting it out of order or out of the ordinary course of legislation? Why not allow the committees to be organized? Why not allow this particular bill to take its course? Why not allow it to come up under circumstances when Senators will have an opportunity of examining it without prejudice? Why allow us to stand here in the morning, before our committees are organized, and be put before the country as making objection to a measure of civil rights? For myself, when this question of civil rights arises, whether on this bill or any other, I hope to be able to justify myself before the Senate in reference to any course that I shall take in regard to it; but what I rise to object to is that the honorable Senator should undertake to force this bill or bring it up at all under circumstances when it is impossible for Senators to act upon it with deliberation and reasonable consideration.

Is it in order to move to lay this motion on the table?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will not make the motion. I think there is a doubt about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on taking up for consideration Senate bill No. 1. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HAMLIN. The motion is to postpone all prior orders, is it not? Then the motion to take up the bill will be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are no prior orders.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is the morning business. The first motion should be to postpone the prior orders, which is the morning business, by the rules of the Senate, and then the motion to take up would be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Petitions and bills were called for, and no responses were made; and the Chair understands that there are no prior orders.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I was not aware that the order of bills had been called. I have a bill that I wish to present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Bills were called for, and none being presented, the Senator from Massachusetts moved to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I do not desire to interrupt the subject before the Senate; but at the proper time I shall ask leave to present a bill, with the consent of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to take up Senate bill No. 1 for consideration.

The motion was not agreed to.

RETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DENNIS presented the petition of M. C. Mordecai & Co., praying compensation for mail service; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of Capt. Louis C. Sartori, praying to be appointed a commodore on the active list of the United States Navy; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented the memorial of the Walnut Grove Gold Mining Company, praying to be reimbursed for losses sustained through Indian depredations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 26) in relation to mineral lands; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 27) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 28) to set apart a certain portion of the island of Mackinaw and the straits of Mackinaw, within the State of Michigan, as a national park, which was read twice by its title, and ordered to be laid on the table and be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 29) to authorize the Secretary of War to ascertain the amount of expense incurred by the territorial authorities of Dakota for arms, equipments, military stores, supplies, and all other expenses of the volunteer forces of the Indian war of 1862; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 30) to provide for free banking, to secure an elastic currency, to appreciate national obligations, and to reach specie payments without commercial embarrassment; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 31) for the relief of Capt. Louis C. Sartori, of the Navy; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to say that accompanying the bill is a long record which it is unnecessary to print. I move that the bill be printed and lie on the table, to be referred, with the record accompanying the bill, to the Committee on Naval Affairs when appointed.

The motion to print was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 32) obviating the necessity of issuing patents for certain private land-claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ALCORN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 33) granting the right of way to the Birmingham and Saint Louis Railroad Company through the public domain, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ALCORN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 34) to extend the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of debts due from southern railroads, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 35) granting aid to the Atlantic and Great Western Canal Company; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 36) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce internal taxation," and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved July 13, 1866; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 37) for the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of Indian depredations; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No 38) to vest the power of establishing post-roads in the Postmaster-General; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 39) to amend an act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department;" which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

COST OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate as to the amount expended by the United States for the various public works of the Government in each State and Territory of the Union from June 30, 1865, to June 30, 1873, together with the expenditures of the United States in aid of the construction of canals, railroads, and wagon-roads from 1789 to 1873.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate what efforts have been made by him to take possession of the Louisville and Portland Canal, and all correspondence with the trustees of that canal.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. ANTHONY, (at twelve o'clock and fifty-six minutes p. m.) Mr. President, the committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses of Congress were organized for business and were ready to receive any communication he might have to make to them, have performed that duty; and the President replied that he would communicate to the two Houses immediately in writing.

At one o'clock and five minutes p. m. the President's secretary, Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, appeared below the bar, and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CARPENTER in the chair.) The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary of the Senate, Hon. GEORGE C. GORHAM, read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The year that has passed since the submission of my last message to Congress has, especially during the latter part of it, been an eventful one to the country. In the midst of great national prosperity a financial crisis has occured that has brought low fortunes of gigantic proportions; political partisanship has almost ceased to exist, especially in the agricultural regions, and finally the capture upon the high seas of a vessel bearing our flag has for a time threatened the most serious consequences, and has agitated the public mind from one end of the country to the other. But this, happily, now is in the course of satisfactory adjustment, honorable to both nations concerned.

The relations of the United States, however, with most of the other powers continue to be friendly and cordial. With France, Germany, Russia, Italy, and the minor European powers; with Brazil and most of the South American republics; and with Japan, nothing has occurred during the year to demand special notice. The correspondence between the Department of State and various diplomatic representatives in or from those countries is transmitted herewith.

In executing the will of Congress, as expressed in its joint resolution of the 14th of February last, and in accordance with the provisions of the resolution a number of "practical artizans," of "scientific men," and of "honorary commissioners" were authorized to attend the Exposition at Vienna as commissioners on the part of the United States. It is believed that we have obtained the object which Congress had in view when it passed the joint resolution "in order to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the international exhibition of the products of agriculture, manufactures, and the fine arts to be held at Vienna." I take pleasure in adding that the American exhibitors have received a gratifying number of diplomas and of medals.

During the Exposition a conference was held at Vienna for the purpose of consultation on the systems prevailing in different countries for the protection of inventions. I authorized a representative from the Patent-Office to be present at Vienna at the time when this conference was to take place, in order to aid, as far as he might, in securing any possible additional protection to American inventors in Europe. The report of this agent will be laid before Congress.

It is my pleasant duty to announce to Congress that the Emperor of China, on obtaining his majority, received the diplomatic representatives of the Western powers in person. An account of these ceremonies, and of the interesting discussions which preceded them, will be found in the documents transmitted herewith.

The accompanying papers show that some advance, although slight, has been made during the past year towards the suppression of the infamous Chinese coolie trade. I recommend Congress to inquire whether additional legislation be not needed on this subject.

The money awarded to the United States by the tribunal of arbitration at Geneva, was paid by Her Majesty's Government a few days in advance of the time when it would have become payable according to the terms of the treaty. In compliance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1873, it was at once paid into the Treasury, and used to redeem, so far as it might, the public debt of the United States; and the amount so redeemed was invested in a 5 per cent. registered bond of the United States for $15,500,000, which is now held by the Secretary of State, subject to the future disposition of Congress.

I renew my recommendation made at the opening of the last session of Congress, that a commission be created for the purpose of auditing and determining the amounts of the several "direct losses growing out of the destruction of vessels and their cargoes" by the Alabama, the Florida, or the Shenandoah, after leaving Melbourne, for which the sufferers have received no equivalent or compensation, and of ascertaining the names of the persons entitled to receive compensation for the same, making the computations upon the basis indicated by the tribunal of arbitration at Geneva; and that payment of such losses be authorized to an extent not to exceed the awards of the tribunal at Geneva.

By an act approved on the 14th day of February last Congress made provision for completing, jointly with an officer or commissioner to be named by Her Britannic Majesty, the determination of so much of the boundary line between the territory of the United States and the possessions of Great Britain as was left uncompleted by the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress of August 11, 1856. Under the provisions of this act the northwest water-boundary of the United States has been determined and marked in accordance with the award of the Emperor of Germany. A protocol, and a copy of the map upon which the line was thus marked, are contained in the papers submitted herewith.

I also transmit a copy of the report of the commissioner for marking the northern boundary between the United States and the British possessions west of the Lake of the Woods, of the operations of the commission during the past season. Surveys have been made to a point 497 miles west of the Lake of the Woods, leaving about 350 miles to be surveyed, the field-work of which can be completed during the next season.

The mixed commission, organized under the provisions of the treaty of Washington, for settling and determining the claims of citizens of either power against the other, arising out of acts committed against their persons or property during the period between April 13, 1861, and April 9, 1865, made its final award on the 25th day of September last. It was awarded that the Government of the United States should pay to the government of Her Britannic Majesty, within twelve months from the date of the award, the sum of $1,929,819, in gold. The commission disallowed or dismissed all other claims of British subjects against the United States. The amount of the claims presented by the British government, but disallowed or dismissed, is understood to be about $93,000,000. It also disallowed all the claims of citizens of the United States against Great Britain which were referred to it.

I recommend the early passage of an act appropriating the amount necessary to pay this award against the United States.

I have caused to be communicated to the government of the King of Italy the thanks of this Government for the eminent services rendered by Count Corti, as the third commissioner on this commission. With dignity, learning, and impartiality he discharged duties requiring great labor and constant patience to the satisfaction, I believe, of both governments. I recommend legislation to create a special court to consist of three judges who shall be empowered to hear and determine all claims of aliens upon the United States arising out of acts committed against their persons or property during the insurrection. The recent reference under the treaty of Washington was confined to claims of British subjects, arising during the period named in the treaty; but it is understood that there are other British claims of a similar nature, arising after the 9th of April, 1865, and it is known that other claims of a like nature are advanced by citizens or subjects of other powers. It is desirable to have these claims also examined and disposed of.

Official information being received from the Dutch government of a state of war between the King of the Netherlands and the Sultan of Acheen, the officers of the United States who were near the seat of the war were instructed to observe an impartial neutrality. It is believed that they have done so.

The joint commission under the convention with Mexico of 1868 having again been legally prolonged, has resumed its business, which, it is hoped, may be brought to an early conclusion.

The distinguished representative of Her Britannic Majesty at Washington has kindly consented, with the approval of his government, to assume the arduous and responsible duties of umpire in this commission, and lend the weight of his character and name to such decisions as may not receive the acquiescence of both the arbitrators appointed by the respective governments.

The commissioners appointed pursuant to the authority of Congress to examine into the nature and extent of the forays by trespassers from that country upon the herds of Texas, have made a report, which will be submitted for your consideration.

The Venezuelan government has been apprised of the sense of Congress in regard to the awards of the joint commission under the convention of 25th April, 1866, as expressed in the act of the 25th of February last.

It is apprehended that that government does not realize the character of its obligations under that convention. As there is reason to believe, however, that its hesitancy in recognizing them springs, in part at least, from real difficulty in discharging them in connection with its obligations to other governments, the expediency of further forbearance on our part is believed to be worthy of your consideration.

The Ottoman government and that of Egypt have latterly shown a disposition to relieve foreign consuls of the judicial powers which heretofore they have exercised in the Turkish dominions, by organizing other tribunals. As Congress, however, has by law provided for the discharge of judicial functions by consuls of the United States in that quarter under the treaty of 1830, I have not felt at liberty formally to accept the proposed change without the assent of Congress, whose decision upon the subject, at as early a period as may be convenient, is earnestly requested.

I transmit herewith, for the consideration and determination of Congress, an application of the Republic of Santo Domingo to this government to exercise a protectorate over that republic.

Since the adjournment of Congress the following treaties with foreign powers have been proclaimed: A naturalization convention with Denmark; a convention with Mexico for renewing the claim commission; a convention of friendship, commerce, and extradition with the Orange Free State, and a naturalization convention with Ecuador.

I renew the recommendation made in my message of December, 1870, that Congress authorize the Postmaster-General to issue all commissions to officials appointed through his Department.

I invite the earnest attention of Congress to the existing laws of the United States respecting expatriation, and the election of nationality by individuals.

Many citizens of the United States reside permanently abroad with their families. Under the provisions of the act approved February 10, 1855, the children of such persons are to be deemed and taken to be citizens of the United States, but the rights of citizenship are not to descend to persons whose fathers never resided in the United States.

It thus happens that persons who have never resided within the United States have been enabled to put forward a pretension to the protection of the United States against the claim to military service of the government under whose protection they were born and have been reared. In some cases even naturalized citizens of the United States have returned to the land of their birth, with intent to remain there, and their children, the issue of a marriage contracted there after their return, and who have never been in the United States, have laid claim to our protection, when the lapse of many years had imposed upon them the duty of military service to the only government which had ever known them personally.

Until the year 1868 it was left embarrassed by conflicting opinions of courts and of jurists to determine how far the doctrine of perpetual allegiance, derived from our former colonial relations with Great Britain, was applicable to American citizens. Congress then wisely swept these doubts away by enacting that "any declaration, instruction, opinion, order, or decision of any officer of this Government, which denies, restricts, impairs, or questions the right of expatriation, is inconsistent with the fundamental principles of this Government." But Congress did not indicate in that statute, nor has it since done so, what acts are to be deemed to work expatriation. For my own guidance in determining such questions, I required (under the provisions of the Constitution) the opinion in writing of the principal officer in each of the Executive Departments upon certain questions relating to this subject. The result satisfies me that further legislation has become necessary. I therefore commend the subject to the careful consideration of Congress, and I transmit herewith copies of the several opinions of the principal officers of the Executive Departments, together with other correspondence and pertinent information on the same subject.

The United States, who led the way in the overthrow of the feudal doctrine of perpetual allegiance, are among the last to indicate how their own citizens may elect another nationality.

The papers submitted herewith indicate what is necessary to place us on a par with other leading nations in liberality of legislation on this international question. We have already in our treaties assented to the principles which would need to be embodied in laws intended to accomplish such results. We have agreed that citizens of the United States may cease to be citizens, and may voluntarily render allegiance to other powers. We have agreed that residence in a foreign land, without intent to return, shall of itself work expatriation. We have agreed in some instances upon the length of time necessary for such continued residence to work a presumption of such intent. I invite Congress now to mark out and define when and how expatriation can be accomplished; to regulate by law the condition of American women marrying foreigners; to fix the status of children born in a foreign country of American parents residing more or less permanently abroad, and to make rules for determining such other kindred points as may seem best to Congress.

In compliance with the request of Congress I transmitted to the American minister at Madrid, with instructions to present it to the Spanish government, the joint resolution approved on the 3d of March last, tendering to the people of Spain, in the name and on the behalf of the American people, the congratulations of Congress upon the efforts to consolidate in Spain the principles of universal liberty in a republican form of government.

The existence of this new republic was inaugurated by striking the fetters from the slaves in Porto Rico. This beneficent measure was followed by the release of several thousand persons illegally held as slaves in Cuba. Next, the Captain-General of that colony was deprived of the power to set aside the orders of his superiors at Madrid, which had pertained to the office since 1825. The sequestered estates of American citizens, which had been the cause of long and fruitless correspondence, were ordered to be restored to their owners. All these liberal steps were taken in the face of a violent opposition directed by the reactionary slave-holders of Havana, who are vainly striving to stay the march of ideas which has terminated slavery in Christendom, Cuba only excepted.

Unhappily, however, this baneful influence has thus far succeeded in defeating the efforts of all liberal-minded men in Spain to abolish slavery in Cuba, and in preventing the promised reform in that island.

The struggle for political supremacy continues there.

The pro-slavery and aristocratic party in Cuba is gradually arraigning itself in more and more open hostility and defiance of the home government, while it still maintains a political connection with the republic in the peninsula; and although usurping and defying the authority of the home government whenever such usurpation or defiance tends in the direction of oppression or of the maintenance of abuses, it is still a power in Madrid and is recognized by the government. Thus an element more dangerous to continued colonial relations between Cuba and Spain than that which inspired the insurrection at Yara; an element opposed to granting any relief from misrule and abuse, with no aspirations after freedom, commanding no sympathies in generous breasts, aiming to rivet still stronger the shackles of slavery and oppression, has seized many of the emblems of power in Cuba, and, under professions of loyalty to the mother country, is exhausting the resources of the island, and is doing acts which are at variance with those principles of justice, of liberality, and of right which give nobility of character to a republic. In the interests of humanity, of civilization, and of progress, it is to be hoped that this evil influence may be soon averted.

The steamer Virginius was on the 26th day of September, 1870, duly registered at the port of New York, as a part of the commercial marine of the United States. On the 4th of October, 1870, having received the certificate of her register in the usual legal form, she sailed from the port of New York, and has not since been within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States.

On the 31st day of October last, while sailing under the flag of the United States on the high seas, she was forcibly seized by the Spanish gun-boat Tornado, and was carried into the port of Santiago de Cuba, where fifty-three of her passengers and crew were inhumanly, and, so far at least as relates to those who were citizens of the United States, were without due process of law, put to death.

It is a well-established principle, asserted by the United States from the beginning of their national independence, recognized by Great Britain and other maritime powers, and stated by the Senate in a resolution passed unanimously on the 16th of June, 1858, that "American vessels on the high seas in time of peace, bearing the American flag, remain under the jurisdiction of the country to which they belong, and therefore any visitation, molestation, or detention of such vessel by force, or by the exhibition of force, on the part of a foreign power, is in derogation of the sovereignty of the United States."

In accordance with this principle the restoration of the Virginius and the surrender of the survivors of her passengers and crew, and a due reparation to the flag, and the punishment of the authorities who had been guilty of the illegal acts of violence, were demanded. The Spanish government has recognized the justice of the demand, and has arranged for the immediate delivery of the vessel, and for the surrender of the survivors of the passengers and crew, and for a salute to the flag, and for proceedings looking to the punishment of those who may be proved to have been guilty of illegal acts of violence toward citizens of the United States, and also toward indemnifying those who may be shown to be entitled to indemnity. A copy of a protocol of a conference between the Secretary of State and the Spanish minister, in which the terms of this arrangement were agreed to, is transmitted herewith.

The correspondence on this subject with the legation of the United States in Madrid was conducted in cypher and by cable, and needs the verification of the actual text of the correspondence. It has seemed to me to be due to the importance of the case not to submit this correspondence until the accurate text can be received by mail. It is expected shortly, and will be submitted when received.

In taking leave of this subject for the present, I wish to renew the expression of my conviction that the existence of African slavery in Cuba is a principal cause of the lamentable condition of the island. I do not doubt that Congress shares with me the hope that it will soon be made to disappear, and that peace and prosperity may follow its abolition.

The embargoing of American estates in Cuba; cruelty to American citizens detected in no act of hostility to the Spanish government; the murdering of prisoners taken with arms in their hands; and, finally, the capture upon the high seas of a vessel sailing under the United States flag, and bearing a United States registry, has culminated in an outburst of indignation that has seemed for a time to threaten war. Pending negotiations between the United States and the government of Spain on the subject of this capture I have authorized the Secretary of the Navy to put our Navy on a war footing to the extent, at least, of the entire annual appropriation for that branch of the service, trusting to Congress and the public opinion of the American people to justify my action.

Assuming, from the action of the last Congress in appointing a Committee on Privileges and Elections to prepare and report to this Congress a Constitutional amendment to provide a better method of electing the President and Vice-President of the United States, and also from the necessity of such an amendment, that there will be submitted to the State Legislatures for ratification such an improvement in our Constitution, I suggest two others for your consideration: First, to authorize the Executive to approve of so much of any measure passing the two Houses of Congress as his judgment may dictate, without approving the whole; the disapproved portion or portions to be subjected to the same rules as now, to wit, to be referred back to the House in which the measure or measures originated, and if passed by a two-thirds vote of the two Houses, then to become a law without the approval of the President. I would add to this a provision that there should be no legislation by Congress during the last twenty-four hours of its sitting except upon vetoes, in order to give the Executive an opportunity to examine, and approve or disapprove, bills understandingly.

Second, to provide by amendment that when an extra session of Congress is convened by Executive proclamation, legislation during the continuance of such extra session shall be confined to such subjects as the Executive may bring before it from time to time in writing.

The advantages to be gained by these two amendments are too obvious for me to comment upon them. One session in each year is provided for by the Constitution, in which there are no restrictions as to the subjects of legislation by Congress. If more are required it is always in the power of Congress, during their term of office, to provide for sessions at any time. The first of these amendments would protect the public against the many abuses and waste of public moneys which creep into appropriation bills, and other important measures passing during the expiring hours of Congress, to which, otherwise, due consideration cannot be given.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The receipts of the Government from all sources for the last fiscal year were $333,738,204; and expenditures on all accounts $290,345,245; thus showing an excess of receipts over expenditures of $43,392,959. But it is not probable that this favorable exhibit will be shown for the present fiscal year. Indeed, it is very doubtful whether, except with great economy on the part of Congress in making appropriations, and the same economy in administering the various departments of Government, the revenues will not fall short of meeting actual expenses, including interest on the public debt.

I commend to Congress such economy, and point out two sources where it seems to me it might commence, to wit, in the appropriations for public buildings in the many cities where work has not yet been commenced; in the appropriations for river and harbor improvements in those localities where the improvements are of but little benefit to general commerce; and for fortifications.

There is a still more fruitful source of expenditure which I will point out later in this message. I refer to the easy method of manufacturing claims for losses incurred in suppressing the late rebellion.

I would not be understood here as opposing the erection of good, substantial, and even ornamental, buildings by the Government wherever such buildings are needed. In fact, I approve of the Government owning its own buildings, in all sections of the country, and hope the day is not far distant when it will not only possess them but will erect in the capital suitable residences for all persons who now receive commutation for quarters, or rent at Government expense, and for the Cabinet, thus setting an example to the States which may induce them to erect buildings for their Senators. But I would have this work conducted at a time when the revenues of the country would abundantly justify it.

The revenues have materially fallen off for the first five months of the present fiscal year from what they were expected to produce, owing to the general panic now prevailing, which commenced about the middle of September last. The full effect of this disaster, if it should not prove a "blessing in disguise," is yet to be demonstrated. In either event it is your duty to heed the lesson and to provide by wise and well-considered legislation, as far as it lies in your power, against its recurrence, and to take advantage of all benefits that may have accrued.

My own judgment is that, however much individuals may have suffered, one long step has been taken toward specie payments; that we can never have permanent prosperity until a specie basis is reached; and that a specie basis can not be reached and maintained until our exports, exclusive of gold, pay for our imports, interest due abroad, and other specie obligations, or so nearly so as to leave an appreciable accumulation of the precious metals in the country from the products of our mines.

The development of the mines of precious metals during the past year, and the prospective development of them for years to come, are gratifying in their results. Could but one half of the gold extracted from the mines be retained at home our advance toward specie payments would be rapid.

To increase our exports, sufficient currency is required to keep all the industries of the country employed. Without this, national as well as individual bankruptcy must ensue. Undue inflation, on the other hand, while it might give temporary relief, would only lead to inflation of prices, the impossibility of competing in our own markets for the products of home skill and labor, and repeated renewals of present experiences. Elasticity to our circulating medium, therefore, and just enough of it to transact the legitimate business of the country and to keep all industries employed, is what is most to be desired. The exact medium is specie, the recognized medium of exchange the world over. That obtained, we shall have a currency of an exact degree of elasticity. If there be too much of it for the legitimate purposes of trade and commerce, it will flow out of the country. If too little, the reverse will result. To hold what we have, and to appreciate our currency to that standard, is the problem deserving of the most serious consideration of Congress.

The experience of the present panic has proven that the currency of the country, based as it is upon the credit of the country, is the best that has ever been devised. Usually in times of such trials currency has become worthless, or so much depreciated in value as to inflate the values of all the necessaries of life as compared with the currency. Every one holding it has been anxious to dispose of it on any terms. Now we witness the reverse. Holders of currency hoard it as they did gold in former experiences of a like nature.

It is patent to the most casual observer that much more currency, or money, is required to transact the legitimate trade of the country during the fall and winter months, when the vast crops are being removed, than during the balance of the year. With our present system the amount in the country remains the same throughout the entire year, resulting in an accumulation of all the surplus capital of the country in a few centers when not employed in the moving of crops; tempted there by the offer of interest on call loans. Interest being paid, this surplus capital must earn this interest paid, with a profit. Being subject to "call," it cannot be loaned—only in part at best—to the merchant or manufacturer for a fixed term. Hence, no matter how much currency there might be in the country it would be absorbed, prices keeping pace with the volume, and panics, stringency, and disasters would ever be recurring with the autumn.

Elasticity in our monetary system, therefore, is the object to be obtained first, and next to that, as far as possible, a prevention of the use of other people's money in stock and other species of speculation. To prevent the latter, it seems to me that one great step would be taken by prohibiting the national banks from paying interest on deposits, by requiring them to hold their reserves in their own vaults, and by forcing them into resumption, though it would be only in legal-tender notes. For this purpose I would suggest the establishment of clearing-houses for your consideration.

To secure the former many plans have been suggested, most if not all of which look to me more like inflation, on the one hand, or compelling the Government, on the other, to pay interest without corresponding benefits upon the surplus funds of the country during the seasons when otherwise unemployed.

I submit for your consideration whether this difficulty might not be overcome by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, at any time, to national banks of issue, any amount of their own notes below a fixed percentage of their issue—say 40 per cent.—upon the banks depositing with the Treasurer of the United States an amount of Government bonds equal to the amount of notes demanded; the banks to forfeit to the Government, say, 4 per cent. of the interest accruing on the bonds so pledged, during the time they remain with the Treasurer, as security for the increased circulation; the bonds so pledged to be redeemable by the banks at their pleasure, either in whole or in part, by returning their own bills for cancellation to an amount equal to the face of the bonds withdrawn.

I would further suggest for your consideration the propriety of authorizing national banks to diminish their standing issue at pleasure, by returning for cancellation their own bills and withdrawing so many United States bonds as are pledged for the bills returned.

In view of the great actual contraction that has taken place in the currency, and the comparative contraction continuously going on, due to the increase of population, increase of manufactories, and all the industries, I do not believe there is too much of it now for the dullest period of the year. Indeed, if clearing-houses should be established, thus forcing redemption, it is a question for your consideration whether banking should not be made free, retaining all the safe-guards now required to secure bill-holders.

In any modification of the present laws regulating national banks, as a further step toward preparing for resumption of specie payments, I invite your attention to a consideration of the propriety of exacting from them the retention, as a part of their reserve, of either the whole or a part of the gold interest accruing upon the bonds pledged as security for their issue.

I have not reflected enough on the bearing this might have in producing a scarcity of coin with which to pay duties on imports to give it my positive recommendation. But your attention is invited to the subject.

During the last four years the currency has been contracted, directly, by the withdrawal of 3 per cent. certificates, compound-interest notes and 7-30 bonds, outstanding on the 4th of March, 1869, (all of which took the place of legal tenders in the bank reserves,) to the extent of $63,000,000.

During the same period there has been a much larger comparative contraction of the currency. The population of the country has largely increased. More than 25,000 miles of railroad have been built, requiring the active use of capital to operate them. Millions of acres of land have been opened, requiring capital to move the products. Manufactories have multiplied beyond all precedent in the same period of time, requiring capital weekly for the payment of wages and for the purchase of material; and probably the largest of all comparative contraction arises from the organizing of free labor in the South. Now every laborer there receives his wages, and for want of savings-banks the greater part of such wages is carried in the pocket, or hoarded until required for use.

These suggestions are thrown out for your consideration without any recommendation that they shall be adopted literally, but hoping that the best method may be arrived at to secure such an elasticity of the currency as will keep employed all the industries of the country, and prevent such an inflation as will put off indefinitely the resumption of specie payments; an object so devoutly to be wished for by all, and none more earnestly than the class of people most directly interested—those who "earn their bread by the sweat of their brow." The decisions of Congress on this subject will have the hearty support of the Executive.

In previous messages I have called attention to the decline in American ship-building, and recommended such legislation as would secure to us our proportion of the carrying trade. Stimulated by high rates and abundance of freight, the progress for the last year in ship-building has been very satisfactory. There has been an increase of about 3 per cent. in the amount transported in American vessels over the amount of last year. With the reduced cost of material which has taken place, it may reasonably be hoped that this progress will be maintained, and even increased. However, as we pay $80,000,000 per annum to foreign vessels for the transportation of our surplus products to a market, thus increasing the balance of trade against us to this amount, the subject is one worthy of your serious consideration.

"Cheap transportation" is a subject that has attracted the attention of both producers and consumers for the past few years, and has contributed to, if it has not been the direct cause of, the recent panic and stringency.

As Congress, at its last session, appointed a special committee to investigate this whole subject during the vacation, and report at this session, I have nothing to recommend until their report is read.

There is one work, however, of a national character, in which the greater portion of the East and the West, the North and the South are equally interested, to which I will invite your attention. The State of New York has a canal connecting Lake Erie with tide-water on the Hudson River. The State of Illinois has a similar work, connecting Lake Michigan with navigable water on the Illinois River, thus making water communication inland, between the East and the West and South. These great artificial water-courses are the property of the States through which they pass, and pay toll to those States. Would it not be wise statesmanship to pledge these States that if they will open these canals for the passage of large vessels the General Government will look after, and keep in navigable condition the great public highways with which they connect—to wit, the overslangh on the Hudson, the Saint Claire Flats, and the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers. This would be a national work; one of great value to the producers of the West and South in giving them cheap transportation for their produce to the sea-board and a market; and to the consumers in the East in giving them cheaper food, particularly of those articles of food which do not find a foreign market, and the prices of which, therefore, are not regulated by foreign demands.

The advantages of such a work are too obvious for argument. I submit the subject to you, therefore, without further comment.

In attempting to regain our lost commerce and carrying-trade, I have heretofore called attention to the States south of us offering a field where much might be accomplished. To further this object I suggest that a small appropriation be made accompanied with authority for the Secretary of the Navy to fit out a naval vessel to ascend the Amazon River to the mouth of the Madeira, thence to explore that river and its tributaries into Bolivia, and to report to Congress at its next session, or as soon as practicable, the accessibility of the country by water, its resources, and the population so reached. Such an exploration will cost but little; it can do no harm, and may result in establishing a trade of value to both nations.

In further connection with the Treasury Department I would recommend a revision and codification of the tariff laws, and the opening of more mints for coining money, with authority to coin for such nations as may apply.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

The attention of Congress is invited to the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary of War herewith accompanying.

The apparent great cost of supporting the Army is fully explained by this report, and I hope will receive your attention.

While inviting your general attention to all the recommendations made by the Secretary of War, there are two which I would especially invite you to consider. First: the importance of preparing for war in time of peace, by providing proper armament for our sea-coast defenses. Proper armament is of vastly more importance than fortifications. The latter can be supplied very speedily for temporary purposes when needed. The former cannot. The second is the necessity of re-opening promotion in the staff corps of the Army. Particularly is this necessity felt in the Medical, Pay, and Ordnance Departments.

At this time it is necessary to employ "contract surgeons" to supply the necessary medical attendance required by the Army.

With the present force of the Pay Department it is now difficult to make the payments to troops provided for by law. Long delays in payments are productive of desertions and other demoralization, and the law prohibits the payment of troops by other than Regular Army paymasters.

There are now sixteen vacancies in the Ordnance Department, thus leaving that branch of the service without sufficient officers to conduct the business of the different arsenals on a large scale, if ever required.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

During the last year our Navy has been depleted by the sale of some vessels no longer fit for naval service, and by the condemnation of others not yet disposed of. This, however, has been more than compensated for by the repair of six of the old wooden ships, and by the building of eight new sloops of war, authorized by the last Congress. The building of these latter has occurred at a doubly-fortunate time. They are about being completed at a time when they may possibly be much needed, and the work upon them has not only given direct employment to thousands of men, but has, no doubt, been the means of keeping open establishments for other work at a time of great financial distress.

Since the commencement of the last month, however, the distressing occurrences which have taken place in the waters of the Caribbean Sea, almost on our very sea-board, while they illustrate most forcibly the necessity always existing, that a nation situated like ours should maintain in a state of possible efficiency a navy adequate to its responsibilities, has at the same time demanded that all the effective force we really have, shall be put in immediate readiness for warlike service. This has been, and is being done promptly and effectively, and I am assured that all the available ships and every authorized man of the American Navy will be ready for whatever action is required for the safety of our citizens, or the maintenance of our honor.

This, of course, will require the expenditure in a short time of some of the appropriations which were calculated to extend through the fiscal year, but Congress will, I doubt not, understand and appreciate the emergency, and will provide adequately, not only for the present preparation, but for the future maintenance of our naval force.

The Secretary of the Navy, has, during the past year, been quietly putting some of our most effective monitors in condition for service, and thus the exigency finds us in a much better condition for work, than we could possibly have been without his action.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

A complete exhibit is presented, in the accompanying report of the Postmaster-General, of the operations of the Post-Office Department during the year. The ordinary postal revenues for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1873, amounted to $22,996,741.57, and the expenditures of all kinds to $29,084,945.67. The increase of revenues over 1872 was $1,081,315.20, and the increase of expenditures $2,426,753.36.

Independent of the payments made from special appropriations for mail-steamship lines, the amount drawn from the general Treasury to meet deficiencies was $5,265,475.

The constant and rapid extension of our postal service, particularly upon railways, and the improved facilities for the collection, transmission, distribution, and delivery of the mails, which are constantly being provided, account for the increased expenditures of this popular branch of the public service.

The total number of post-offices in operation on the 30th June, 1873, was 33,244, a net increase of 1,381 over the number reported the preceding year. The number of presidential offices was 1,363, an increase of 163 during the year. The total length of railroad mail-routes at the close of the year was 63,457 miles, an increase of 5,546 miles over the year 1872. Fifty-nine railway post-office lines were in operation on the 30th June, 1873, extending over 14,866 miles of railroad routes, and performing an aggregate service of 34,925 miles daily.

The number of letters exchanged with foreign countries was 27,459,185, an increase of 3,096,685 over the previous year, and the postage thereon amounted to $2,021,310.86. The total weight of correspondence exchanged in the mails with European countries exceeded 912 tons, an increase of 92 tons over the previous year.

The total cost of the United States ocean mail-steamship service, including $725,000 paid from special appropriations to subsidized lines of mail-steamers, was $1,047,271.35.

New, or additional, postal conventions have been concluded with Sweden-Norway, Belgium, Germany, Canada, Newfoundland, and Japan, reducing postage rates on correspondence exchanged with those countries; and further efforts have been made to conclude a satisfactory postal convention with France, but without success.

I invite the favorable consideration of Congress to the suggestions and recommendations of the Postmaster-General for an extension of the free-delivery system in all cities having a population of not less than 10,000; for the prepayment of postage on newspapers and other printed matter of the second class; for a uniform postage and limit of weight on miscellaneous matter; for adjusting the compensation of all postmasters not appointed by the President, by the old method of commissions on the actual receipts of the office, instead of the present mode of fixing the salary in advance, upon special returns; and especially do I urge favorable action by Congress on the important recommendations of the Postmaster-General for the establishment of United States postal-savings depositories.

Your attention is also again called to a consideration of the question of postal telegraphs, and the arguments adduced in support thereof, in the hope that you may take such action in connection therewith as in your judgment will most contribute to the best interest of the country.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Affairs in Utah require your early and special attention. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Clinton vs. Englebrecht, decided that the United States marshal of that Territory could not lawfully summon jurors for the district courts; and those courts hold that the territorial marshal cannot lawfully perform that duty, because he is elected by the legislative assembly, and not appointed as provided for in the act organizing the Territory. All proceedings at law are practically abolished by these decisions, and there have been but few or no jury trials in the district courts of that Territory since the last session of Congress. Property is left without protection by the courts, and crimes go unpunished. To prevent anarchy there, it is absolutely necessary that Congress provide the courts with some mode of obtaining jurors, and I recommend legislation to that end; and also that the probate courts of the Territory, now assuming to issue writs of injunction and habeas corpus, and to try criminal cases and questions as to land titles, be denied all jurisdiction not possessed ordinarily by courts of that description.

I have become impressed with the belief that the act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," is productive of more evil than good at this time. Many considerations might be urged for its total repeal, but if this is not considered advisable, I think it will not be seriously questioned that those portions of said act providing for what is called involuntary bankruptcy operate to increase the financial embarrassments of the country. Careful and prudent men very often become involved in debt in the transaction of their business, and, though they may possess ample property, if it could be made available for that purpose, to meet all their liabilities, yet on account of the extraordinary scarcity of money, they may be unable to meet all their pecuniary obligations as they become due, in consequence of which they are liable to be prostrated in their business by proceedings in bankruptcy at the instance of unrelenting creditors.

People are now so easily alarmed as to monetary matters that the mere filing of a petition in bankruptcy by an unfriendly creditor will necessarily embarrass, and often-times accomplish the financial ruin of a responsible business man. Those, who otherwise might make lawful and just arrangements to relieve themselves from difficulties produced by the present stringency in money, are prevented by their constant exposure to attack and disappointment by proceedings against them in bankruptcy, and, beside, the law is made use of in many cases by obdurate creditors to frighten or force debtors into a compliance with their wishes, and into acts of injustice to other creditors and to themselves.

I recommend that so much of said act as provides for involuntary bankruptcy on account of the suspension of payment be repealed.

Your careful attention is invited to the subject of claims against the Government, and the facilities afforded by existing laws for their prosecution.

Each of the Departments of State, Treasury, and War have demands for many millions of dollars upon their files, and they are rapidly accumulating. To these may be added those now pending before Congress, the Court of Claims, and the southern claims commission, making in the aggregate an immense sum. Most of these grow out of the rebellion, and are intended to indemnify persons on both sides for their losses during the war; and not a few of them are fabricated and supported by false testimony. Projects are on foot, it is believed, to induce Congress to provide for new classes of claims, and to revise old ones through the repeal or modification of the statute of limitations, by which they are now barred. I presume these schemes, if proposed, will be received with little favor by Congress, and I recommend that persons having claims against the United States cognizable by any tribunal or department thereof, be required to present them at an early day, and that legislation be directed, so far as practicable, to the defeat of unfounded and unjust demands upon the Government; and I would suggest, as a means of preventing fraud, that witnesses be called upon to appear in person to testify before those tribunals having said claims before them for adjudication.

Probably the largest saving to the National Treasury can be secured by timely legislation on these subjects of any of the economic measures that will be proposed.

You will be advised of the operations of the Department of Justice by the report of the Attorney-General, and I invite your attention to the amendments of existing laws suggested by him with the view of reducing the expenses of that Department.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

The policy inaugurated toward the Indians at the beginning of the last Administration has been steadily pursued, and, I believe, with beneficial results.

It will be continued with only such modifications as time and experience may demonstrate as necessary.

With the encroachment of civilization upon the Indian reservations and hunting-grounds, disturbances have taken place between the Indians and whites during the past year, and probably will continue to do so until each race appreciates that the other has rights which must be respected.

The policy has been to collect the Indians, as rapidly as possible, on reservations, and, as far as practicable, within what is known as the Indian Territory, and to teach them the arts of civilization and self-support.

Where found off their reservations and endangering the peace and safety of the whites, they have been punished, and will continue to be for like offenses.

The Indian Territory, south of Kansas and west of Arkansas, is sufficient in area and agricultural resources to support all the Indians east of the Rocky Mountains. In time, no doubt, all of them, except a few who may select to make their homes among white people, will be collected there. As a preparatory step for this consummation, I am now satisfied that a territorial form of government should be given them which will secure the treaty rights of the original settlers, and protect their homesteads from alienation for a period of twenty years.

The operations of the Patent-Office are growing to such magnitude, and the accumulation of material is becoming so great, that the necessity for more room is becoming more obvious day by day.

I respectfully invite your attention to the reports of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Patents on this subject.

The business of the General Land-Office exhibits a material increase in all its branches during the last fiscal year. During that time there were disposed of out of the public lands 13,030,606 acres, being an amount greater by 1,165,631 acres than was disposed of during the preceding year. Of the amount disposed of, 1,626,266 acres were sold for cash; 214,940 acres were located with military land-warrants; 3,793,612 acres were taken for homesteads; 653,446 acres were located with agricultural college scrip; 6,083,536 acres were certified by railroads; 76,576 acres were granted to wagon-roads; 238,548 acres were approved to States as swamp-lands; 138,681 acres were certified for agricultural colleges, common schools, universities, and seminaries; 190,775 acres were approved to States for internal improvments; and 14,222 acres were located with Indian scrip.

The cash receipts during the same time were $3,408,515.50, being $190,415.50 in excess of the receipts of the previous year. During the year 30,488,132 acres of public land were surveyed; an increase over the amount surveyed the previous year of 1,037,193 acres, and, added to the area previously surveyed, aggregates 616,554,895 acres which have been surveyed, leaving 1,218,443,505 acres of the public land still unsurveyed.

The increased and steadily increasing facilities for reaching our unoccupied public domain, and for the transportation of surplus products, enlarges the available field for desirable homestead locations, thus stimulating settlement, and extending year by year, in a gradually increasing ratio, the area of occupation and cultivation.

The expressed desire of the representatives of a large colony of citizens of Russia to emigrate to this country, (as is understood with the consent of their government,) if certain concessions can be made to enable them to settle in a compact colony, is of great interest, as going to show the light in which our institutions are regarded by an industrious, intelligent, and wealthy people, desirous of enjoying civil and religious liberty; and the acquisition of so large an immigration of citizens of a superior class would, without doubt, be of substantial benefit to the country. I invite attention to the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior in this behalf.

There was paid during the last fiscal year for pensions, including the expense of disbursement, $29,185,289.62, being an amount less by $984,050.98 than was expended for the same purpose the preceding year. Although this statement of expenditures would indicate a material reduction in amount compared with the preceding year, it is believed that the changes in the pension laws at the last session of Congress will absorb that amount the current year.

At the close of the last fiscal year there were on the pension rolls 99,804 invalid military pensioners, and 112,088 widows, orphans, and dependent relatives of deceased soldiers, making a total of that class of 211,892; 18,266 survivors of the war of 1812 and 5,053 widows of soldiers of that war pensioned under the act of Congress of February 14, 1871, making a total of that class of 23,319; 1,430 invalid Navy pensioners, and 1,770 widows, orphans, and dependent relatives of deceased officers, sailors, and marines of the Navy, making a total of Navy pensioners of 3,200, and a grand total of pensioners of all classes of 238,411, showing a net increase during the last fiscal year of 6,182. During the last year the names of 16,405 pensioners were added to the rolls, and 10,223 names were dropped therefrom for various causes.

The system adopted for the detection of frauds against the Government in the matter of pensions has been productive of satisfactory results, but legislation is needed to provide, if possible, against the perpetration of such frauds in future.

The evidently increasing interest in the cause of education is a most encouraging feature in the general progress and prosperity of the country, and the Bureau of Education is earnest in its efforts to give proper direction to the new appliances and the increased facilities which are being offered to aid the educators of the country in their great work.

The ninth census has been completed, the report thereof published and distributed, and the working force of the bureau disbanded. The Secretary of the Interior renews his recommendation for a census to be taken in 1875, to which subject the attention of Congress is invited. The original suggestion in that behalf has met with the general approval of the country; and even if it be not deemed advisable at present to provide for a regular quinquennial census, a census taken in 1875, the report of which could be completed and published before the one hundredth anniversary of our national independence would be especially interesting and valuable, as showing the progress of the country during the first century of our national existence. It is believed, however, that a regular census every five years would be of substantial benefit to the country, inasmuch as our growth hitherto has been so rapid that the results of the decennial census are necessarily unreliable as a basis of estimates for the latter years of a decennial period.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Under the very efficient management of the governor and the board of public works of this District, the city of Washington is rapidly assuming the appearance of a capital of which the nation may well be proud. From being a most unsightly place three years ago, disagreeable to pass through in summer in consequence of the dust arising from unpaved streets, and almost impassible in the winter from the mud, it is now one of the most sightly cities in the country, and can boast of being the best paved.

The work has been done systematically, the plans, grades, location of sewers, water and gas-mains being determined upon before the work was commenced, thus securing permanency when completed. I question whether so much has ever been accomplished before in any American city for the same expenditures.

The Government having large reservations in the city, and the nation at large having an interest in their capital, I recommend a liberal policy toward the District of Columbia, and that the Government should bear its just share of the expense of these improvements. Every citizen visiting the capital feels a pride in its growing beauty, and that he, too, is part owner in the investments made here.

I would suggest to Congress the propriety of promoting the establishment in this District of an institution of learning, or university, of the highest class by the donation of lands. There is no place better suited for such an institution than the national capital. There is no other place in which every citizen is so directly interested.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

In three successive messages I have called attention to the subject of "civil service reform."

Action has been taken so far as to authorize the appointment of a board to devise rules governing methods of making appointments and promotions, but there never has been any action making these rules, or any rules, binding, or even entitled to observance, where persons desire the appointment of a friend or the removal of an official who may be disagreeable to them.

To have any rules effective they must have the acquiescence of Congress as well as of the Executive. I commend, therefore, the subject to your attention, and suggest that a special committee of Congress might confer with the civil service board during the present session for the purpose of devising such rules as can be maintained, and which will secure the services of honest and capable officials, and which will also protect them in a degree of independence while in office.

Proper rules will protect Congress as well as the Executive from much needless persecution, and will prove of great value to the public at large.

I would recommend for your favorable consideration the passage of an enabling act for the admittance of Colorado as a State in the Union. It possesses all the elements of a prosperous State, agricultural and mineral, and, I believe, has a population now to justify such admission.

In connection with this I would also recommend the encouragement of a canal, for the purposes of irrigation, from the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains to the Missouri River. As a rule I am opposed to further donations of public lands for internal improvements owned and controlled by private corporations, but in this instance I would make an exception. Between the Missouri River and the Rocky Mountains there is an arid belt of public land from three hundred to five hundred miles in width, perfectly valueless for the occupation of man for want of sufficient rain to secure the growth of any product. An irrigating canal would make productive a belt as wide as the supply of water could be made to spread over across this entire country, and would secure a cordon of settlements connecting the present population of the mountain and mining regions with that of the older States. All the land reclaimed would be clear gain. If alternate sections are retained by the Government, I would suggest that the retained sections be thrown open to entry under the homestead laws or sold to actual settlers for a very low price.

I renew my previous recommendation to Congress for general amnesty. The number engaged in the late rebellion yet laboring under disabilities is very small, but enough to keep up a constant irritation. No possible danger can accrue to the Government by restoring them to eligibility to hold office.

I suggest for your consideration the enactment of a law to better secure the civil rights which freedom should secure—but has not effectually secured—to the enfranchised slave.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 1, 1873.

PROTOCOL.

Protocol of the conference held at the Department of State, at Washington, on the 29th of November, 1873, between Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State, and Rear-Admiral Don José Polo de Bernabé, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Spain.

The undersigned having met for the purpose of entering into a definitive agreement respecting the case of the steamer Virginius, which, while under the flag of the United States, was, on the 31st day of October last, captured on the high seas by the Spanish man-of-war Tornado, have reached the following conclusions:

Spain, on her part, stipulates to restore forthwith the vessel referred to, and the survivors of her passengers and crew, and on the 25th day of December next to salute the flag of the United States. If, however, before that date Spain should prove to the satisfaction of the Government of the United States that the Virginius was not entitled to carry the flag of the United States, and was carrying it, at the time of her capture, without right and improperly, the salute will be spontaneously dispensed with, as in such case not being necessarily requirable; but the United States will expect, in such case, a disclaimer of the intent of indignity to its flag in the act which was committed.

Furthermore, if on or before the 25th of December, 1873, it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the United States that the Virginius did not rightfully carry the American flag and was not entitled to American papers, the United States will institute inquiry, and adopt legal proceedings against the vessel, if it be found that she has violated any law of the United States, and against any of the persons who may appear to have been guilty of illegal acts in connection therewith; it being understood that Spain will proceed, according to the second proposition made to General Sickles, and communicated in his telegram read to Admiral Polo on the 27th instant, to investigate the conduct of those of her authorities who have infringed Spanish laws or treaty obligations, and will arraign them before competent courts and inflict punishment on those who may have offended.

Other reciprocal reclamations to be the subject of consideration and arrangement between the two governments; and in case of no agreement, to be the subject of arbitration if the constitutional assent of the Senate of the United States be given thereto.

It is further stipulated that the time, manner, and place for the surrender of the Virginius, and the survivors of those who were on board of her at the time of her capture, and also the time, manner, and place for the salute to the flag of the United States, if there should be occasion for such salute, shall be subject to arrangement between the undersigned, within the next two days.

HAMILTON FISH.
JOSÉ POLO DE BERNABÉ.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the message be printed and laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

FINANCIAL REPORTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPENTER in the chair) laid before the Senate the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances, and also the annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency; which, on motion of Mr. CONKLING, were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CONKLING. Are there executive messages on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER There are.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to; there being, on a division, ayes 18, noes 33.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent therein the doors were re-opened, and (at two o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 2, 1873.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. The Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of our fathers, we lift our hearts to Thee as we enter upon the responsible duties of this new day. Guide us by Thy divine counsel. Animate us ever with Thy spirit, the spirit of truth and of love. We thank Thee for the kind providence that has brought us again together. Sanctify to us the lessons of our own mortality, and help us ever to walk in Thy fear.

O thou sovereign God, whose eyes are in every place, endue with wisdom these Thy servants in all their legislation. Animate with love their hearts in all their personal relations. Bless our Government in all its departments, and our land in all its interests, establishing here Thine own kingdom of truth and righteousness. We ask it, with pardon and peace, in the name of Christ, who hath taught us to pray: Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven; give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was announced, when Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, said: I am directed by the Senate to inform the House that a quorum of the Senate has assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business. Also, that a committee has been appointed by the Senate to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make; and that Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. THURMAN have been appointed as such committee on behalf of the Senate.

PRESERVATION OF ORDER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs, at the opening of this session, to make a single remark. This is a very large House, and it will require the co-operation of every member to preserve that order which is essential to the correct dispatch of business. The Chair hopes that no member will ask for the infraction of the rule in regard to admitting any person on the floor; and, with the assistance of the members of the House, he will enforce that rule perfectly, rigidly, and impartially, so that none but those privileged under the rules may be admitted to the floor under any circumstances whatever.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Chair have the rule read?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

FLOOR—PRIVILEGE OF ADMISSION ON.

No person, except members of the Senate, their secretaries, heads of Departments, the President's private secretary, foreign ministers, the governor for the time being of any State, Senators and Representatives-elect, judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the Court of Claims, and such persons as have by name received the thanks of Congress, shall be admitted within the hall of the House of Representatives, or any of the rooms upon the same floor or opening into the same: Provided, That ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim pending before Congress, and shall so register themselves, may also be admitted within the Hall of the House; and no person, except those herein specified, shall at any time be admitted to the floor of the House.

The Doorkeeper shall execute strictly the foregoing rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is compelled to say that the Doorkeeper's power to enforce this rule is very much obstructed by the requests of members—indeed, he may say, wholly obstructed; and, therefore, the order on the floor and the dispatch of business depend very much on the members themselves.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. That resolution comes up of itself as a question of privilege.

COMPENSATION OF SENATORS AND MEMBERS.

Mr. NIBLACK. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] to yield to me, to enable me to give notice of a bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. NIBLACK. I give notice that on to-morrow I shall introduce a bill, changing the rate of compensation of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives; and, failing to get an opportunity to introduce it sooner, I shall, on Monday next, ask a suspension of the rules.

BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. PARSONS. I desire to give notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, I shall ask leave to introduce a bill to repeal an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867.

ARKANSAS ELECTION CONTESTS.

Mr. HYNES. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the credentials and papers in the possession of the Clerk of the House, in the cases of the contested elections from the first and third districts of Arkansas, be referred to the Committee on Elections, with instructions to report at the earliest day practicable, who, of the contesting parties, are entitled to be sworn in as sitting Members of the House.

I will state to the House that the parties on both sides of the contest agree to this resolution, desiring an early settlement of the question.

By unanimous consent the resolution was received, considered, and agreed to.

Mr. HYNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIVIL RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. MOREY. I give notice that to-morrow, or at the earliest opportunity thereafter, I will introduce and press to its passage a bill supplemental to an act entitled "An act to protect all citizens of the United States in their civil rights and to furnish means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866.

COMPENSATION OF SENATORS AND MEMBERS.

Mr. DEWITT. I desire to give notice that, at the earliest opportunity, I will introduce a joint resolution, in amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which was introduced in the first Congress by James Madison, providing that no law increasing the compensation for the services of Senators and Representatives shall take effect until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POLAND. I ask the gentleman to allow me to offer a resolution.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I rise to a question of order. Is it in order for these notices to be given under the rule?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Then I object to any further notices of this sort, because they are but taking up the time of the House.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will find by referring to the rules that they can file with the Clerk notice of any bill, and the entry of that notice on the Journal will entitle them to offer the bill when their State is called.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will ask the Chair whether the notice on being so filed with the Clerk would or would not be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and appear as a part of the proceedings?

The SPEAKER. It would, if the member filing the notice will hand a rescript of the same to the reporters of the debates.

BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. POLAND, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to examine the statute in relation to proceedings in bankruptcy, and prepare and report such amendments thereto as will simplify and expedite proceedings thereunder, and diminish the expenses thereof.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. BELL. The Journal and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD do not show that I voted upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] to the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] in relation to the election of officers of the House. I voted for that amendment, and ask that the Journal be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The correction of the Journal will be made. The Chair takes this occasion to advise the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BELL,] and through him the House, that errors in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are not questions of privilege; errors in the Journal are.

Mr. BELL. This is an error of the Journal.

REVENUE SUITS.

Mr. DAWES, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to communicate to this House the amount of money paid, since the 4th of March, 1869, by any person or persons, in the settlement of suits, judgments, and claims made by or in behalf of the United States for the violation of revenue laws at the Boston and New York custom-houses; the amounts and date of all such payments, and the names of the persons making the same, respectively; also, what portion of each such sum was paid into the Treasury of the United States, and what portion of each, if any, was paid elsewhere than into said Treasury, and to whom.

LOUISIANA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now insist upon the regular order of business, and ask that the pending resolution be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That J. H. Sypher, of the first district, L. A. Sheldon, of the second district of Louisiana, and P. B. S. Pinchback, a Representative at large of the same State, having the prima-facie evidence of right to seats in this House, be admitted to take the oath of office respectively.

Mr. BECK. I desire a division of the question, if that can be done under the rules.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have no objection to a vote being taken on each case.

The SPEAKER. That is the right of any member.

Mr. BECK. Before the previous question shall be called, I desire to offer a resolution on this subject, and ask that it be now read for the information of the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have no objection to its being read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the credentials of the persons claiming seats in Congress from the first, second, and fourth districts of Louisiana, and from the State at large, be, and they are hereby, referred to the Committee on Elections with instructions to ascertain and report as soon as possible whether any, and, if any, which of said persons from each of said districts are entitled to seats as members of this House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts admit that amendment?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not; I only yielded to have it read for information.

Mr. WOOD. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] proceeds to discuss this resolution, I desire to ask him, in all candor, whether in each of these cases precisely the same facts are presented—whether he has any reason or ground upon which he proposes to admit them all under one resolution without any division of the proposition.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will answer, in the same spirit of candor in which the gentleman asks the question, that I propose to show a common ground upon which all can be admitted. I am not aware that there is any substantial ground of distinction, so far as the prima-facie case is concerned, with which the House can be concerned.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the gentleman one question. What time does he propose to allow for the discussion of the subject? I desire to be heard in opposition to it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That will be within the rules of the House. I desire as full discussion as may seem to be necessary.

Mr. BECK. That is all we can ask.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We are all aware of the peculiar state of things in the organization and carrying on of the government of Louisiana, and in the election there last fall; all of which will have to be considered, undoubtedly, by the House, in other and different proceedings from this. The resolution which I have had the honor to present looks only to who are entitled upon the prima-facie record, looking upon record-evidence alone, to seats in this House to represent the people of that State. All will agree that in every case the people of the several districts of the United States have a right to representation on this floor equal with all other portions. It is wrong and unjust to prevent that representation where a prima-facie case is made out.

Now, if the House will bear with me, I will make a statement which will be verified from the Clerk's desk, from step to step, by record. I do not ask the House to go into the question of evidence. If it was a question of evidence other than of record-evidence, it ought not to be here; it ought to be referred to the Committee on Elections, and the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] would be the proper one to adopt. But, as I yesterday insisted in the case of the Delegate from Utah, [Mr. CANNON,] he having the prima-facie claim, witnessed by the record of his Territory, to a seat here, we could not go into any consideration of reasons personal to himself or of irregularity in his election, in order to prevent the people of Utah from being represented on this floor. Therefore, if I can here demonstrate to the House that these members from Louisiana have prima-facie credentials, entitled to the respect that other prima-facie credentials are entitled to, then it will be the duty of the House to seat them, and to allow them to represent their people here until the Committee on Elections, upon examining the facts of election, find that that title is only prima facie, and not the real title.

Now the case stated will be this: there was an election held in Louisiana on the first Tuesday of November, 1872. By the laws of the State, a copy of which is on the Clerk's desk, (and on this point I believe there is no dispute,) the time which the returning-officers had to make their return was ten days, which, of course, would expire on the 15th of November. I will ask the Clerk to read the 32d and 33d sections of the election act.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 32. All general elections for members of Congress shall be held at the same time and conducted in the same manner as is provided for the general elections.

SEC. 33. As soon as possible after the expiration of the time of making the returns of the election for Representatives in Congress, a certificate of the returns of the election for such Representatives shall be entered on record by the secretary of state and signed by the governor, and a copy thereof, subscribed by said officers, shall be delivered to the persons so elected, and another copy transmitted to the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, directed to the Clerk thereof.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will also be shown by the record of the executive office of the State of Louisiana, (which record is also upon the table of the Clerk, and which I will ask him to read,) that no record of that election was entered until the 16th day of December, one month afterward, that record being promulgated according to law in the official journal on the 17th of December.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, SECRETARY OF STATE,
New Orleans, November 19, 1873.

I hereby certify that the returns of an election, held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, for members of Congress to the Forty-third Congress of the United States, were duly filed in this department by the returning-board, on the 16th day of December, A. D. 1872, and were promulgated in the official journal of this State on the 17th day of December, A. D. 1872.

Given under my hand and seal of the State, this 19th day of November, A. D. 1873, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-eighth.

[SEAL.] P. G. DESLONDE,
Secretary of State.

Mr. BECK. Does that paper show by whom the returns were made?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir; it is not necessary by law that that should be shown. The law requires simply that "a certificate of the returns of the election for such Representatives shall be entered on the record by the secretary of state and signed by the governor."

This return was filed on the 16th. Governor Warmoth then gave to the contestants in this case, not the parties named in the resolution, a certified copy of this record, dated the 4th day of December, twelve days before there was any record made. Let me state the facts so that there will be no mistake. The record was made on the 16th, and promulgated on the 17th, of December; and Governor Warmoth's duty under the law was to sign that record, and give a copy thereof, subscribed by himself and the secretary of state, to the persons elected. The return was not filed until the 16th, yet the governor has given certain credentials dated the 4th, twelve days before there was any record of which to give a copy. I ask the Clerk to read the credentials as given by Governor Warmoth in one of these cases, they being all similar in form.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, December 4, 1872.

This is to certify that at a general election held in this State, on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, Effingham Lawrence received 13,161 votes, and J. Hale Sypher received 10,054 votes. I therefore hereby declare Effingham Lawrence duly elected to represent the first district of the State of Louisiana in the Forty-third Congress of the United States.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State, this 4th day of December, A. D. 1872, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

[SEAL] H. C. WARMOTH,
Governor of Louisiana.

By the governor:
Y. A. WOODWARD,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, the House will observe that that certificate on its face, when compared with the record, is utterly void, and that the seal of the State, to which otherwise full faith and credit ought to be given, is shown by the record to have been improperly and inadvertently affixed to that document.

On the 8th day of December, as also appears by the record, the legislature of the State came together. Their first act was to impeach Governor Warmoth; and, in accordance with the constitution of Louisiana, a copy of which also is upon the Clerk's desk, he was suspended from office on the 9th of the same month; so that he was not in being, as governor, on the 16th. Under the laws of Louisiana, Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback became acting governor, or governor de facto; and he gave to the gentlemen named in the resolution certificates, one of which I ask the Clerk to read, they being all alike in form.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, December 30, 1872.

Be it known that at an election begun and held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, for members of Congress, J. Hale Sypher received 12,299 votes, and E Lawrence received 12,225 votes.

Now, therefore, I, P. B. S. Pinchback, acting governor of the State of Louisiana, do hereby certify that J. Hale Sypher received a majority of the votes cast at said election, is duly elected to represent the first congressional district of the State of Louisiana in the Forty-third Congress of the United States.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State this 30th day of December, A. D. 1872, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

[SEAL.] P. B. S. PINCHBACK.

By the acting governor:
E. B. METZ,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Now, then, having shown that the certificate of Governor Warmoth, because of what appears of record, was utterly void, that certificate having been given twelve days before there was any record to be made, I produce here, duly transmitted to the Clerk, and open to the inspection of members, certificates in due form, under the seal of the State, in favor of the parties named in the resolution; credentials as perfect prima facie as those which any one of us has presented; credentials certified in due form and signed by the governor, against which no record evidence can be produced.

What can be proved to the contrary I know not, and I care not; and I do not know, and have not made any opinion in my own mind, how I should vote on what are the merits of the contest.

It does not involve, as my friends on the other side seem to think it does, any question as to the legality of proceedings in Louisiana in the election of their State officers. It involves nothing but the credit due to the certificate given, in due form, for a member of Congress, and on that prima-facie case I am quite content to rest this matter.

I assume that if we are going into any evidence about it, then the case ought to go to the committee which for this purpose are the eyes and ears of the House. But here is a case where we do not present any question of evidence. We only present the record. Now, the answer may be made to me, "Why, Governor Warmoth has given, under the seal, to Mr. Lawrence, a certificate and certificates to the other contestants, and why not give credit to them?" Because the record contradicts the record, and therefore we are left only to that prima-facie case which is made out by duly issued certificates, made fifteen days after there was a record.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I have made this case as distinct in the minds of the House as it is in my own, I have done all I desired to do, and I claim that the House should seat these members on prima-facie case, leaving the contestants who have not the prima-facie case, as shown by the record, to contest their seats before it in such form as they may be advised.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I yield for fifteen minutes to my friend opposite.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three-fourths of an hour remaining.

Mr. BECK. I will require at least thirty minutes to do justice to the case. The House will, I am sure, extend the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts to two hours.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If my time be extended I will yield all of the extension, saving a little time for reply. When the House does extend my time I will then yield to the gentleman. I can only now yield for fifteen minutes.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, it is utterly impossible for me to state the case in fifteen minutes, and I will therefore ask the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will ask for an extension, at the request of a friend near me.

Mr. BECK. I ask the House to extend the time for the discussion of this question so that I may make a complete statement.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. How long does the gentleman propose to extend it?

Mr. BECK. So that I may be allowed thirty minutes.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I suggest to the House that the gentleman from Kentucky be allowed thirty minutes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very good; and that will leave me what remains of my hour.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that the gentleman from Kentucky shall speak for half an hour without the time being taken from the hour of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I have submitted a proposition to this House to refer the credentials of all of those gentlemen on both sides to the Committee on Elections. Surely there can be no objection to that by any gentleman who wishes a fair hearing of the case. Surely there can be no desire and no interest on the republican side of the House, with their majority, to swear in men now, if the proof should be conclusive, as it will be, that those proposed to be sworn in are not members elected to this House.

If there ever was a case which required investigation in advance as to the rights of members, it is the case of those who claim seats in this House from Louisiana. It will be shown—indeed, it is known to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] and indeed nobody knows it better than he—that the whole of the present government of Louisiana from beginning to end is and has been a fraud from its inception; that Pinchback, who signed these certificates, was himself a usurper; that the board upon which he relies, whose name is not even given here, because that would prove my charge, was not a board authorized by law to make returns of elections; that the Legislature which inaugurated him and impeached Governor Warmoth was a Legislature put there by Federal bayonets and maintained by the Army and Navy of the United States; and that frauds, such as this House can hardly imagine, were perpetrated by those under whose certificates it is proposed to seat these gentlemen in this House.

I said the gentleman from Massachusetts knows it better than anybody else, because last winter he made a magnificent speech on the floor of this House in which he told us all about it. On page 542 of the Congressional Globe, second session of the Forty-second Congress, he announced that he had examined this case while on the Committee on the Judiciary with all possible care. He said further:

> There was an election held in Louisiana on the 4th of November last. I have no doubt one government has a majority of the honest votes. I have no doubt the returns show that the Warmoth government, as it is called, was elected. I have no doubt that set of returns is the only legal method provided by the constitution of Louisiana of ascertaining, when they are corrected by the proper tribunal, which is the true government.
>
> On the other side, the men who claim to be known as the Pinchback legislature have organized themselves upon affidavits and certificates of supervisors, not returns, which are not the legal machinery by which an election in a State is determined.

He went on to show that "this state of public affairs in Louisiana is known to everybody, and that these facts are a sufficient basis on which this Congress can act." He went on to tell us that the facts were not even disputed, and that the law was against the whole machinery of the Pinchback government to such an extent as to make it an anarchy and not a government, and when Mr. SHELDON, of Louisiana, sought to interfere, he wound up thus:

> Pardon me; peace is one thing and anarchy is another. There may be peace and quiet in Louisiana, as there was in 1862, because there were bayonets to command it, but there was no State government in Louisiana in 1862, and there is none now in Louisiana, by a vote of the people. In my judgment that is anarchy. Anarchy does not mean violence; it does not mean disturbance; it means being without a government, without any legal controlling magistracy, whether legislative or executive; and, the State of Louisiana being without a government as much as if an earthquake had sunk the city of New Orleans with the whole State government in it, the question is, what is to be done, and who is to do it?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I rise to a point of order. The confusion in the part of the Hall where I am seated is so great that it is impossible to hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. BECK. I am sorry that the gentleman did not hear the views of the gentleman from Massachusetts, for they are very important as bearing on this question. He announced that the Pinchback government was a fraud from beginning to end; that Louisiana was then in anarchy—"the State of Louisiana," to use his own language, "being without a government as much as if an earthquake had sunk the city of New Orleans and the whole State government in it, the question is, what is to be done, and who is to do it?"

I think I am justified by these extracts in saying that no man knows better than the gentleman from Massachusetts that the men he now seeks to swear in are not entitled to seats on this floor, and the refusal to allow the case to go to a republican committee of this House, to have the facts investigated, grows out of his certain knowledge that even a committee of his own friends would be compelled to reject the men he now seeks to introduce. What right have these men to seats, if the facts the gentleman has stated are true? But I do not rely upon that alone.

It will be observed that the gentleman in the opening of his speech undertook to make something out of the form of the certificate given to General Gibson, Mr. Lawrence, and the others, by Governor Warmoth. But when he came to look at his own certificates, which he says are, prima facie, correct, they are found to be identical in language with those given by Warmoth to the others, not referring to a record, but simply purporting to be duplicates.

So that the prima-facie case stands on two certificates, identical in form; the first given by a then undoubted governor, (Warmoth,) and the last by a bogus governor, (Pinchback,) making the prima-facie case against General BUTLER's friends.

I went to the Clerk's office this morning and examined the certificates upon which the members from Louisiana were admitted into the last Congress. If I had time I would have them read; but I beg to say that they are identical, word for word, with the certificates now presented by Lawrence, Gibson, Davidson, and others who are now seeking seats here, and are willing to go before a committee and stand the test of an investigation of the facts before that committee before asking seats here.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate of the United States went themselves to Louisiana this year and investigated the whole of this matter. They made their report to the Senate of the United States relative to Governor Pinchback's government; relative to all the returns about which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has spoken; relative to the usurpation of the State and Federal courts; and relative to the certificate of the secretary of state, put there by Pinchback and his bayonet legislature, and they denounce and condemn them all in the most unequivocal terms. There were four sets of returns from four boards. One was made by the De Feriet board, one by the Warmoth board, another was made by the Foreman board, and the fourth was made by the Lynch board, composed, in fact, of Lynch alone, his colleagues being all usurpers. It was the return of the Lynch board, if anything, that enabled Pinchback's secretary to make that certificate. And that certificate, when the truth comes to be known and when the facts upon which it is based are ascertained, is shown to have been made by a board that had no authority under the law, and that was inaugurated and perpetuated in violation of all law, for fraudulent purposes. The committee of the Senate of the United States, a committee, by the way, not likely to be unfavorable to these parties or to anything that militated against the will of the power dominant at Washington, made a report, which I hope every gentleman will get. It is Senate report No. 457, third session of Forty-second Congress. That committee, composed of the ablest men of the Senate, through Mr. CARPENTER, made this report, and say:

> In the opinion of your committee there can be no doubt, conceding the validity of the act of November 20, that it transferred the duty of canvassing the returns of the last election to the board to be elected under the provisions of the act.

Note that; I will speak upon it presently.

> The act provided for such election by the senate, and, taking effect in the vacation of the Legislature, created offices to be filled thereafter by the senate. This is what is styled in that State an original vacancy, which, happening in the vacation of the Legislature, the governor is authorized to fill by appointment; and it is said that the courts of that State have repeatedly recognized the right of the governor to make such appointments.

Then the report speaks of the injunctions granted against the Lynch board, which were in full force when that board in defiance of law made its pretended returns, and shows that Durell, the United States judge, acted in violation of his duty when he granted his counter-injunctions. The report further says:

> There is nothing in all the comedy of blunders or frauds under consideration more indefensible than the pretended canvass of this board.

That was the board on whose return Pinchback's secretary of state certifies the election of these gentlemen, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] well knew. The report then says:

> The following are some of the objections to the validity of their proceedings:
>
> 1. The board had been abolished by the act of November 20.
>
> 2. The board was under valid and existing injunctions restraining it from acting at all, and an injunction in the Armstead case restraining it from making any canvass not based upon the official returns of the election.
>
> 3. Conceding the board was in existence, and had full authority to canvass the returns, it had no returns to canvass.

These are wonderfully good reasons why the action of that board, and the certificates of Pinchback based upon it, should be treated as at least of sufficient importance and of such doubtful validity to go before a committee of this House. Why? Because the board had been abolished. That is the first reason. Again, because it was under valid injunctions. That is the second reason. Still further, because it had no returns to canvass, and does not profess to have had. That is the third. The committee further say:

> It was testified before your committee by Mr. Bovee himself, who participated in this canvass by the Lynch board, that they were determined to have a republican Legislature, and made their canvass to that end. The testimony abundantly establishes the fraudulent character of their canvass.

I am not saying this. That is what is said by a republican committee of the Senate of the United States.

> The testimony abundantly establishes the fraudulent character of their canvass. In some cases they had what were supposed to be copies of the original returns; in other cases they had nothing but newspaper statements; and in other cases, where they had nothing whatever to act upon, they made an estimate, based upon their knowledge of the political complexion of the parish, of what the vote ought to have been. They also counted a large number of affidavits purporting to be sworn to by voters who had been wrongfully denied registration or the right to vote, many of which affidavits they must have known to be forgeries. It was testified by one witness that he forged over a thousand affidavits and delivered them to the Lynch board while it was in session.

Here is an extract from the testimony of Jaques:

> By Mr. CARPENTER:
>
> Q. You say you took their names from the poll-list?
> A. Yes, sir; all over the three hundred.
> Q. Had you seen these men?
> A. No, sir.
> Q. But you signed their names to an affidavit?
> A. I was instructed to make them out so.
> Q. I did not ask that. Do you swear that you signed the names of a thousand men to a thousand affidavits?
> A. Yes, sir; I put a thousand names to a thousand affidavits.
> Q. Without any authority from these men?
> A. Yes, sir; for many of the men were men of straw.
>
> By Mr. HILL:
>
> Q. You did not know there were such men?
> A. I did not know as there were. They were taken from the old poll-books.
> Q. They might have been dead, or have moved away?
> A. Yes, sir.
>
> By Mr. WARMOTH:
>
> Q. You say Prescott signed them in blank?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. You signed thirteen hundred and fourteen, including the three hundred and one?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. Did General Sypher know of all this?

A. Yes, sir; I did it under his orders.
Q. How did you go to Plaquemines?
A. I went in a steam-launch belonging to the Government.
Q. Who got it for you?
A. General Sypher.
Q. Did Mr. Packard have anything to do with it?
A. I do not know. General Sypher got it or controlled it.

Many of these false certificates the committee say they believe were gotten up by one of the very men whom the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] now proposes to swear in as a member of this House.

But the Senate investigating committee go on to say:

But it has been claimed before your committee that a decision of the supreme court of Louisiana, rendered since this investigation commenced, has determined that the Lynch board was the legal returning board at the time it pretended to canvass the votes; and it is urged that a wholesome regard for the rights of the State precludes the Senate from investigating this subject back of that decision; that the canvassers were a board of officers created by the State law, and that the decision of the supreme court having determined that the Lynch board was the legal board, the United States is estopped by that decision and the canvass made by that board. To this there are three answers:

First. The supreme court, in the case referred to, is understood not to have had any testimony before it showing the character of the proceedings by the Lynch board, which testimony is before your committee very fully. Fraud vitiates everything, and it is certain that no court, upon the testimony before your committee, could hold the canvass by that board to be valid.

Second. In the opinion of your committee the supreme court had no jurisdiction of the case in which they made their decision. The judgments of every court, the most exalted in character, are absolutely void if rendered without jurisdiction. But this point will be considered more fully hereafter.

Third. But for the interference of Judge Durell in the matter of this State election, a matter wholly beyond his jurisdiction, the McEnery government would to-day have been the de-facto government of the State. Judge Durell interposed the Army of the United States between the people of Louisiana and the only government which has the semblance of regularity, and the result of this has been to establish the Kellogg government, so far as that State now has any government. For the United States to interfere in a State election, and, by the employment of troops, set up a governor and Legislature without a shadow of right, and then to refuse redress of the wrong upon the ground that to grant relief would be interfering with the rights of the State, is a proposition difficult to utter with a grave countenance. Besides, it is impossible to determine to what extent the supreme court may have been influenced in rendering this decision by the fact that the Kellogg government, the creation of the Lynch board, had already been established, and the expectation that it would be sustained by Federal authority.

That is all I have time to read now. But the report from beginning to end proves that the board which certified to the election of these men never was a legal board of canvassers. The law of 1870 provided that the governor, the lieutenant-governor, the secretary of state, with Lynch and Anderson added, should be the returning board. Pinchback and Anderson were candidates for office and could not act. Bovee was secretary of state; Warmoth had suspended him and appointed Herron in his place, but the supreme court of Louisiana decided that Herron was not secretary of state and could not be, and restored Bovee to his place.

In Bovee's case, decided 2d December, 1872, the supreme court maintained that the suspension of Bovee, and all pretext of authority in Herron, terminated on the adjournment of the Legislature, in March, 1872; that neither the constitution nor any statute made provision for or gave any sanction to the suspension of Bovee, and that his exclusion from the office was an active, arbitrary violation of his legal and constitutional rights. Herron excluded Bovee, and compelled Bovee to resort to the judicial tribunals for redress. So that, in the judgment of the supreme court, from the period of the adjournment of the Legislature in March, 1872, Herron was an active, arbitrary violator of the legal and constitutional rights of Bovee; and during that whole period Bovee was of right legally secretary of state, and Herron was merely an active, arbitrary violator of Bovee's rights, usurping, without authority or the appearance of authority, the office from which Bovee had not been, and could not have been, removed by the governor.

The court went on to say, that "if the governor, in case of the suspension of a secretary of state from the performance of the duties of his office, would have, on general principles, the right to appoint a person to discharge the duties of secretary of state, upon which we express no opinion, the person so appointed would be clothed only with ministerial duties, such as arise in the usual routine of office business. * * * The person charged with the ministerial duties of the secretary of state, during his suspension from office, is without power to remove from office, much less without the power to appoint to office an assistant secretary of state, for the reason that he himself is not secretary of state.

"The appointment of Fairfax to the office of assistant secretary of state by Herron is, therefore, nugatory and without effect." (24 Annual, 433.)

Herron afterward assumed to act as secretary of state in spite of the decision of the supreme court, and united with Lynch and two other men, Longstreet and Hawkins, appointed by themselves, in making a return which had no more validity than if it had been made by the gentleman from Massachusetts or myself. But, again, the law of 1870, which authorized those five gentlemen to act as canvassers, was repealed by an act signed by Governor Warmoth on the 20th of November, 1872, which act the courts have upheld, and, on full hearing, decided as having rendered all further action by the old boards null and void.

The Louisiana committee, in their report, state the effect of this law well. They say:

He (Governor Warmoth) chose to sign it on the 20th of November, 1872, after the election had been held, and before the returns had been canvassed, compiled, and promulgated. It became a law from the date of the signing; and it swept out of existence the act of 16th March, 1870. The signing of the act, at that date, may or may not have been a wise or prudent exercise of the discretion vested in the executive by the constitution; but what power or authority in the State could call in question his absolute right to sign it at any time after it was presented to him? No argument from any supposed inconvenience, either to the public or individuals, could diminish or prevent the effect of this law. Criminals have been discharged and have gone unwhipped of justice because of the repeal, before sentence, of the statutes under which they were tried and convicted; and the Supreme Court of the United States was arrested in the performance of its high duties, in the celebrated McArdle case, after full argument, and while the court was deliberating, by the passage of an act of Congress repealing the law under which the court had jurisdiction. It is too well settled—it is too clearly the law to be questioned—that "when an act of the Legislature is repealed it must be considered, except as to transactions past and closed, as if it had never existed."

ORGANIZATION OF CONGRESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee on the part of the House, appointed to join a similar committee on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have organized and are ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make, have discharged that duty, and he answered that he would send in a message immediately.

LOUISIANA CONTESTED ELECTION—AGAIN.

Mr. BECK. The board of usurpers had to admit, when sworn, that the certificates of the Pinchback returns (so called) were made up from newspaper reports, fabricated certificates, and other illegal materials, without any valid returns, as required by law, having been either presented to or examined by them. I have already shown that these two boards, the Lynch board and the Warmoth board, had a controversy in the court, and after the law of November 20, 1872, was passed, the court decided that neither board was in existence.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his private secretary.

LOUISIANA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES—AGAIN.

Mr. BECK, (resuming.) Then, if it be true, and there is no disputing the truth of the statement, that the law of November 20, 1872, repealed the law under which these boards could act, all the returns now made use of to establish a prima-facie case here are void. If it be true, and I have the record here to establish that fact, that the courts of Louisiana decided that both of these boards were out of existence, then any returns they might afterward make would be void and of no effect. If it be the fact that Herron was not secretary of state of Louisiana, and he could be upon the returning-board only because he was such secretary of state and as such secretary, then Herron and Lynch, claiming to constitute a quorum of such board, could not add other members or make returns. I have shown by the decisions of the supreme court of Louisiana that Bovee, and not Herron, was the secretary of state, and that all Herron's acts, as such, were null and void.

These are the facts that have to be gone into, and which must be examined in determining the prima-facie case; because both sets of certificates are precisely alike on their face. Beyond all that, as the committee of the Senate has shown, the United States court interfered to prevent any one from making returns, because the bona-fide returns would show that men claiming to be democrats and liberal republicans were elected, and that McEnery, and not Kellogg, was the governor of the State.

This, perhaps, is not the time to do it; if it was I could bring before this House telegrams from the Attorney-General of the United States, telegrams sent by order of the President, telegrams from the marshal, from Mr. Casey, and others, to the President, that are of themselves utterly subversive of good government, arbitrary, tyrannical, and in violation of every principle of republican liberty. But I will not do it now; I may do it hereafter, if I have the opportunity, and a proper occasion should be presented.

I have shown briefly what was done under the orders of the United States court, in regard to the judge of which court the Judiciary Committee of this House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] being a member thereof, reported that the resolution looking to his impeachment should be continued and further investigated, in consequence of the violent presumptions raised as to his flagrant violations of his known duty as a judicial officer of the United States.

Pinchback, I repeat, could not be governor under the laws of Louisiana, and the record so shows. He had been a State senator for the previous term. His term expired on the 4th of November, 1872. At the called session of December 9, 1872, when he was called to the chair as presiding officer of the senate, he was a private citizen; his office of State senator was gone. Yet the bogus legislature, under Federal dictation, called him to the chair, impeached Warmoth, made Pinchback governor, kept him there through the marshals of the United States and by the Army of the United States stationed at the doors, and by allowing only such persons to be sworn in, or even to enter, as the marshals placed there would admit, excluding everybody else. And then this creature, whose certificate is read here and relied upon as prima-facie evidence to put three men on this floor, was made to give whatever certificate his masters required. The record will show that Pinchback was no more governor of the State of Louisiana than I am; that the legislature set up there was set up by orders from Washington and by Federal bayonets, and not by the will of the people. The committee, of which Judge Campbell, once United States circuit judge, was a member, in their report speak on this subject as follows:

On the day of the 9th of December, Pinchback went into the senate thus empanneled under the judicial process, and took the presidency. The city postmaster, Lowell, now under accusation before the authorities of the United States for embezzlement and larceny, was selected to preside over the house of representatives. An impeachment (a mockery of the statutes of the State) was improvised against the governor, and with the aid of force Pinchback assumed the office of the governor of the State. At this date Pinchback did not legally hold any civil office within the State. His office of senator in the Legislature had expired on the 4th of November, and his successor had been elected. The constitution of the State does not know of a governor or lieutenant-governor who has not been elected by the people. But it ordains: "That the general assembly may provide by law for the case of removal, impeachment, death, resignation, disability, or refusal to qualify, of both the governor or lieutenant-governor, declaring what officer shall act as governor; and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed, or the remainder of the term." Where there is a vacancy or disability affecting both the governor and lieutenant-governor, the office must be filled by some other officer of the State, who shall have been previously designated by law. Pinchback, at the time that he usurped the office of governor, was merely a private citizen, not entitled to a place in the senate, or authorized to interfere in its proceedings. No constitution could be more explicit.

The record will further show that the returns Lynch and his co-conspirators profess to have made—I might say were conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity—were forgeries of the blackest dye. And the record also shows that many of the forgeries were committed by one of the men now seeking a seat here. Our own records show that the electoral vote of Louisiana was rejected by this House and the Senate, though certified to with all the forms of law, because of the frauds therein. The reward of Pinchback has been an election to the Senate of the United States. And while the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is moving now to swear him in as a member of this House, Pinchback himself is moving in the Senate of the United States to be sworn in there as Senator-elect from the State of Louisiana. I know that many rights are accorded to men BECAUSE of race, color, or previous condition; but I never knew that even a negro could be both a Representative in Congress and a Senator at the same time. But such is the hot haste of the gentleman from Massachusetts that this House is asked to swear him in here now, when he is not asking it, but is pressing his claim to a seat in the other end of the Capitol.

Now if you, gentlemen of the republican party, propose to be true to yourselves and to your constituents, to have none but representative men passing laws to bind your people, you will send this case to your own Committee on Elections, where all the facts can be investigated and the truth made to appear. But it is because these men who are thus fraudulently returned by a fraudulent governor and fraudulent returning-board, under laws that were repealed, dare not submit themselves to your scrutiny if the facts are developed, that this pressure is made now upon this House.

I am glad to have had even thirty minutes to run over, in this rambling and cursory manner, the leading facts in this case and to call attention to them. Republican government depends upon your action. Will you confess to your constituents and the country that you intend to slip these men in here under these false certificates, and quietly instruct your Committee on Elections not to report until the end of the session, and then under the pressure of business keep the truly elected men out of their places? No, gentlemen; you dare not go before the intelligent communities you represent and avow that to be the fact; your vote to admit them now will prove that to be your intention, however you may deny it.

Is this House to stultify itself by voting that they believe the facts set forth in these certificates are true, when every member knows that they are fraudulent and false from beginning to end? Are gentlemen so afraid of the truth that they dare not allow a committee, which will, of course, be at least two-thirds republican, to report upon the facts? Are they afraid that the country will learn the atrocities perpetrated in Louisiana by the aid of Federal bayonets under executive orders? Do they hope to hide these misdeeds by quietly swearing in the defeated candidates without inquiry? If that is not your purpose you will let the case go to the committee and have all the facts ascertained and inquired into. You will do as the Senate has done—keep out the man who claims a seat there as well as here, until you ascertain whether there was a representative government in Louisiana at all, and whether the certificate of Mr. Pinchback is not waste paper as much as if signed only by me or any of you, because "fraud vitiates everything."

If there was fraud in Pinchback's election, in the election or organization of the Legislature, or the action had under it; if there was force and duress by Federal authorities keeping out duly elected men and putting in men not elected, and putting in Pinchback for special purposes, then this Congress would disgrace itself before the country and the world if they were to allow men to come in here now, with all these facts made known to them by their own Judiciary Committee, by the committee of the Senate, and by the record before the House, and not allow the facts to be made known or even inquired into.

I will only add, in proof of what I have said, the statement of General Longstreet, one of the Lynch board, when he ascertained the fraud which had been perpetrated on him and his colleagues:

The undersigned, members of the returning-board for the general election held in Louisiana on the 4th day of November, 1872, do hereby state and certify that, in canvassing the returns for the first congressional district, it was found that Effingham Lawrence, esq., received a majority of the votes cast for Congressman for the first district, and that the returns were made for promulgation accordingly; that just prior to promulgation a large number of affidavits (say 1,700) of persons claiming to have been deprived of their rights as suffragans were presented to this board, expressing the design and purpose of the parties to vote for Hon. J. H. Sypher for Congress for that district; that said affidavits were counted as legal votes in favor of said Hon. J. H. Sypher, which gave said Sypher a majority of some seventy votes over said Effingham Lawrence, esq., and that the promulgation of the election returns were made accordingly; that of the 1,700 affidavits so counted, 1,314 were brought to the board of returning officers and presented by one Jaques; that since the promulgation of said returns, said Jaques has, in his evidence before the United States Senate Committee on Privileges, sworn that about 1,000 of the affidavits were fraudulent; that these frauds seem, in our opinion, to justify the claim of Effingham Lawrence, esq., to his election to Congress from the first district by a majority of over 900 votes.

We cheerfully make this statement in justice to one of our good citizens and a republican candidate on the fusion ticket.

JAMES LONGSTREET.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., March 5, 1873.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual message of the President of the United States; which was read as follows:

[It will be found in the proceedings of the Senate.]

Mr. DAWES. I move that the message just read, together with the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That twenty thousand extra copies of the President's annual message and accompanying documents be printed.

The SPEAKER. This resolution, under the law, will be referred to the Committee on Printing when appointed.

COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.]

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the title of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be changed to the Committee of War Claims; and all claims growing out of any war in which the United States has been engaged shall be referred to said committee.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and adopted.

Mr. FRYE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BECK. I ask the consent of the House that I may hand to the reporters, to be incorporated in my remarks, some extracts from decisions and reports which I had not time to read.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. How many pages?

Mr. BECK. I doubt whether the extracts I wish to print will make more than a column of the RECORD. They are documents to which I referred but had not time to read. I merely want consent to hand them to the reporters to be published with my remarks.

There being no objection leave was granted.

LOUISIANA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES—AGAIN.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, a very large part of the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] struck me (I say it with all respect and deference to him) as entirely outside the question before this House. Whether the gentlemen embraced in the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] and whose right to seats is in question here, were or were not duly elected—whether there were or were not frauds committed by them or on their behalf which should vitiate their election and exclude them finally from seats here—are not questions for this House to pass upon to-day. Those are questions to be determined hereafter upon evidence before the proper committee, to be submitted to the House upon proofs for its decision, and then to be passed upon; and if the facts shall then be found to sustain the charges which the gentleman from Kentucky makes so vigorously, I apprehend there will be no question as to the result.

But it is not for this House to anticipate such proof. It is not for this House to exclude men who come here with a fair right upon the record to their seats, on charges however forcibly made or from however reputable a source they may come, until those charges have been investigated and established. The only question here is, whether there is before this House proper evidence under the statute, binding upon the House as matter of law, entitling any of these gentlemen to seats upon this floor pending the question of a contest as to the validity of their election, if such contest shall be made.

Let us see how the case stands. The gentlemen named in this resolution are certified by credentials presented here, and signed by the governor of Louisiana on the 30th of December, to have been duly elected as members of this House. Their credentials, I understand, are in perfect form in every respect. The attestation of the governor and the seal of the State show their title to seats here by a precisely similar ecor d to that which entitles every member here to the seat he occupies to-day. If that record is not impeached by something upon its face, or by a record of equal force and validity contradicting it, it is the end of the question as to the right of these men to be sworn in here.

And if that right is established will it be contended that we are to go back of it here, to assume to say in advance, "Charges are made of irregularity, of fraud, in the election, in the returns; and on those charges we will exclude these men." If that may be done, the right of every member here is liable to precisely the same challenge, and indeed any member may be kept out of his seat on a similar charge whenever any other member may see fit to advance it.

I do not understand that the regularity in form of Governor Pinchback's certificate of the 30th of December is questioned. But I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to make one proposition which would, perhaps, strike at the very root of the validity of these credentials; and that is, that Mr. Pinchback was not the governor of Louisiana, and therefore credentials certified by him cannot be admitted here as evidence of the right to a seat. I think I did not misunderstand the gentleman from Kentucky. [Mr. BECK made a gesture of assent.] Well, now, that is certainly a very astounding proposition to make to the House, in view of the facts historically known, and attested by the judgments of the tribunals of Louisiana. From the 9th of December, 1872, to the 31st of the same month, Mr. Pinchback was certainly the de-facto governor of that State. He was recognized as its governor; he held the office, performed its duties, and was in fact the actual and acting governor, as completely as the governor of any other State of the Union. This certainly should be enough upon that question; but it is not all. He was not only the de-facto governor of Louisiana, but he was its de-jure governor by the judgment of the highest judicial tribunal of the State. Bear in mind that the conducting of elections of members of this House, the canvassing of the votes, the making of the returns, all the steps and all the evidences by which the right of a member to his seat here is determined, are of necessity left to the State tribunals. No Federal machinery regulates the conduct of such elections or the determination of their results. Therefore, if it is claimed that the State tribunal, the State executive, or any board of State officers charged with a duty under the law, is not the lawful tribunal, officer, or board, that is a question to be determined solely by the judgment of the State tribunals. In the case of Governor Pinchback this identical question was passed upon by the supreme court of Louisiana in an opinion which I send to the desk and ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appointment was made by P. B. S. Pinchback, who signs the commission as acting governor of the State of Louisiana. Was he acting governor of the State?

We have no doubt of the fact. He was elected president of the senate in December, 1871, after the death of Lieutenant-Governor Dunn. As such he became lieutenant-governor during the unexpired term of Oscar J. Dunn. Section 1560 of the digest of the statutes of this State provides that, "in case of the vacancy in the office of governor the lieutenant-governor shall be governor. In case of vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor the senate shall elect a president, who shall be lieutenant-governor."

The law does not say, during his senatorial term, but that he "shall be lieutenant-governor."

Can it be pretended that under those circumstances the office of governor would have become vacant by the expiration of the term for which P. B. S. Pinchback had been elected senator? We think not. (Page 142.) He was lieutenant-governor when Governor Warmoth was impeached by the house of representatives. During his impeachment the governor was suspended, and the "powers and duties of the office" devolved upon the lieutenant-governor. (Constitution of Louisiana, art. 53.)

Mr. HALE, of New York. Then Governor Pinchback was not only de-facto governor of Louisiana, but de jure its governor by the judgment of its highest tribunal. His certificate, therefore, of the 30th of December, 1872, is conclusive, unless, as I have said, it can be impeached by something upon the face of the record which itself shows, or by record of equal authority.

Now comes in the argument. Here are two conflicting certificates that we have here a certificate of one governor of the State of Louisiana bearing a different date and showing the election of other persons in the place of those named in the resolution before the House. Let us look for a moment at those credentials so called, to see whether they are, upon their face, entitled to any weight or regard whatever. The election was in November. The returning-board is required by law, by the statutes of Louisiana, to meet within ten days after the closing of the election, and to continue their canvass until it is completed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Will not the gentleman from Massachusetts give me ten minutes more?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I hope the House will extend the gentleman's time ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] yields for ten minutes longer to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire the House will extend the time for ten minutes so that it may not be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be settled at the expiration of the gentleman's own time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman can take ten minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in the power of the House to extend the gentleman's time, and it is in his power to apportion it.

Mr. HALE, of New York. The canvassing board met at the time provided by law and proceeded with the canvassing, and their canvassing was completed on the 16th of December. Until after that canvassing was completed there was no power or authority in any executive of the State of Louisiana to grant a certificate of election. That would not only follow in the very nature of the case, but the statute itself is express, that, as soon as possible after the expiration of the time for making the returns, the governor shall make his certificate, &c. On the 16th of December, when the canvass was completed, Henry C. Warmoth was not the governor of the State of Louisiana. On the 8th or 9th of December he had been impeached by the assembly or house of representatives of that State, and, by the constitutional provision, after he was impeached by that house he was suspended from office and was no longer governor.

Now there is presented here a certificate bearing date on the 4th of December—a date which has become somewhat historical in the State of Louisiana, upon which it would seem that Governor Warmoth was excessively busy in signing commissions, certificates, and returns—a certificate was presented on behalf of Governor Warmoth, dated the 4th of December, showing three or four persons elected in place of these. That was twelve days before the canvassing board had completed its work, or determined as provided by statute who were elected to Congress. Now, one thing is certain: if Governor Warmoth did assume on the 4th of December to grant such a certificate as that, it was an act in violation of the statute, in utter disregard, not only of law, but of the rules of ordinary common sense and evidence, and is utterly void. He could not, under the statute, grant a certificate until after the canvass had been made. He could not, in common sense and decency, do such a thing; and I have no doubt, when it comes to be investigated, that he either never did make it on that day but made it long after he had ceased to be governor, or that the certificate itself will be proved to be a forgery. But, assuming it to have been made on the day on which it purports to have been made, it is utterly illegal under the statute, as I have said.

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. HALE, of New York. The gentleman must excuse me. I cannot yield. I have but a short time. I would have yielded to the gentleman with great pleasure if my time had permitted.

On the very question of the power of the governor to certify the election of State officers under precisely the same law officers elected at the same election on the same day, the supreme court of the State of Louisiana gave a decision, of which I ask the Clerk to read an extract.

The Clerk read as follows:

They claim to have been elected at the general election of 1872. They never were declared elected by the board of returning officers; neither have they been commissioned. The documents called commissions, purporting to have been issued by Governor Warmoth on the 4th of December, 1872, are absolute nullities, having been issued in violation of law. This we had occasion to decide in the case of Collins vs. Knobloch, and in other cases decided at the last term of this court, at New Orleans. We will notice, judicially, that no one claiming an office by election in November, 1872, could have been commissioned, except by Acting Governor Pinchback or by Governor Kellogg, inasmuch as Governor Warmoth was suspended by being impeached by the house of representatives before the promulgation of the returns of the elections by the returning board, and that his trial was discontinued in consequence of the expiration of his term of office.

Mr. HALE, of New York. But the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] says that the canvassing board known as the Lynch board, on whose return the certificate of Governor Pinchback is based, was not the legal canvassing board; and he says there were three other canvassing boards, impliedly, as I understand, three other boards, which canvassed the votes for Representatives in Congress. I think the gentleman is in error, and that there was but one other board which ever attempted to canvass these votes. That board made its report as late as the 17th January, 1873, seventeen days after Governor Warmoth's term of office for which he was elected had expired, and much longer after he had gone out of office by the impeachment. There is nothing to show that any other canvassing board than this board, which the gentleman calls the "Lynch board," ever passed upon the case. And it is certain that when the records shall be reached it will be found that none ever did on whose action Governor Warmoth could have certified. But the court of that State has also passed upon this question, and I send up to the desk a decision involving this identical question of the legality of the Lynch board. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Our conclusion is that, at the institution of this suit, Warmoth, Herron, Lynch, Longstreet, and Hawkins were the legal board of returning officers, under the law of 1870, (No. 100,) for the election on the 4th day of November, 1872; that the defendants, Wharton, Hatch, and DaPonte, were intruders; that the injunction against them properly issued; that the act No. 89, of 20th November, 1872, did not have the effect of abolishing the said board of returning officers, who met on the 12th November, 1872, and were, by the first-mentioned law, required to "continue in session until" the returns of said election were completed; and that the judge of the eighth district court for the parish of Orleans erred in dissolving the said injunction and dismissing this suit.

It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the board of returning-officers, composed of H. C. Warmoth, F. J. Herron, John Lynch, James Longstreet, and Jacob Hawkins, was the legal board of returning-officers of elections of the State of Louisiana, and it is decreed that the judgment of the court a qua be avoided and reversed, so far as the appellant is concerned, and that the defendants, appellees, pay costs of this appeal.

Mr. HALE, of New York. That was the board on whose return was based the certificate of Governor Pinchback on which these gentlemen claim seats.

Mr. BECK. Was not the appeal in that case made by a man of the name of Field, who had not a particle of interest in the case, and was not before the court below; and was not that decision the very one which the Senate committee declared to be null and void?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I am not advised of that at all.

Mr. BECK. That is the truth.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I only speak of what is shown by the decision of the court of highest record of the State, and I do not think that it can be impeached by general charges of any such character.

Mr. DEWITT. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I must be excused just now. There is complete demonstration of the whole case. The returns were canvassed by a lawful board, returned by a lawful board to the office of the secretary of state, attested by the lawful governor of the State, and sent here as the credentials of these claimants for admission to seats, and certainly entitling them to the prima-facie right to the seats. I will now hear my colleague's question.

Mr. DEWITT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether there is any evidence on the record here before this House that that canvassing board did not cease from its labors until the 16th of December?

Mr. HALE, of New York. Certainly there is. It is certain that their canvass was closed on the 16th for the first time.

That is the whole case, and, as I have said, it is a demonstration. Now I submit to the House that on such a showing as this, it is a gross and monstrous injustice to exclude these men from their seats.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER.]

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution assumes that the gentlemen named in it come here with an undisputed certificate from the local authorities of Louisiana; and we would infer from the resolution that the Clerk had been derelict in his duty in not having added their names to the roll; and yet the Clerk told us on yesterday that he had before him two sets of certificates, each signed by a different person claiming to be governor, and issued by absolutely different authorities, between which he was unable to discriminate. How, then, without throwing aside one of these certificates, can the House determine who has a prima-facie right to be seated? Now, of these two certificates, that signed by Warmoth as governor is prior in point of date to the certificate signed by Pinchback; is absolutely regular on its face; bears attached to it the great seal of the State; declares in effect that the canvass of votes had been made, for it states what had been the result; is countersigned by the secretary of state, and is indeed identical in substance and form with the certificates upon which the members from the State of Louisiana in the Forty-second Congress were admitted to their seats in this House.

If, then, this House is to act only upon the certificates before it, who can be entitled to the seats except the men holding the certificates of Warmoth, the acknowledged governor of the State, bearing the great seal of the State, and being in the form which the House has heretofore recognized? But if we are to go outside of these papers; if we are to inquire whether Warmoth was right in the certificate which he gave, the case ceases to be a prima-facie case at all, and becomes a case upon the merits, into which, therefore, we should inquire before we decide.

My colleague from New York [Mr. HALE] says it is astounding that the gentleman from Kentucky should challenge the certificates of Pinchback on the ground that he was not governor. And he brings before us the decision of the supreme court of Louisiana, which declares he (Pinchback) succeeded Warmoth as acting governor. He says, too, the tribunals of Louisiana are competent to pass upon the laws of Louisiana, and that we should abide by their decisions. Undoubtedly they may determine for Louisiana what must be received there for law. But this House is the judge of the qualifications of its own members. And, sir, it is a historical fact, notorious all over the country, that there were during the time of these certificates two distinct legislatures and governments claiming to exist in Louisiana. If we are to decide upon the certificates before us alone, then I repeat that the one first in time, given when Warmoth was, beyond question, governor, must prevail over the later certificates given by Pinchback, whom we say never was governor at all.

If, on the other hand, we are to go behind the certificates, then this ceases to be a question of prima facies, and should be referred to the Committee on Elections to be inquired into.

As to rejecting that one of these certificates made by Warmoth at a date when he was indisputably governor, and accepting that made by Pinchback, whose right has always been disputed, and admitting these Pinchback contestants to seats without inquiry, it should be remembered that this decision is a decision of the Pinchback party court, pre-arranged for and foreseen, and which, like Pinchback's right, has been challenged from the day it was uttered, and is a decision which should not control us for a moment, much less be taken as so conclusive as to admit the Pinchback party to seats here without scrutiny.

It is a historical fact, as my colleague must know, that that decision was before the Committee of the Senate on Privileges and Elections, which considered the subject at the last session of Congress; a committee, the House should remember, composed in large part of republican Senators; a committee composed of Senators CARPENTER, LOGAN, ALCORN, MORTON, Trumbull, and Hill as members; and yet that committee declared, all but Senator MORTON concurring, that this decision of the court of Louisiana was one made without authority or jurisdiction.

No man in this House, when he comes, then, to judge of this question, of which the House is the sole and absolute judge, can be bound by that decision of the supreme court of Louisiana. Still less, under the circumstances, should we bow to it without inquiry.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York whether it is not a historical fact that, at the time Pinchback issued his certificates, his claim to act as governor did not arise out of the fact that he was acting as state senator when Governor Warmoth was impeached?

Mr. POTTER. Undoubtedly; but that is only one of the defects connected with the right of the Pinchback party; defects which would take, not ten minutes, but hours, to properly expose.

Mr. NIBLACK. Is it not also a historical fact that Pinchback testified before a committee of the Senate last winter that, at the time he acted as senator, he knew he was not entitled to so act?

Mr. POTTER. I so understand it, and that here, in the Senate report, is the record of that testimony.

Mr. NIBLACK. Did he not admit before the committee of the Senate that he was not entitled to act as senator when he claimed to become governor; but that he only assumed to act as senator for the good of his party?

Mr. POTTER. I have no time to expose the utter want of right in the Pinchback government. I answer my friend that I believe, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has said, the Pinchback government was worthy of its name, and a fraud and imposition from the beginning to the end.

Mr. NIBLACK. Is it not also a historical fact that Pinchback's time as state senator had expired in November, and that he had no right to act as governor when he issued the certificate in question by virtue of his office as senator? That hence he was a mere squatter, having no decent claim to being even a de-facto governor?

Mr. POTTER. Yes, Mr. Speaker; all that is so, notwithstanding which my colleague [Mr. HALE] thinks it is astounding that any one should question the authority of the supreme court of Louisiana on this subject; but not only did the Senate committee I have referred to question it, as I have stated, but when the two Houses of Congress came in February last to decide in joint convention whether the vote of Louisiana for President should be counted, they also questioned it. I think that the decision of the joint convention was erroneous in not receiving the vote for the Greeley electors certified by Warmoth. I think that vote should have been received; but although they did refuse to receive that vote, both Houses of Congress agreed in joint convention, without debate, and notwithstanding this decision of the supreme court of Louisiana, to reject the vote certified from the Lynch board, the board upon whose return the Pinchback certificates rest. I send to the Clerk's desk the declaration of the joint convention, a similar resolution having been adopted in each House of Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, in the judgment of this House, none of the returns reported by the tellers as the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana should be counted.

Mr. POTTER. On this question there was a concurrence of the two Houses that the vote of Louisiana should not be counted. Both the House and the Senate having before them certificates based on the returns of this board of the Pinchback party, the Lynch board, whose action we are now asked to accept without inquiry, refused to recognize them as valid or to allow the vote, for errors so certified, to be counted.

The Louisiana question was also referred to the Judiciary Committee of this House, and in the closing hours of the session they made a report which I hold in my hand, in which they say that they had not time to consider the legality and propriety of Judge Durell's action in upholding the Lynch board, as to which they say the gravest doubts existed, but recommended a continuation of the investigation; so that both Houses of Congress, the Senate by the formal action of its Committee on Elections and Privileges, and the House by the action of the Judiciary Committee, have declared that at least grave doubts exist whether any of the persons holding the Pinchback certificates are entitled to be regarded as persons properly chosen to office. And yet, if there be doubt as to the validity of the Pinchback certificates, Mr. Sypher and his compeers, instead of being at once seated in the House as proposed by the resolution before the House, should at least stand aside until the grave doubts thus suggested can be inquired into.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. DAWES.) The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has five minutes of his time left.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I had forty-five minutes, and I yielded thirty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. According to the information of the Chair the gentleman had thirty-five minutes twenty minutes before two o'clock, and it is now ten minutes past two o'clock.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I then ask the unanimous consent of the House that my time be extended thirty minutes, so that I may be able to give to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] ten minutes, and also to yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER.]

No objection was made, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. POTTER. No one, Mr. Speaker, can in ten minutes, or indeed short of hours, go fully into all the merits of this Louisiana question. I do not seek to go into those merits at all; I only call attention to the grave differences that exist about them to show the House it ought not to assume the Pinchback party to be right without inquiry. Here let me observe my colleague was in error in saying the returns made by the Lynch and Warmoth boards were the only returns made. On the contrary, there was, besides, the DeFeriet board which made returns, and made them before the date of the Warmoth certificates. For, as gentlemen will remember, there were not only two boards arising out of the division of the original board of returns into two parts, known as the Warmoth and Lynch boards, respectively, but there was, in addition to that, a board known as the DeFeriet board, the Legislature having, by its act of November 20, done away with both of the other boards and established a new board. Now the Senate committee, in their record, thought not only that the Lynch board was not a legal board, but it thought also that the Warmoth board was a legal board, unless both boards are to be regarded as superseded by the DeFeriet board of returns. Yet not only the Warmoth board, but the DeFeriet board as well, returned the election of the persons who have brought certificates here signed by Warmoth.

I send to the Clerk's desk to be read the views of Mr. Trumbull, one of the Senate committee, who, in the respect to which I allude, summarizes the views of the Senate committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Trumbull agrees with the majority, that under the statute the Warmoth-Wharton board was the legal and rightful board to canvass the official returns; that it was illegally restrained by United States District Judge Durell from making such canvass; that by the election law, approved November 20, 1872, all previous returning-boards were abolished; that the DeFeriet-Wiltz board was authorized under that act to complete the canvass which had been begun under the Wharton board; that said DeFeriet board did canvass the official returns, and the result was duly proclaimed by the governor December 4; that the Lynch returning-board never had authority to examine the official returns, and never had any to examine; that neither Kellogg nor any of the persons returned as elected to State offices by the Lynch board were elected, according to the official returns.

Mr. POTTER. But that is not all. The House ought to know that the board making the returns upon which were issued the certificates signed by Pinchback was not only unlawful, but, whether lawful or not, never had any votes before them to canvass at all. They made up their returns, which we are now asked to accept without question, from supposed copies, or newspaper statements, or upon their own estimates, having, I repeat, no votes before them at all. That there may be no mistake in regard to this, I beg the House to hear what was the testimony of one of that very Lynch board, Mr. Bovee himself, before the Senate committee. I ask gentlemen to listen to what he said in that regard, to see upon what stuff and after what frauds we are asked to receive without question the men they reported elected.

The Clerk read as follows, from the report of the Senate committee:

Conceding the board was in existence, and had full authority to canvass the eturns, it had no returns to canvass.

The returns from the parishes had been made, under the law of 1870, to the governor, and not one of them was before the Lynch board.

It was testified before your committee by Mr. Bovee himself, who participated in this canvass by the Lynch board, that they were determined to have a republican Legislature, and made their canvass to that end. The testimony abundantly establishes the fraudulent character of their canvass. In some cases they had what were supposed to be copies of the original returns, in other cases they had nothing but newspaper statements, and in other cases, where they had nothing whatever to act upon, they made an estimate, based upon their knowledge of the political complexion of the parish, of what the vote ought to have been. They also counted a large number of affidavits purporting to be sworn to by voters who had been wrongfully denied registration or the right to vote, many of which affidavits they must have known to be forgeries. It was testified by one witness that he forged over a thousand affidavits and delivered them to the Lynch board while it was in session. It is quite unnecessary to waste time in considering this part of the case; for no person can examine the testimony ever so cursorily without seeing that this pretended canvass had no semblance of integrity.

Mr. POTTER. Mark, Mr. Speaker, "had no semblance of integrity;" and yet we are now asked, not only to accept the results of such a canvass, but even to accept it without question.

If, sir, the House is to act upon the mere prima-facie evidence of the right to a seat here, then, as I have said, only those men should be admitted who hold the Warmoth certificates. If we are to go behind the certificates at all, then they should be referred to the Committee on Elections, that there it may be ascertained which, if either, is justified in law and in fact. If the men now sought to be seated here under this resolution once get in, although it may be without any determination of their ultimate right, every one of us should know that they will sit here until the end of the session, and that when a just decision has come at last to be of no practical good, they will be reported not entitled to seats.

But, beyond all that injustice, this proposition has this further significance. It is an endeavor to have this House take such action as will determine for Louisiana and the country which of these two rival governments was the lawful government, and, as such, to be maintained there. The object and purpose of this movement, as I believe, is to take advantage of a new House—a House of which the members are very largely unfamiliar with such questions—and, under the lead of the ablest and most adventurous Administration leader here, have a majority carried in favor of this apparently unimportant resolution, which, seeming to have but a temporary purpose, will in effect be a determination of this whole Louisiana question, so as to make permanent that usurpation which even a committee of a partisan Senate were constrained to declare to be absolutely without color of law.

Mr. Speaker, I have feared heretofore that the Federal Government was being permitted to absorb all the substantial powers of government in this country. But if this outrage shall be perpetrated, and these men be put into their seats on these Pinchback certificates without question or inquiry, then I shall think this Administration party has determined to absorb and to retain for itself the powers of government even at the price of a more reckless and dangerous disregard of constitutional restraints, and of the rights of the people to elect their own Representatives, than ever before.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I think that the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] is very much mistaken as to the object and purpose of those who are pressing this resolution for favorable consideration. Speaking for myself, I can say that I have no object or purpose in view other than to have this case decided just exactly as all other cases of this character have been decided that came before this House.

The gentleman from New York on yesterday stated, as I think correctly, the principle by which the House should be governed. That was, as I understand him, that when upon the face of the paper there was a prima-facie right to the seat the party should be sworn in. That I understand to be the doctrine as conceded by all parties who have discussed the question now before the House. Now let us see if there is not a clear prima-facie case in favor of the parties whose names are embraced in the joint resolution.

My friend from New York [Mr. POTTER] says that if we are going on the prima-facie case, then, as a matter of course, we must take the Warmoth certificate, because that antedated the other certificate. Now, there are two sets of certificates, both regular upon their face; the one signed by Warmoth, and bearing date December 4, 1872, and the other signed by Pinchback, and bearing date December 30, 1872. I contend that these Warmoth certificates are absolutely void. I do not pretend that we can go into the facts involved in this controversy. On the contrary, I hold that the House has no right to go into those facts. But courts of justice and this House have a right to take official cognizance of public statutes, of proclamations made by public officials under the law, and of matters of history. We have a right to take these things into consideration; they are matters that may be properly considered by us. But we have no right to go into outside facts; and it is outside facts that our friends who have antagonized this resolution have been basing their arguments upon.

Now I say that, taking into consideration simply those things which we have a right to take into consideration, it is a clear proposition that the Warmoth certificates are absolute nullities. Let us look at the statute of Louisiana for a moment. Without occupying time by having the statute read by the Clerk, I will cite an extract from it. Among other things, it provides that—

The presiding officer of this returning board shall at such meeting open, in the presence of said returning officers, the statements of the commissioners of election; and the said returning officers shall, from said statements, canvass and compile the returns of the election in duplicate. One copy of such returns they shall file in the office of secretary of state, and of one copy they shall make public proclamation.

I call attention to this language: "and of one copy they shall make public proclamation."

Then it is further provided that after this public proclamation these certificates shall be given.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the official journals containing these public proclamations. I care not which of these boards may be regarded as the legal board; the one proclamation by the one board was made on the 17th day of December; the other proclamation was made on the 30th. Now, these certificates could not legally be issued until this proclamation had been made; yet they bear date on the 4th of December. I say, then, that it is a plain proposition upon the face of these papers, of this public law, of this public proclamation of the officials of Louisiana, of which we may properly take notice, and, indeed, are bound to take notice, that these certificates bear date at a time when they could not be legally issued; and therefore they are absolutely null and void.

Then, Mr. Speaker, how stands this case? It stands just as though these certificates had never been issued—just as though so much blank paper had been sent to the Clerk of this House. The gentlemen named in this resolution have certificates which were issued at a proper time by an officer who was recognized by the Government of the United States as the governor of Louisiana, and who, as has been shown by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE,] was, under the decision of the supreme court of that State, the governor of the State de jure. Thus we have before us certificates issued in due form of law by the proper officer and at a proper time. Now, I submit to the House that there is a clear and palpable prima-facie case entitling these gentlemen to be sworn in.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in rising to close this debate I desire only to bring the House back to the exact question, and that is this: there are, in the hands of your Clerk, two sets of credentials, signed by two men who were acting and recognized as governors of Louisiana, one set of certificates being dated the 4th of December, the other the 30th of the same month. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] inquired why we should not give the prima-facie title to the elder certificate. If the question depended upon investigation, and was to be decided by oral or written evidence, I grant the gentleman would be right. But the difficulty is, as shown by the certificate of the secretary of state, which I had read from the Clerk's desk, that there were no records in the secretary's office, as provided by law, on which a certificate could be issued, until the 16th day of December; yet the certificates of Governor Warmoth were issued on the 4th. And then the supreme court came in and declared that all these certificates dated on the 4th of December were nullities. But I invoke no decision of the supreme court of Louisiana, however much respect I may be disposed to pay to such decisions. I simply urge the impossibility of any of the Warmoth certificates being anything more than a nullity; and I am treating those certificates with great respect when I say that the seal of the State has been put upon them inadvertently.

But there is another question. The claimants named in my resolution come here with regular certificates, signed by the acting governor and attested by the broad seal of the State, after the returns had been duly canvassed on the 16th of December, and the result duly promulgated in the official record on the 17th of December. Thus the certificates are regularly given, and there has been nothing shown to the contrary; so that the prima-facie case of these claimants is made out.

Mr. DEWITT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. DEWITT. Where did the gentleman get the certificate that he speaks of—the certificate of the secretary of state of Louisiana?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It was sent here under the broad seal of the State.

Mr. DEWITT. Sent to whom?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. To the Clerk of the House.

Mr. DEWITT. Does the law recognize any right, on the part of the secretary of state of Louisiana, to send a certificate of that kind to the Clerk of the House, to impeach the certificate of the governor?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The law recognizes the right of everybody to tell the truth, [laughter,] and that is all this officer has done. Now, then, I say there is a prima-facie case in behalf of these claimants. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] attacks this position. How? First, by bringing the best authority he could, in my judgment—a speech that I made in this House last January. [Laughter.] But upon what was I then speaking? I was speaking upon the condition of affairs in that State upon the 1st day of January, when the new legislature had met, when the Kellogg government and the McEnery government, the Lynch board and the DeFeriet board, were all claiming authority, and when all manner of confusion was reigning there. All this that I am now bringing before the House took place under the old government, which expired on the 30th of December. From that time anarchy ruled; and, in view of that condition of affairs, I thought it best to remit the whole matter to the people. I do not take back one idea or one word of that speech; but I will say, by way of episode, that time is the great healer of all things; and however much anarchy there may have been in that State a year ago, a settled condition of things, substantially, in respect to the government of Louisiana, has since come about as the product of time. But I should doubt very much the expediency of overhauling that now, when there are thousands upon thousands of interests involved. But that question is not up here. Let me repeat again: All we are now dealing with are the acts of the government elected in 1868, which expired December 31, 1872. The new government is more or less wrong.

Now, sir, one word more. I call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to the fact that he has traveled out of the record. He has talked about Federal bayonets. He has told us about the frauds. He has told us about the report of the committee of the Senate—the committee of the Senate were examining into the action of the government of Kellogg and McEnery, which took place after the 1st day of January, and not into what was done before. And therefore his remarks are not at all pertinent to this case, and I do not choose to follow him. I thank God there were Federal bayonets, and there were Federal officers, and that there was a President of the United States with nerve enough to command peace and stop bloodshed in New Orleans and elsewhere. The people of the United States will join with me in that prayer and thanksgiving. I heard here for six years what the people would do to us if our Government used Federal bayonets to protect the freedom of elections; but year by year there has come up a voice from the people which has been, in effect, saying, "We will give you more power and more bayonets so long as you use them for the protection of the liberties and rights of the people of the United States everywhere." [Applause.]

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, if I have the time.

Mr. BECK. The credentials of Mr. Pinchback have been filed in the United States Senate since January 20th. If he has a prima-facie case, how does it happen that he is still kept out of a seat in that body?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I shall come to that; I just took up my paper for that purpose. Mr. Pinchback was elected Senator by the new legislature that was elected at the same time that the members of Congress were elected. The legality of that legislature was, and is, in dispute. That does not touch the governor or lieutenant-governor of Louisiana, who had been elected and gone into office four years previously. Why Mr. Pinchback is here asking for leave to be sworn in, is, in my judgment, because he entertains doubts of the results in the Senate. He is elected here by the people as a Representative of the people. And, perhaps, he has another reason; he wants to get into the most numerous and highest body. [Laughter.] However that may be, he has a right to make his choice, and he does make a choice only when he takes the oath of office and is qualified.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to make an inquiry for information?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. I suppose the gentleman has risen to close the debate. My question is this: Mr. Pinchback, as I understand the information before the House, was elected as a Representative to this House?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. KASSON. And that he was subsequently elected Senator from Louisiana. It seems he has presented his credentials to that body. Now I wish to ask, if he is admitted here, whether he will not at once have the right to draw his salary from the 4th of March last, and to-morrow to resign and present his credentials to the Senate, and if admitted there to take his salary in that body from the 4th of March last?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir; and for the reason I have just explained, that the acceptance of one office vacates the other—whichever he accepts. If he accepts first here, that vacates his claim to the Senate. If he accepts in the Senate, that vacates his claim here. He cannot get two salaries at all. If he tried it I know my friend who asks the question is so careful about the salaries of members that he would take great care he should not get it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman be good enough to pledge his assistance?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Entirely so. When demagogery is the order of the day I will take a hand in it when I have nothing else to do. [Laughter.]

I desire only further to say this: The decision of the House concludes nobody. The whole case of the contestants can be referred to the Committee on Elections, and there all questions of fraud, all questions of wrong, all questions of right can be definitely settled. But what I pray the House to do is to let the people of Louisiana have a representation in this body, for there is no people on earth who need representation more than that of this State, whose rights are in a continual turmoil. Therefore I hope there will be no uncertain sound in the action of the majority of this House. It is for us to pacificate this great State, and our action here, following their legal tribunal, will do much to carry out that peace which the President by his action has commanded.

I now call for the previous question.

Mr. BECK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question is voted down, will it then be in order to move a reference to the Committee on Elections?

The SPEAKER. It would.

The previous question was seconded—ayes 133, noes 71; and the main question was ordered.

Mr. BECK. I gave notice that I would ask for a separate vote, as regards each seat. I now make that request.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I suppose the gentleman has that right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would so rule. The fate of one gentleman claiming a seat cannot be linked with that of another, in a resolution of this kind. The Clerk will read the resolution, after which the Chair will indicate the order in which the votes shall be taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That J. H. Sypher, of the first district of Louisiana; L. A. Sheldon, of the second district, and P. B. S. Pinchback, Representative at large of the said State, having the prima-facie evidence of the right to seats in this House, be admitted to take the oath, respectively.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be on that part of the resolution which declares that J. H. Sypher is entitled, on the prima-facie evidence, to be admitted to a seat in this House, as Representative of the first district of Louisiana.

Mr. ELDREDGE. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 167, nays 98, not voting 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Cotton, Crocker, Crooke, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Elliott, Farwell, Field, Fort, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene, Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kasson, Kellogg, Kelley, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McDougall, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Mellish, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pendleton, Phillips, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Saylor, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions Sheats, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Taylor, Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Wilber, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—167.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barnum, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, De Witt, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Joseph R. Hawley, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunton, Hynes, Jewett, Kendall, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Luttrell, Magee, Marshall, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, Niles, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Phelps, Pierce, Potter, Randall, Rawls, Read, Robbins, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, Sener, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Southard, Speer, Stanard, Standeford, Stone, Storm, Swann, Vance, Waldron, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Ephraim K. Wilson, Willie, Wolfe, Wood, Woodford, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—98.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banning, Corwin, Crounse, Freeman, Benjamin W. Harris, Killinger, Loughridge, Mitchell, Pelham, John G. Schumaker, Stephens, Waddell, Charles G. Williams, and Woodworth—15.

So the resolution, in so far as it related to Mr. Sypher, was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which that part of the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question was next on that part of the resolution which related to Mr. Sheldon, and, being put, it was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the part of the resolution just agreed to, in regard to Mr. Sheldon; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next question is on that part of the resolution which proposes to admit, on the prima-facie evidence, Mr. P. B. S. Pinchback to a seat in this House as Representative at large from Louisiana.

Mr. ELDREDGE. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of privilege. Mr. Sheldon and Mr. Sypher are here ready to be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair feels it to be his duty at once to administer the oath to the two members whose prima-facie right to their seats has just been declared. They are just as much entitled to vote on any question before the House as any other member on the floor.

Mr. SYPHER and Mr. SHELDON presented themselves, and qualified by taking the oath prescribed by the law of July 2, 1862.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and ten minutes, p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. DUELL: The petition of James W. Sturtevant, Oliver Kingman, Almon W. Angell, and 46 others, citizens of Cortland County, New York, praying Congress to grant an invalid pension to Morris P. Rockwell, a soldier in the war of 1861.

Also, the petition of Henry Lieber, Sullivan Fuller, and others, of Cortland County, New York, asking for an amendment of the law creating the postal money-order system, and for other purposes.

Also, the petition of Jefferson O. Hill, Manson Wire, and others, for the same purpose.

By Mr. DUNNELL: The petition of B. F. Blackmer and 379 others, asking for an amendment to the "free-culture act."

By Mr. GARFIELD, of Ohio: The petition of Hannah B. Eaton, for a pension.

Also, the petition of Letta Bagley, for a pension.

By Mr. HALE, of Maine: The memorial of Capt. George Henry Preble, asking for restoration to rank and position in the United States Navy.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The memorial of John H. Redington and 7 others, of San Francisco, in behalf of underwriter claimants, against exclusion from their just participation in the damages awarded by the Geneva tribunal.

By Mr. McJUNKIN: The petition of citizens of Butler and Alleghany Counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, for the establishment of a post or mail-route from Bakerstown, in the county of Alleghany, via Mars post-office at Parks's Mill, to Evansburgh, in Butler County, a distance of about twelve miles.

By Mr. PACKARD: The petition of Z. P. Farley, and many others, citizens of Crown Point, Ind., asking for prepayment of newspaper postage and the adoption of a new system of determining the salaries of postmasters.

By Mr. SENER: The petition of Mrs. Fanny B. White, widow of Capt. Chester B. White, U. S. A., for a pension.

Also, the petition of Noah Fairbanks, of Fredericksburgh, Va., praying remuneration as the inventor of the process for obtaining fresh water from salt.

Also, the petition of Nicholas Bedler, of Fredricksburgh, Va., praying for relief for losses growing out of the late war.

Also, the petition of citizens of Middlesex County, Va., praying to have obstructions cleared from mouth of Urbanna River.

Also, the petition of E. Brittingham, of Southampton County, Va., praying for relief from losses growing out of the war.

NOTICE OF BILLS.

By Mr. DUNNELL: A bill to exempt from postage newspapers within the county where buplished.

By Mr. McNULTA: A bill to regulate commerce on railways.

By Mr. STARKWEATHER: A bill to repeal the increase of salaries, and to cover undrawn and returned balances into the Treasury.

By Mr. STORM: A bill to repeal so much of the proviso to the third section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1874," approved March 3, 1873, as relates to weekly newspapers.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 3, 1873.

Prayer by Rev. E. D. OWEN, of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Hon. WILLIAM T. HAMILTON, of Maryland, appeared in his seat to-day.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Attorney-General of the operations of the Department of Justice for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873; which, on motion of Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of citizens of the counties of Russell, Rooks, and Phillips, in the State of Kansas, praying for the establishment of a mail-route; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented the petition of Nathaniel G. Smith, postmaster at Flemington, Hunterdon County, New Jersey, praying to be relieved from the loss of postage-stamps stolen from his office; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a petition of citizens of Carroll County, Maryland, praying the passage of a law at the present session requiring prepayment of postage on all mailable matter; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of Samuel Wilson, late of Company F, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, praying that he may be granted a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of William Thwing, of Boston, Massachusetts, praying for return of duties paid in August, 1862, on a cargo of nitrate of soda, per ship Sarah March; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. I present the petition of William H. Aikens and Jacob D. Felthousen, praying for relief for inventing new and useful improvements in sewing-machines; and I ask that it lie on the table for the present, to be referred to the Committee on Patents when appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will lie on the table.

Mr. SARGENT presented the petition of A. S. Rosenbaum & Co., praying that they may be reimbursed the cost of tax-stamps on certain tobacco burned at sea on the steamer Bienville; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LEWIS presented the petition of George Brunk, of Virginia, praying compensation for stock driven off by order of General Sheridan; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of F. W. E. Lohman, Samuel Ruth, and S. M. Carter, praying compensation for secret service; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORTON presented the petition of Susan P. Vance, of New Albany, Indiana, praying compensation for property taken, used, and destroyed by the United States in Kentucky, between the years 1861 and 1871, and for services rendered the United States by Morgan Vance; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STEVENSON presented a petition of 3,500 citizens of Kentucky, praying Congress to prohibit by appropriate and immediate legislation the manufacture and traffic of spirituous liquors in the Territories of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of John Milton Best, of Kentucky, praying for compensation for property taken and destroyed at Paducah, in 1864; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented the petition of George W. Clark, of South Carolina, praying for the satisfaction by the United States of the judgment of Alexander McLeod vs. T. C. Callicot; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also presented the petition of Alexander McLeod, of South Carolina, praying to be paid for cotton seized by the authority of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the papers of George W. Anderson be taken from the files of the Senate, that they may be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

Mr. WEST. I want to ask for a similar order; but, as we have no committees, can such an order be made now?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I suppose I had better wait. I withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I move, in behalf of the American Board of Foreign Missions, that they be permitted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers relating to losses sustained in the Cherokee Nation during the late war. No action has been taken on the matter.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 40) for the relief of Andrew Dillman, of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PRATT. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate, without previous notice, to introduce a bill with certain accompanying evidence.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 41) granting a pension to Margaret E. Alexander, widow of Edwin A. Alexander, deceased, late a private in Company K, Eighth Regiment of Indiana Cavalry, known as the Thirty-ninth Indiana Regiment; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 42) granting a pension to Caleb A. Lamb, late a musician in Company E of the Forty-sixth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. President, I have received a draught of a bill from a gentleman residing in Buffalo, well known to me, and he desires me to introduce it. Without examination, I do not feel committed to it, but ask leave to present it, that it may be read twice and printed.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 43) to provide for the better protection of the northern and northwestern frontiers, and to facilitate commerce and diminish the expense of the exchanges between States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FENTON. I move that the bill be printed and laid on the table for the present, to be referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 44) to establish the Territory of Pembina, and to provide a temporary government therefor; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 45) granting the right of way through the public lands to the Canyonville and Galesville Road Company, in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 46) for the construction of a custom-house and bonded warehouse at Portland, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask leave, without previous notice, to introduce a bill "to aid in the execution of the laws in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes." In introducing this bill, I simply wish to say that the Senate will remember that, at the last session, the President sent a special message to the Senate and the House requesting that there might be legislation in this direction. A bill was prepared with great care; many hours were spent upon it by the Committee on the Judiciary; and it was then discussed in the Senate for a whole day, and several amendments made to it. Those amendments, as they passed the Senate, I have incorporated in this bill. I suppose, as the President has again called our attention to this subject, it will be important that this bill be considered at an early day; but, as a matter of form, I ask that it be again referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when that committee shall be appointed.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 47) to aid in the execution of the laws in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LEWIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 48) for the relief of loyal citizens of Loudoun County, Virginia, therein named; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 49) to authorize the construction of a fire-proof building at Nebraska City, Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 50) to authorize the appointment of a captain of scouts; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 51) to provide for the redemption of the loan of 1858; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. DAVIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 52) to provide for a building suitable for a post-office, for the accommodation of the revenue officers and the United States courts and their officers, in the city of Charleston, West Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

POWERS OF CONGRESS OVER RAILROADS, ETC.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. If there be no further morning business, I will claim the floor for the purpose of submitting the remarks of which I gave notice on Monday last.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will call for resolutions, and if there be no resolutions the Senator can proceed.

Mr. PRATT. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire whether Congress, under the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution to "regulate commerce among the several States," to "establish post-roads," or any other powers conferred, has authority, without the consent of the States affected, to create corporations to construct railroads or canals penetrating two or more States, and also, whether it has power to regulate by law, without such consent, the rates of compensation for the carriage of persons and property over existing railroads, chartered by States, which by consolidation have continuous lines running into or through two or more States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table until the committees are appointed.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS IN OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, (by the Senate,) That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill for an act, as follows:

"A BILL to provide for ascertaining losses sustained by citizens of Oregon by reason of Indian depredations.

"Whereas it is the duty of the Government to protect its citizens on the frontier engaged in peaceful and honorable avocations in the enjoyment of life and property against the depredations of hostile Indians, and whenever, for any reason, this protection is not given, it follows as a necessary consequence that it is a duty of equal magnitude resting on the Government to make good, so far as possible, the ascertained losses resulting from such failure;

"And whereas during several years past numerous depredations have been committed in the State of Oregon by wandering bands of Indians, principally Modocs and Snakes, who have in times of peace invaded the settlements and usual and known lines of travel, murdered the inhabitants, destroyed and carried away the property of citizens of said State, broken up their families, and caused those not massacred to flee from their homes for safety: Therefore,

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to appoint three persons to act as commissioners to inquire into the extent and character of said depredations, by what tribe or bands, or portion of tribe or bands of Indians committed, when committed, the number and names of persons murdered, and the number and names of survivors of the families of such persons, the character and value of the property destroyed or carried away, from what portion of said State, and to whom the same belonged, and the damages sustained by citizens of said State by reason of such depredations.

"SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commissioners, or a majority of them, as soon as practicable, to proceed to the frontiers of said State and take testimony under oath of such witnesses as may appear before them, of all such depredations, when, where, by what band or bands, portion of band, and upon and against whom committed, and as to the value of property destroyed and when, and the damage sustained by each citizen by reason of such depredations, and shall make up and transmit to the Secretary of the Interior, as soon as practicable, their report showing the result of such investigations, to which shall be appended all the testimony taken by them: Provided, Such commissioners, before proceeding to hear such testimony, shall give notice of the time and place of their meeting by publication thereof for ten days previous in at least two newspapers of said State: Provided further, That said commissioners shall, before entering upon such investigation, each take an oath to faithfully perform the duties of his office.

"SEC. 3. That said commissioners shall be entitled to, and shall receive as compensation for their services, the sum of ten dollars per day each and their traveling and other necessary expenses."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table until committees are appointed.

HARBOR OF REFUGE AT PORT ORFORD.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, In view of our rapidly increasing commerce with Asia and the islands of the Pacific, and the growing coasting trade of the Pacific sea-board, now fast developing into importance, and of the further fact that from San Francisco, California, to Sitka, Alaska, a distance of over twelve hundred miles, such coast is comparatively without shelter for vessels in distress, that the Committee on Commerce be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of constructing a marine harbor of refuge on said coast at Port Orford, in the State of Oregon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table until the committees are appointed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, made in obedience to law, containing a statement of fees collected by the consular officers of the United States during the year ending December 31, 1872; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

FREE BANKING AND SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to take up the resolution which I offered on Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be requested to consider the expediency of reporting a bill providing for free banking and for the resumption of specie payments, to take effect on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1875.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, it may not be the best time during a panic for discreet legislation, but adherence to paper money alone is adherence to panics, and, when our United States notes have risen so nearly to par, when the exchanges have set the tide of gold flowing in our favor, when there is a quick market for all of our exportable products of the year, when debts have been reduced to the minimum point, and when the shrinkage in values is even greater than would be likely to follow a resumption of specie payments, it would be an inexcusable neglect of duty on the part of legislators not to take advantage of so many concurring conditions to place the currency of the country upon a sound metallic basis, and thus relieve the people from the ever-present apprehension of fluctuations and dislocations in trade and banking, thus restrain the rapid augmentation of our foreign indebtedness, and thus give to labor stable employment and stable rewards.

The agitation of the country for war by would-be army contractors, by lurking filibusters, and others who would expect to do a very small part of the fighting, shows that war is still the lingering evil to which nations may be too easily subjected, and, if it should come and be fought out upon the basis of an inconvertible currency, with every actual expenditure of $1,000,000,000—and we can have no cheap war—it would involve the issue of not less than $1,500,000,000 in United States bonds, or 50 per cent. of inflation. Near or remote as may be the probabilities, here is a very potent argument for a return to a standard of money level with that of the world.

What croaker would have ventured, at the close of the war in 1865, to have predicted that nine long years would elapse and bring our paper currency no nearer to the specie standard than it is to-day? We had the decency to pretend to be hoping at least for an early resumption, or to be looking out for some miraculous shower of gold, though we aided it not except by prayers without faith. Now the public conscience slumbers, statesmen have got the knack of winking at the sin, and the Treasury Department, unsupported by any definite policy of Congress, has the sterling virtue of prudence—tries hard to neither expand nor contract—and will safely keep things as they are, embarrassed by no innovations committed only to the grooves of the past so long as Congress neglects to act. How can we demand of the Secretary of the Treasury—striving amid many difficulties to discharge onerous duties with all possible fidelity—to enunciate any financial policy, while Congress knowingly leaves him standing on the slack-rope interpretation of the law, where he must balance himself by gold at one end of the pole and "greenbacks" at the other, and raise or depress either end according to the provocation or depravity of the bulls or bears of Wall street?

I would not throw gravel into the shoes of the Administration to make its seemingly slow tramp painful, but, if I had the power, I would endeavor to stir its ambition and that of the present Congress to gain the credit of lifting the country out of the slough of depreciated currency. The long-delayed task may not be a small one, but, however that may be, our duty has equal proportions. Any Secretary must be naturally urged in this direction by the sharp spurs of a laudable ambition, and, if successful, would win a place among the few in all the pages of history who are known as eminent financiers. Let Congress contribute to the work, and, whatever else it might do, it would be decorated with the honor now and forever.

Let me say, however, that the official routine duties of the Secretary of the Treasury, keeping pace with the rapid growth of the country, scarcely leave more than snatches of time for the consideration of anything else; and it can hardly be expected, and it is unreasonable that we should demand, that he should find leisure to profoundly consider all the subdivisions in the science of government and politics, including the complex subjects of the tariff, taxation, commerce, coinage, banking, and currency—either almost the task of a lifetime—in addition to all his other multifarious duties, so as to inspire him with confidence in his conclusions, and so as to justify him in urging radical measures of reform. The data within his reach are more abundant than time for their elaboration. Since the day of Hamilton, who with equal facility studied the minute or comprehended the vast, the labors of the office have increased possibly forty-fold. But amid the wild storm of charges of corruption raging elsewhere, it is no slender gratification that those who have been responsible for all the recent gigantic operations of the Treasury Department have maintained in the eyes of all the world a spotless personal reputation. Errors they may have committed, but they have not confounded the purse of the nation with their own.

On this financial subject, involving interests so vital, the people expect Congress to lead the way.

That it is the duty of the Government to provide a sound currency, not only for itself but for the people, will not be disputed, as it cannot be provided by the people themselves nor by the States. It being one of the great original objects for which the Union was formed to provide a uniform medium of commerce, the duty was imposed upon Congress by the Constitution in ample grants of power, which would be useless were this part of the duty held to be excluded. Commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is to be regulated by Congress, and can only be properly regulated through the instrumentality of a sound currency. This was the theory of the framers of the Constitution, and their practice in 1790 accorded with their theory.

If it was a duty obligatory and not to be evaded on the part of the Government of Washington in 1790 to provide a sound currency, with how much more of emphasis is that duty enjoined in 1873? At the former period we had less than four millions of population, now increased to ten times that number, and demanding, in the great change from a pastoral to a commercial people, much more than a proportionate increase of positive and substantial commercial facilities.

Our tonnage then was 478,377 tons against 4,437,746 tons now, or almost ten times as much. From nothing, or from the naked condition in which the mother country had shamelessly held us—save the few toddling manufactures which painfully crept into existence during the war of the Revolution—the grand total of our manufactures in 1870 had risen to $4,232,325,442, having nearly quadrupled since 1850. In addition to this, our mineral products now come in with over one hundred and fifty millions more.

Our foreign trade in 1790 was small, both the export and import entries amounting to no more than $35,344,027; while in 1873 they mounted up to $1,440,793,550. Though our foreign commerce is thus seen to be vast, it yet bears no comparison to the extent and value of our domestic commerce.

Civilization has advanced, and the men of to-day earn more and consume more than their ancestors. The enormous development of the productive power of machinery is wholly modern and largely American. Steam, railroads, and the telegraph are marvelous triumphs of human genius, and they all bear a much later date than 1790. The Erie Canal and the Pacific Railroad are only lesser marvels. Great as are these auxiliaries of commerce, they are inadequate to the tasks now impending. It is manifest that the legitimate wants of commerce are now of colossal proportions, and were never more worthy of attention. Can we, in the face of these imperious demands, in the face of the early example of Hamilton, of Madison, and the fathers of our country, shirk the duty of statesmen, and indefinitely postpone the day of our deliverance from a depreciated paper-currency? Who is it that would make an exceptional vice the standard of American virtue? Who is it that would proclaim his complete despair by suggesting the future growth of the country as the sole remedy for the present excess of dishonored paper? Who is it that would daily fret and chafe a national sore when, by a single cut, no more painful, it might be removed forever? Who is it that would longer subject American laborers to the shocks and vicissitudes of a currency having no metallic basis, and so light that every financial gust torments them with a reduction of wages, or threatens hopeless non-employment?

I am wedded to no special mode of resumption. Any one of a half-dozen plans which have been or might be presented would be better than a do-nothing policy. In the glut of ready-made plans, every one can fit his own head as easily as it could be done in a hatter's shop—only that no financial plan ever fits anybody else but the author. Of course the best plan, it is to be hoped, will be selected whenever it shall be determined to select any. The real trouble is that, instead of trying to get out of the mire, it is attempted to reconcile us to staying in the mire. Instead of frankly admitting the uncleanness, it is contended that more dirt, as with some fowls, is the proper medium of purification. Diluted money seems to dilute the brains. Doubtless some plans will be found far more practicable than others, but, it is to be feared, even if we have no open advocates of a depreciated currency, that we may find too few open advocates of the practicability of any plan of escape from it. Irresolute and weak-voiced as to any affirmative action, too many will be apt to distinguish themselves, if not by loud thunder in the negative, at least by the most respectable and conservative general apathy.

With some time and labor bestowed upon this subject—and it deserves time and labor—I am free to avow my own inability to explain all its intricacies, all its ramifications, so as to meet every objection that a fertile critic might start against a resumption of specie payments; but there are certain cardinal principles to which we must all adhere, and a multitude of facts which cannot be ignored, that would seem to overwhelm and sweep away all impediments, real or imaginary, to a return to the world-wide metallic standard of money. And yet I do not dare to hope, while addressing those supposed to be more alert in the discovery of defects than the merits of any argument, that I shall be able to remove objections which linger in the minds of many more intelligent than myself and equally patriotic. These, if I should fail to satisfy, I will aim not to weary by undue length.

It must be borne in mind that our experience does not differ from that of other countries which have tried to force inconvertible paper into circulation as a substitute for money; the plunge is easy and the return difficult; and, if on this grave but hackneyed subject, my treatment should lack freshness, my excuse is that among all the arguments that have been presented for the maintenance of the flood with which we are inundated, hardly one can be recognized that was not enlisted in behalf of the French assignats, or in behalf of the continuance of the suspension of the Bank of England during and after the war with Napoleon. But, though they may be esteemed veteran arguments, they are one-legged and badly battered, and ought long since to have been mustered out of service.

Paper money, so called, that is not redeemable in cash at the will of the holder, is not money, and will not float at par. Wherever you see this in circulation, you will see no specie. Even the most arbitrary governments of Europe cannot, by mere power, force a paper currency into circulation at par with gold; but what they might more reasonably attempt should be shunned by a government of the people whose proud distinction it is, not only to preserve its credit, but to wholly and speedily pay off its national debt. A descent from this high standard, nowhere else erected, would at once undermine some share of public confidence, lower the nominal value of all of our public securities, and the real value of American statesmanship. Paper money must be received by choice in order to circulate as the equivalent of coin, and not because power has been invoked to make it a legal-tender.

It has been claimed that our paper has not depreciated, but that gold has risen in value. The same thing was said of French assignats—that they had not lost, but that silver had gained. The same thing was said upon the report of the British bullion committee in 1811. Depreciation of bank notes was denied, and the depravity of human nature was deplored, because it could not resist the temptation to give twenty per cent. more for guineas than for bank notes. With us it cannot be reasonably claimed that gold has risen in value, when it is so notorious that its extraordinary influx from the Pacific coast and from Australia caused a world-wide diminution of its value, and an equal augmentation of the prices of all other commodities. And yet this influx of more plentiful and cheaper gold, debased, too, by us below the standard of other nations, now brings in all markets a large percentage above the paper money made by the United States, forced upon the people by law, and garnished by unredeemed pledges of public faith! Our promises are engraved falsehoods—engraved upon every note. Ultimate security is always more or less doubtful when present payment is denied. Gold in hand is worth more than the promises of the nation.

But we have those so impervious to the logic of facts touching our paper currency that they deny any excess, and who would insist, though brayed in a mortar, that we have no more than is necessary to transact our increased amount of business. They even deny the usefulness of any coin or reserve to maintain at par paper circulation. Admitting the increase of business, and that a larger volume may be required now than was required years ago, it does not follow that the present war-swollen volume is not too large, nor that it should be only swelled by adulteration in bulk and not in intrinsic value; and it may be questionable, also, whether the increase of business is not largely compensated, as well by the increased rapidity of circulation as by the new facilities of banking, by bills of exchange, and by the circulation of individual checks based upon deposits. More than ninety-five per cent. of all moneyed transactions are now adjusted by such instrumentalities. Great Britain, with its Bank of England, where the exchanges of the world press for daily settlement, has only $215,000,000 of paper circulation,* or less than one-third of the amount we are using. We are triumphantly asked, with a joke that never grows stale, whether the people are not still ready to receive our legal-tender notes, and whether there are not many who are anxious for more?

These sage questioners appear incapable of perceiving the obvious truth, that if the amount of the currency should be doubled, or trebled, to-day, the same state of facts would arise and pursue us to-morrow. Double or treble the amount of currency would then be required, all held by the same hands, to do the same amount of business; it would still pass at some rate of discount or other; and there would be still some poor Olivers, with their hunger wholly unappeased, crying for more. Subtract half of the silver from the dollar, and it would still be current as a dollar, but only current at one half of its present purchasing power. Expansion increases prices and short-sighted people are jolly, but relative values remain the same, and nobody is benefited.

Some have gone so far as to claim that the Government might most profitably transform its whole indebtedness into the semblance of money and force it upon the public—there to sink or swim, live or die—uncared for by its ever-pregnant god-fathers. They forget that some very profitable propositions have been sometimes rejected, by nations as well as by individuals, because they were also very dishonorable. They forget the manly utterance of General Grant's inaugural: "Let it be understood that no repudiator of one farthing of the public debt will be trusted in public place."

Once more the unterrified champions of depreciated paper appear with their final argument of confidence, and arrogantly ask, who doubts the solidity of the Government, or its ability to pay? It is not a question of ability that is doubtful, but of the practical fact, will it pay? Inability might be excused, but what defense can be made for a want of will? There is plenty of confidence in the ability and resources of the Government to pay, but unfortunatety there is a larger confidence that Congress won't let the Government pay. The assets of a debtor count for nothing, however abundant, so long as they are known to be beyond the reach of creditors. The promise of the Government is no better than any other promise unless it stands a better chance of redemption.

After all the real test of an excess of paper currency is its depreciation of value, as compared with the gold standard. Any argument with those who deny this proposition would be as useless as would be an attempt to teach a class of gorrillas the multiplication table. But of such a depreciation there can be no doubt. It is daily visible in all financial transactions. The Government recognizes it by refusing currency for customs, and by selling its gold for a premium. The perpetual flow of gold abroad—until the recent panic locked up a large amount of greenbacks—has been a perpetual advertisement of depreciation.

Here and there a manufacturer, seeing that importers must pay a premium on gold with which to pay duties, with inexcusable obtuseness run their heads into the sand to shut their own condition out of sight, and assume that a depreciated currency is an additional tariff protection, serving to increase their profits and fortunes; but it is not true. The foreign cost of any merchandise imported must necessarily be less than it can be produced for at home. The premium on gold, therefore, is always lost by the American manufacturer on a larger expenditure of capital than that required of the importer, and the almost insurmountable difficulties in the way of manufacturing anything which can be profitably sent abroad at once refutes the assumption. Grain, cotton, tobacco, and petroleum—not manufactures—form the bulk of our exports. But, if the assumption were true and there were some protective advantages, I could have nothing to say to any who from selfish motives would retain the worst features of our present monetary system by which to make larger fortunes out of the misfortunes of the country.

There is still a remarkably progressive class of political economists who admit the depreciation of paper-money, but regard it, instead of a temporary expedient, resorted to with reluctance and apprehension in the dread urgencies of war, as a cunning contrivance, the consummate flower of statesmanship, or the night-blooming cereus of inexhaustible resources, which is to cover the country with untold blessings and prosperity. These partisans of depreciated paper point out the increased and increasing wealth of the country, as though all that would disappear, if measured by the true standard, or if it were given better tools to work with and a more solid foundation for its support! They see our industry and trade, though fed on thin paper gruel, possesses great vitality, and they cry out "Paper gruel forever!" They appeal to the prejudices of the country against assuming the nominal cost of redeeming outstanding paper which bears no interest—as if it would be right to continue all the vexations and positive losses of such paper by a forced loan forever—and they not only justify non-payment, but, as an alternative, would rather prefer to issue even more of the non-interest-bearing paper. What can be cheaper? A position like this, so much at war with the experience and common sense of mankind, hardly needs refutation. The prosperity of the country supports depreciated paper, not depreciated paper the prosperity of the country. A single illustration of the general fallacy of these expansionists may suffice.

We are building every year railroads of unexampled cost and extent. All this is done at a vastly increased amount of the nominal capital, which will forever hunger and call for dividends on the gross paper-money outlay. Much of this capital is obtained on bonds sold abroad, and sold not even at the par of our depreciated currency, but often at a discount, and must in the end all be paid, principal and interest, in solid cash. Can any one be so blind as not to admit that our country is thus being fleeced of a large part of its reputed wealth? All permanent domestic investments, as well as much of our foreign trade, can hardly be said to be less unsatisfactory.

We have the combined effect of a debt-contracting country—for all sorts of purposes, including the nation, States, cities, and railroads—and of adverse exchanges, arising from larger imports than exports, all aggravated and expanded, if not produced, by a depreciated currency, and we can only balance the frightful annual score against us by paying the value of all we have received, and, in addition, the wide margin between that and the inflated sum of our contracts. Only the great profits conceded to our industry, only the magic of a new country and the prolificness of its virgin soil, enables us to bear the effects of this excessive and general drainage. Large as this may be now, it is annually growing larger, and, unless it can be speedily checked, most certainly presents to American statesmen not an agree-

*Circulation of United Kingdom, August 9, 1873. See London Bankers' Magazine, October, 1873:

Bank of England	£26, 120, 236
Private banks	2, 552, 178
Joint-stock banks	2, 339, 127
Scotland	5, 562, 854
Ireland	6, 519, 335
	43, 086. 735

able omen of the future. Who can desire to have Europe as the future proprietor of America? That is the skeleton in our closet, thinly veiled by paper money. With such inconvertible paper prevailing, it is impossible to retain even United States bonds at home. Nearly all that have been, and all that may be issued, except what may be held by national and by savings banks, find, and ever must find, their highest appreciation in specie-paying markets abroad. How long must this be tolerated?

Inaction is further insisted upon by those who admit the existing evils, but seek to reconcile us to them rather to others of which the dimensions appear to them much larger, and so large that they cannot even be induced to measure them. These tell us that any reduction of the legal-tender currency would alter the value of existing contracts. This argument is true, but some such alteration, hardly less in measure, now occurs every day, and it was not regarded as insuperable when the legal tenders were first proposed. Debts under the old legal standard were liquidated in depreciated paper and all complaints disregarded. The depreciation was then suddenly enormous, while it is very small now and growing less. If the objection to a reduction of currency which changes, however slightly, the value of existing contracts is insurmountable to-day, it will be insurmountable to-morrow, and it is obvious that the present depreciation should be carefully maintained and provided for, and should endure forever. Debts and contracts tend to increase with the increase of the wealth and population of the country, and, when all pretense of a return to specie payments shall vanish, the credit system will expand and debts will breed and multiply without the restraint which a possible resumption has hitherto exercised. The objection will become chronic, more and more irresistible, and our depreciated paper may thus be handed down from generation to generation as an incurable malady.

But the great bulk of debts and contracts, it should be remembered, is limited to periods of one year or less. Most of our people have as many debts due as what they owe, and square up all accounts with the world once a year. They are not only a debt-paying, but a debt-collecting people. The debts maturing and liquidated within the past sixty days of rigid economy have been immense. Future contracts, with due notice, would be guarded. It is nearly certain that the amount to be affected now is much less than it ever can be at any future time, and, with proper notice for previous preparation, the sum of private grievances resulting from specie resumption would be inconsiderable and far inferior to the sum of grievances redressed. But let the growing suspicion, that no steps are to be taken toward such a resumption, harden into public conviction, and we shall assuredly more and more recede from it until a return shall become altogether hopeless. The debtor class are always oppressed by a much higher rate of interest wherever inconvertible paper circulates, as is conclusively shown by the rates now current at Paris, Vienna, and St. Petersburg. The banking rate in the United States is also much greater than it was ten years ago. The poorest money is always dearer than the best.

If a redundant paper currency, not convertible into coin, was the source of all good, according to some popular blarney, we might expect to see it adopted by enlightened commercial nations; but no nation ever seeks it voluntarily, and all make willing sacrifices to avoid it. It comes as a calamity. No sophistry can make it anything else. Short as we may be of a store of money to carry on all of our great undertakings, an expansion of paper currency cannot add a single dime to our store or power, and by its constant inconstancy, its propensity to change, it shipwrecks many undertakings which, with a sound currency, might have been successful.

The recent New York panic has made the unhealthfulness of our financial affairs a little more obvious, and a single point may be profitably noticed, as well as the remarkable panacea that it has suggested.

From necessity the national banks must follow the lead of the National Government, and refuse to pay their liabilities in coin. The national system, as a system, has many excellencies, but during a suspension of specie payments hardly anything could be more inadequate, as it lacks the great virtue of elasticity, and any stringency in the money market is aggravated by a fourfold contraction. It feeds, but cannot resist, a panic. The banks may hold any amount of coin as part of their reserve, but they cannot afford to pay it out, and will not, to depositors or to bill-holders. When most wanted, therefore, coin is practically useless. The reserve relied upon for actual use, however, is United States notes, and these, as poor a substitute as they are for cash, being of neither more nor less value than the currency to be redeemed, are limited by law, and the supply cannot be augmented, whatever may be the urgency. More than one-third of all these notes are required as a constant reserve for liabilities of circulation and deposits, and this leaves only about $225,000,000 actually afloat or in the hands of individuals; but even this amount is so widely and thinly scattered over the country—ten and twenty dollars in a place—as to be beyond the reach of banks when more is suddenly wanted, or when they have fallen below the legal amount required. They will not pay out specie, and at every pinch must increase, and not diminish, their greenback reserve. If they were on a specie basis, then the surplus hoarded in all the markets of the world would come forth at their bidding. One or two per cent. will send coin bounding across the Atlantic: that leverage of interest floats it from Hamburg to London, or from Paris to Berlin; and a stress much less will gather and hold it where it is produced. A specie reserve when in actual use is, therefore, wonderfully elastic; but inconvertible paper based on an inconvertible reserve which is limited in its amount, leaps to its utmost bounds at the start, where it cannot advance and will not recede. It has at its birth one strong and prosperous forward movement, and then drops into chronic inertia. When the reserve of the banks is, therefore, from any cause reduced, say, five millions of dollars, more or less, the only remedy applied is a reduction of liabilities four times that amount—thus aggravating a stringency of the money market by a fresh demand of twenty millions from those who themselves are needy borrowers.

This is the torture to which the mercantile community may at almost any time be subjected by any large operator in Wall street. He has only to look over the weekly bank returns, see where the reserve is weak, and then put in force his scheme to deplete such banks a little further. If he does this they are transformed from lenders to borrowers, and are not only unable to make any discounts, but must retrench to the extent of four times their short reserve, and the twinge in Wall street sends its throb of pain through the whole country. This seems too plain to be disputed. Can any one advocate the perpetual banishment of a metallic basis from our circulating medium when the mischief is so palpable and so inevitable?

To remedy this lack of elasticity of the currency, the most plausible scheme when limited, and the most stunning scheme when unlimited, heretofore mooted, and still fondled by its nurses, is the proposed issue of Government bonds, bearing 3.65 per cent. interest, and interchangeable with United States notes. Money being always worth more than this rate of interest, and as bonds bearing 5 per cent. interest are worth only par, a bond bearing 3.65 per cent. interest would not be worth to keep or sell more than 75 cents on the dollar, it follows that such bonds would be eagerly exchanged for legal tenders; but it takes no fox to see there would be no outward tracks again of the bonds.

This scheme, if restricted to the issue of notes now outstanding, would be chiefly important as a legislative declaration in favor of continuing such notes in circulation while wood grows and water runs. But the earnest promoters of the scheme doubtless seek an indefinite expansion. They would allow every man to become his own banker by depositing such bonds in the Treasury, whenever money could be loaned at a higher rate of interest, and receive an equal amount of notes for circulation, with the privilege of returning the notes at any time, and receiving the bonds again. Whoever should take and circulate the notes, bothered by no reserves and no maximum rate of interest, or other interference, would assume no obligations to pay or redeem them, but all that responsibility and labor would adhere to the Government, which is to issue and lend to anybody, asking no questions, upon a deposit of evidences of its own indebtedness. It would be the creation of a litter of petty banks of issue, promiscuous and unlimited, cut loose from all the restraints of legitimate banks. Even the money received for the bonds could not be used, but would have to be kept on hand, to redeem the bonds at any moment, by the Government.

Probably no wider license of expansion and contraction, nothing with superior claims to slipperiness will be proposed, and a more complete emancipation from all rules which govern a sound currency could hardly be conceived. Mr. Burke wisely said that all men possessed of unlimited and discretionary power, tending to their own advantage, abuse it. But here, with every man his own banker, we are to rely upon the universal selfishness of mankind, acting in separate units—to bring about an elastic reform, with a patent self-acting adjustable governor, in the circulating medium, wholly divorced from a specie basis, and establish banking on the most liberal and elastic free-love principles! Can it be supposed that such power as this would escape abuse? Such a scheme would permit all those having capital to engage in banking and to abandon it whenever its "passional attraction" began to wane; but the principle is scarcely less audacious when applied to banking than when applied to matrimony, and would be as little likely to commend itself to the judgment of sober men, if they had not first been debauched by the seductive influences of an excessive paper currency.

"All discord, harmony not understood,"

If Congress may be charged with failures, it should be credited with good intentions. Whenever it has enunciated principles they have been most often sound and true. It has hardly been guilty of theoretically denying correct doctrines, even when departing practically most widely from them. Scratch Congress when dizziest with the issuing of paper money, and you would find hard money at the bottom. When the crisis had passed, it saw the gangrene and attempted to apply the knife, but as the patient winced at the first gleam of the blade, or at the monthly withdrawal of four millions of United States notes, it stopped as suddenly as did Abraham when bidden by the angel. It may now, I fear, contemplate no sacrifice, not even so much as a stray ram in the thicket, and may prefer to wait until the doctors, whose advent has been vainly waited for, shall discover some financial ether to be administered before it will consent to the adoption of the slightest heroic treatment. Legislative surgery, it would appear, has suddenly become dangerous, and time and nature must be trusted to cure all financial evils. With all respect to time and nature I am unwilling to hand over the case exclusively to their control. Congress should be equal to its constitutional duty, and rely upon a well-informed people for support.

No appeal can be made to the magnanimity of the American people whose prosperity we all seek to elevate, that will not be met with a suitable and prompt response. They are always ready to do right, and they know that paper money, not convertible into coin at the will of the holder, is radically wrong. They would exult to be relieved from the national stigma, and find "the load of yesterday left behind." They do not like to follow in the precipitous and downward road of the old "continental money." Quacks may shake their heads and talk of financial contortions, but the people, deficient neither in strength nor courage, long to be able to say that American money is equal to any in the world, and to be able once more to see and handle a little solid cash. As ready to condemn recklessness as imbecility, they would swiftly and patriotically applaud any well-devised measure of Congress looking to the ultimate restoration of a sound currency.

At the last session of Congress we made a law to watch with scrupulous nicety the weight of our gold coins, and, if reduced even by natural abrasion below the standard of the mint, their character as a legal tender is to cease, and the Government is only to receive them at the custom-house according to valuation by weight; and such as are found one half of one per cent. below the standard, in the possession of the Government, are to be recoined. I do not say this was wrong; it was right; but why this conscientious anxiety about debased coin and utter disregard of debased paper? Why this extreme foresight about the interests of the Government alone, guarding it against the loss of even one half of a grain of gold in a double eagle, and no eye at all to the interests of the common people, whose only currency of paper must be accepted at a loss often more than one hundred times greater?

With special aptitudes, conspicuous even in our colonial age, for engaging in the commerce of the world, and but lately aspiring to win the race against "the mistress of the ocean," we are yet content to waste our energies in the vain attempt to compete with paper against the hard money of the world. We might as well challenge steam with sails, or a Toledo blade with a sword of lath! Already our foreign carrying trade, with its large profits, is mainly lost, never to be wholly recovered during the domination of a depreciated currency. What further degradation of our mercantile marine awaits us who can tell? Commercial men are adventurous and prone to cast their bread upon the waters, but those who now build or own American ships are a forlorn hope and quite aware the venture must be extra-hazardous. The coins of the ancient republic of Venice were once current from Iceland to Cathay, but where, outside of our own limits, are United States notes current? Why, sir, the king of the Mosquitoes would decline them with a shrug. Colored beads he might accept, but not colored paper. Yet the inconvertible "greenback" is all that is left to prop up the great commerce of our modern Republic—a commerce that has too long folded its wings and sought the sublimity of repose in idle harbors! Certainly too many of our ships "stand still," but do not "see the salvation of the Lord."

Producing more of the precious metals than any other nation, yet for ten long years and more, while the consumption of the country has offered a dear market for everything else, gold has had the door slammed in its face, and neither found a home nor the best market in a land where it is indigenous. Not until carried to empires abroad has it secured any permanent abiding place. Snubbed and driven from good society to the dens of bears and bulls, why should it not make haste to leave a country where it finds little appreciation in order to display itself where it may receive the highest honors, and carry on its face the stamp and dignity of the greatest nationalities?

American gold will as naturally leap into American pockets, and stay there, as anywhere else, if you will empty the pockets of the excess of paper and give it room. Gold and silver, with some undeniable American affinities, will gravitate toward the centers where they are most wanted, and stay where they are most useful; but they are cosmopolitan, with the freedom of the world, and will not stay where they are daily brought to the auction-block.

Nature has bestowed upon our country the precious metals with lavish abundance, but at present they have lost their most important function of use and conversion into the circulating coin of the country. It is remarkable, in the order of Providence, how often the great wants of the human race seem to be supplied by the store-houses of the garnered wealth of centuries placed in localities where needed, and sure to be discovered. The distribution of salt and salt-springs over all parts of the world is a striking exhibition of this divine economy. Petroleum, for ages imprisoned in darkest caverns, when wanted leaps out, and every poor man's cottage is illuminated. The richest coal-fields were earliest found in England, and what other people would have opened them to more or wider spheres of utility? Can it be supposed that the gold fields and silver mines of America are out of place, and that they should have been located near, and have been discovered by a more thrifty and enterprising people? Would they have been better placed in Hungary or Peru? We cannot afford to tolerate an idea so reproachful to ourselves, and so directly impeaching Divine wisdom. We have great treasures placed at our disposal, and let us show that they are well placed, and that we are not deficient in capacity to use them to our own, as well as to the greatest advantage of the world.

The fair face of republican institutions, the leading features and front of freedom and independence, cannot always be kept in view; and it is to be regretted that only their shameful characteristics, foul-mouthed detraction and partisan calumny, should be so often and so persistently presented by any portion of our people or press, as to leave nothing apparently in sight, as an index of character, except hideous and all pervading corruption. Every age in its turn has been denounced by its contemporaries as the most corrupt of all, and the present age has not escaped. Of early days only good, of later only bad men become conspicuous. While I neither join in such general denunciation, nor claim that our country is wholly without a stain, the vulnerable point I have been considering in our monetary affairs must not be denied, and beyond its own rottenness, which cannot be concealed, it must be held to account for a large share of all the pecuniary corruption with which even the air seems surcharged; but let us cling to the faith that there is virtue in reserve equal to a complete cure of all the ills to which we are heirs.

However imposing the necessity for "legal tenders" may have been, they have long outlived their usefulness, and that they have undermined, and are undermining, the home-bred honesty of the people is an alarming fact. No Egyptian plague ever asserted itself more impudently. Sanctioned by law, the system of depreciated paper—payable nowhere, to nobody—filches something from every promise, and turns a large percentage to dross. It is a perpetual snare lurking around every business transaction, public and private; and, even in his last will, the testator does not know, after a life of toil, whether he leaves his family fifty thousand dollars or fifty cents. It is an enormous burden to the Government, the foul parent of extravagance in every branch of expenditure, the ever-active agency for an increase of salaries, and a subtle poison to which all official forces are daily exposed. Always rising or falling, it is the money with which never to do as you agree, or the money of law, not of fact. Not being genuine, or as good as it claims to be, it is held by all men with only the easy touch-and-go title by which gamblers hold their tainted spoils, and, with its value uncertain and always suspected, it is insidiously working a revolution in the habits and morals of the nation. Frugality is passing away as a lost art, and prodigality is becoming the earliest acquisition as well of girlhood and boyhood as of legislators. Speculation is usurping the field of industrial enterprise; and labor, cheated in every contract, is disgusted, and not unwilling itself to learn the trick of palming off eight dollars for an eagle, or a day clipped at both ends for a whole day's pay. Work seems to be going out of fashion, and jockeyism is becoming the sole autocrat of the times. But a nation that aims at greatness cannot afford to multiply a race of idlers, nor to bear aloft a standard of integrity which stoops to a daily discount.

It is plain that industry cannot thrive unless its rewards are stable and secure. How can we expect to train up a conscientious people where the Government itself gives an example of a daily affront to the true standard of the commercial world by the issue and reissue of paper "legal tenders," notoriously above their value in any market, at home or abroad? May I not appeal to patriotic men everywhere to aid in strangling this monster evil before it fatally enfolds in its coils the dearest interests, moral and material, of society and the nation?

With a resumption of specie payments all objection to free banking would be removed, and the reproach of a monopoly, or of an unequal distribution of banking privileges would vanish. With a resumption, and a redemption of national bank notes, the ridiculous contest about the proper aggregate amount of circulation would no longer exist, whether more or less than at present, as we should have all that we could use and all that banks could deposit bonds for and circulate at par. There might be less or more, but it would certainly be better money. We should have a currency with a tendency to a wider distribution, instead of predestined centralization, and it would be elastic, flowing out largely at certain seasons of the year when most wanted, and returning homeward after the movement of the crops. The legitimate business of banking would be restored to all parts of the country, and short paper, in moderate sums of business people, would be sought after instead of dead loans in large blocks to Leviathan stock operators. No bank could maintain specie payments on any other than legitimate business at home.

But, it may be asked, how is it proposed to bring about this rose-colored reform and these important results? Of course not without the aid of Congress—of Congress in earnest; but what one of us can see our financial system whirling, so to say, in the rapids of Niagara and not even fling out a rope that it may be again brought to the shore? As I have said, I am wedded to no special plan. The restoration of a currency that shall be equal to solid cash can be effected in many ways, but in none without some sacrifice and some temporary inconvenience. A plan as simple as most would be to restore the original law, by which United States notes were allowed to be funded into bonds, and at the same time to allow the Secretary of the Treasury some option of issuing a limited amount of such bonds for gold to pay off all notes that might otherwise be presented. Reasonable time and notice being given, the notes would gradually approach par without producing more than a ripple upon the surface of business. Doubtless a resumption would follow the absorption of a less amount of our depreciated United States notes than is generally supposed—liberally estimated at not more than fifty to seventy-five millions—and after resumption any further retirement of such paper would be instantly followed by an equal influx of specie or its equivalent, and have no appreciable effect upon the money market.

But a mode of gliding into resumption by easier stages, with little or no disturbance of existing interests, suggested to me last year by an eminent financier, may be received with greater favor, and this mode would allow United States notes to a large extent to remain in circulation, if Congress should hold that to be advisable.

1. By this plan the Secretary of the Treasury would be authorized to issue $100,000,000 of certificates payable in four years, with interest at 3.65 per cent., to be exchanged at par for United States notes, which are then to be canceled. And all banks, in the cities mentioned in section 31 of the general banking law, to be authorized to keep one moiety of the required reserve in such certificates and the other moiety in coin or United States notes. Banks located elsewhere to be allowed to keep their reserve in certificates, gold, United States notes, or balance in New York for redemption of their notes, but not to count as part of their reserve any balance upon which interest is paid or received.

This amount would be at once quietly absorbed, and thus, without the slightest sensation in any quarter, nearly one-third of the "greenbacks," not now practically in circulation, would be retired forever, and a large stride made toward specie resumption.

2. Provide, as to the remainder of the United States notes, that the Government should be authorized by law to give notice that it will—say on the first day of January, 1875—pay in cash all that may be presented at the sub-treasury in New York; and, that the public may feel entirely assured of the purpose and ability of the Government, and also to fortify the country against adverse foreign exchanges, a loan to be authorized of two hundred millions, (or so much thereof as may be required,) payable in not less than five years, nor more than twenty years, at a rate of interest sure to command coin, not exceeding six per cent., and with the proceeds to pay and redeem all notes that may be presented. In addition the Secretary of the Treasury might be allowed, either as a temporary or permanent arrangement, to re-issue notes, so redeemed in coin, in payment of all debts of the United States, except interest on United States bonds. After the notice the premium on gold would gradually and perhaps wholly disappear by the day fixed for redemption.

This measure adopted, and the purchase or prepayment of bonds discontinued, would enable the Secretary of the Treasury to accumulate much more coin than is usually held in the Treasury, and thus the way to assured resumption would be open. Undoubtedly it would be better to have the Government wholly retire from the direct banking business at the earliest moment, as it can have no aptitude for learning the banking trade, but it would be within its power either to keep and maintain in circulation at par the whole or any part of the remainder of the outstanding United States notes, or to retire them altogether and forever, and at the same time escape from the piteous predicament of Italy, Austria, and Turkey, now so hopelessly crippled and discredited by depreciated paper.

3. Finally, free banking to be authorized.

It may be said that the national banks would not be able to keep pace with the Government in a resumption at so early a day. This is the clamor of speculators, of over-loaded brokers, and of all very disinterested holders of bubbles designed to be slyly transferred to their neighbors at the maximum of inflation. It is for the interest of the national banks to cordially contribute to an early resumption. A suspension of specie payments, and the issue of inconvertible paper in time of peace, by the Government, is barely tolerated, and, if the banks from selfish motives should cling to this as a vested privilege of their own, their existence would be imperilled, as the Government would then be urged to step in and monopolize the entire paper-money trade.

With one year's notice, however, all banks that are managed by prudent bankers would have ample time to make all needful preparation. If they could not, no extension of time would be of any service. If any require more time, they are most likely banks whose means have been already crippled, or whose managers are speculators, not bankers, and more earnest in behalf of their own private interests than those of the public they claim to serve. Sound banks will be glad to return to the old path, to solid hard-pan, where experience, skill, and integrity count in reputations, and if there are a few mushroom institutions of a different character, there will be no regret should they be forced to drop the national livery and stand aside for more competent and worthy successors.

At no time could party interests be less involved, unless they should be involved on our side by negative action. Of course the democratic party watch for our mistakes. Their young Absaloms promise much, if they were made judges in the land. With a fair opportunity they might doubtless revive the most potent party cry they ever had—that of hard money; but if they had the power, what experiments they would actually try would only be disclosed by their necessities. The republican party and its present chief—on this question ahead of his party—have won renown by the wisdom and courage with which their great measures have been originated and carried to a successful issue. Though gray in such services, they are by no means destitute of vigor for further triumphs. Specie resumption is the only great financial work that remains unattempted. If we refuse to grapple with it, history will charge exhaustion, if not imbecility, upon the party holding responsible power. The initiative clearly belongs to the present Administration, and would not be opposed by any party, saving the pro-forma criticism which all opposition parties feel constrained to exhibit, by objecting to good measures when carried by other agencies than their own, and that would be confined to the manner and not the subject-matter.

It will be an honor to the American character, to men of all parties enlisted in its favor, to bring up the credit of our currency to the standard value of the old established coins of the country, and the standard integrity of our fathers. It will be an honor to us all when we sweep away so much of the dark cloud of "greenbacks" as will restore stars of gold and silver to the financial firmament.

If a measure of the character indicated shall not appear from some quarter likely to command greater favor, I shall at some future day try to submit a bill upon which I may venture to ask a vote of the Senate.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to make a motion in regard to his resolution?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move that it lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) That order will be made.

THE CURRENCY.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. That being disposed of, I move to take up the resolution I had the honor of offering on the first day of the session, with reference to the subject of finance.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, on Monday last.

Mr. WRIGHT. As I understand the Senator from Michigan proposes to address the Senate upon his resolution, if it is agreeable to him, as I doubt not it will be, I move that we go into executive session.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Is it understood that I shall have the floor for to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be entitled to the floor.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I yield, then, with pleasure, to the Senator from Iowa.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at two o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 3, 1873.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LOUISIANA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being called for, the House resumes the consideration of the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER] in regard to the contested-election cases from Louisiana.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. At the request of Mr. Pinchback, I move that the portion of my resolution now undisposed of which relates to him, be laid upon the table. And I propose to follow that motion, if carried, with a motion to refer the credentials of all these contestants, including Mr. Pinchback, to the Committee on Elections when appointed.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. COX. It is that it requires unanimous consent for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] to move——

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then I ask unanimous consent, which I know will be given.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Does the gentleman propose to lay this case on the table finally, or does he propose to call it up again at some future day?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir. I propose to supplement it with a motion that the credentials of all the contestants be referred to the Committee on Elections when appointed.

Mr. BECK. If that requires unanimous consent, then I desire to object. I want the vote to be taken and the yeas and nays called on the Pinchback case, because it stands upon precisely the same footing with the other cases.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then go ahead, if you desire; we are quite equal to the emergency.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. BECK. We do not doubt your capacity in that regard.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We see no distinction in the cases.

Mr. BECK. Then vote him in.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have indicated what I desire to have done.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the motion of the gentleman to lay the resolution upon the table? [After a short pause.] The Chair hears none, and the resolution is laid on the table.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CESSNA. I rise to a privileged question, and submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the name of John J. Davis be placed upon the roll of this House as a Representative from the first congressional district of West Virginia, without prejudice to the right of Benjamin Wilson to contest his seat hereafter; and that the name of J. Marshall Hagans be placed on the roll of this House as a Representative from the second congressional district of West Virginia, without prejudice to the right of Benjamin F. Martin to contest his seat hereafter; and that they be forthwith sworn in as members of this House.

Mr. BECK. I object to the consideration of that resolution while the other is pending, for it is of no higher privilege than the one now pending.

The SPEAKER. There is no other question now pending. The question in relation to the member claiming to be a Representative at large from the State of Louisiana has been disposed of by laying the resolution on the table.

Mr. RANDALL. Will it be in order to move to refer this resolution to the Committee on Elections when appointed?

Mr. BECK. The object I had in rising was to object to the Pinchback resolution going on the table, and to insist upon a vote being taken upon it; and I did object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair distinctly stated that it was laid on the table, and that the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BECK. The resolution in regard to the Pinchback case?

The SPEAKER. Certainly, in the hearing of the House. Did not the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] so understand?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I did, and moved to reconsider and table that vote.

Mr. BECK. I objected to that being done, and demanded that the vote be taken upon this resolution by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk can read the record of what was done.

Mr. BECK. I do not know what the record is.

The SPEAKER. The journal clerk states that he took down the motion that the resolution be laid on the table, that it was laid on the table, and that the motion was made and carried to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. BECK. Well, may it please the Chair, he has taken it down wrongly; and the gentleman from Massachusetts will bear me out in the statement that when I objected he said "Go on; we can stand it," or something to that effect.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I did say "Go on," but afterward we understood the objection to be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair of course does not want any dispute upon a point of this kind; but the entire body of clerks in front of the Chair bear out the Chair in the statement that he asked for objections, and then stated that there was no objection to laying on the table; and the gentleman from Massachusetts followed with the usual motion; and the Chair said the motion to reconsider is laid on the table.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I made objection to laying the resolution on the table; I rose and insisted upon that objection; and if all the clerks at all the desks were to say the contrary, it would not alter the fact that I did make the objection.

The SPEAKER. While the Chair knows positively that the proceeding was conducted with perfect regularity, he never allows a member to maintain that he is deprived of his right without giving him an opportunity to test the question. The question will be again taken upon laying the resolution on the table.

Mr. BECK. I object to a vote being taken on that question, because the gentleman had no right, while the previous question was pending, to make a motion to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is entirely wrong in that point.

Mr. BECK. No doubt I am very often wrong.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entirely wrong. The Chair thought the gentleman was under a misapprehension.

Mr. BECK. I do not object to being overruled by the Chair; but——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will observe by reference to the rules that he is entirely wrong. The motion to lay on the table is clearly in order pending a call for the previous question, and is the only motion in order under such circumstances.

Mr. BECK. If that is so, then my point was wrongly taken. I do not insist that I was right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knew the gentleman was wrong all the time; but he was about to gratify the gentleman by a vote.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, to lay on the table the resolution relating to the case of Pinchback, the motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 137, noes 51.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, lest some other gentleman may fall into the same misapprehension, that the point which he imagines was in the mind of the gentleman from Kentucky was, that the previous question, when partly executed, cannot be reconsidered. Had the motion been to reconsider with the view of referring the matter to the Committee on Elections, that would not have been in order; but to lay the resolution on the table at any stage is clearly in order.

Mr. BECK. The Chair will allow me to make a single statement. I do not pretend to understand the rules of the House half so well as the Chair does; but when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] made his motion, the Chair said, "That requires unanimous consent." I then said, "If it does, I object, and I desire the yeas and nays to be called."

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that the gentleman from Massachusetts desired to lay the resolution on the table and refer it, in connection with other papers, to the Committee on Elections. Accompanied with that condition the motion required unanimous consent.

Mr. BECK. I objected to that being done.

The SPEAKER. The moment any condition was coupled with the motion to lay on the table, unanimous consent was necessary; and the Chair so ruled.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order. Did not the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] couple the motion to lay on the table with a motion to dispose of another case?

The SPEAKER. Nothing else was disposed of; this matter alone was laid on the table.

Mr. COX. And then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CESSNA] immediately rose upon a matter disconnected from the Louisiana case.

The SPEAKER. Because the Louisiana case was disposed of.

Mr. COX. But I rose to a question of privilege in relation to the case from the fourth Louisiana district.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair, exercising the right to assign the floor, gave it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CESSNA.]

Mr. COX. I think a misapprehension occurred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not misapprehend; he acted quite intelligently.

Mr. COX. The House did not understand the matter.

The SPEAKER. It was not a matter dependent upon any understanding of the House; it was the duty of the Chair to assign the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. As I occupy a position in opposition somewhat to what seems to be the view of the majority on this side, I would like to say a word.

The SPEAKER. On what question?

Mr. RANDALL. On this Pinchback case.

The SPEAKER. It is not before the House, unless the gentleman moves to reconsider the vote whereby the matter was laid on the table.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have made the motion to reconsider, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires that there shall be no misapprehension this time. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the resolution relating to Mr. Pinchback was laid on the table; and also moves that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Is it not now in order to take up the case from the fourth district of Louisiana?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Chair always endeavors to administer the rules with strict impartiality; and he is entirely conscious that not only was the whole proceeding in this matter entirely regular, but that it was only because gentlemen had been talking and not giving attention to the business, that they made the accusation that the question had not been taken, when the proceeding had actually been carried out according to the strictest forms of parliamentary law. The Chair does not disguise that it makes him impatient to have a point of this kind raised, especially when raised without the slightest shadow of foundation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CESSNA,] who has the floor, presents a privileged resolution, which will be read.

WEST VIRGINIA ELECTION CONTEST.

The Clerk again read the resolution of Mr. CESSNA, as follows:

Resolved, That the name of John J. Davis be placed on the roll of this House a as Representative from the first congressional district of West Virginia, without prejudice to the right of Benjamin Wilson to contest the seat hereafter; and that the name of J. Marshall Hagans be placed on the roll of this House as a Representative from the second congressional district of West Virginia, without prejudice to the right of Benjamin F. Martin to contest his seat hereafter; and that they be forthwith sworn in as members of this House.

Mr. CESSNA. In order to economize time as much as possible, and to ascertain the wishes of the House whether this question shall be discussed, or whether it shall be voted on now, I call for the previous question. If there is no desire to discuss it in any quarter, I propose to call the previous question now, and then to divide my hour.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. CESSNA. I do not yield for any amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. CESSNA. I do not. I propose to ascertain the wish of the House. I made an inquiry, which I will repeat, that if there is any desire in any quarter to discuss the proposition, I wish to be so informed. If there be any such desire, I will then call for the previous question, and divide my hour afterward.

Mr. DAWES. What hour will the gentleman have if he calls for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not entitled to an hour, except on reports of committees.

Mr. CESSNA. Very well. I propose to divide the House now, and will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.] I do not propose to yield to amendments until I have ascertained the wish of the House on my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects to any gentleman offering amendments, when the floor is yielded to him, during his hour.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is not the resolution susceptible of division?

The SPEAKER. Any resolution affecting more than one person is always susceptible of division on any question of privilege whatever.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I rise to a question of consideration which leaves the whole matter for the House to control, whether it will take up this question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania or not. As I understand it, the members are not prepared to act upon it. My motion will put it over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine rises to a question of consideration at this time. The question is, will the House now consider the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CESSNA. It may as well. The question is of high privilege, and I hope the House will consider it at this time.

The question was taken, and there were—ayes 92, noes 74.

So the House decided to now consider the question.

Mr. CESSNA. I yield for twenty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. HEREFORD. Allow me one word. We have no objection to discuss this question at this time, as the House has just decided to do. I am the only member now representing that State, and I wish to say to the gentleman and to the House that we desire more time than one hour for the discussion of this question. It is one of great importance to the State I represent; it is whether two-thirds of West Virginia shall be represented according to the views and sentiments of the people of that State or not, and I ask that more time shall be allowed than one hour.

Mr. CESSNA. I submit it to the House for the purpose of ascertaining, if possible, the desire of the House on the subject. For my own part I have no wish at all, and am willing to be guided by the sense of the House. I shall only ask for one hour, and will be ready to vote as soon as the House wishes.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask unanimous consent that there shall be two hours, one hour to each side, for the discussion of this question.

Mr. CESSNA. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HEREFORD. One hour to be given to each side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will so assign the time.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The hour of the gentleman from Pennsylvania begins at twenty-five minutes past one o'clock.

Mr. CESSNA. I yield for twenty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, this is a contest between John J. Davis on the one side and Benjamin Wilson on the other, each claiming a seat in this House from the first congressional district of West Virginia. There is no controversy about any material fact in the case. The question which arises, and which is to be determined by the House, is mainly, if not exclusively, a question of law. I wish to state the facts, as I understand them, upon which each claimant asks to be admitted to a seat in this House. On the fourth Thursday, being the 22d of August, 1872, a "general election" was held in the State of West Virginia, at the several places of voting in each county, for senators and members of the house of delegates, and all officers, executive, judicial, county, or district, in that State. At that election the qualified voters of the State of West Virginia in each one of the congressional districts voted for and elected Representatives in Congress. At the election in the first district John J. Davis received 13,361 votes, Benjamin Wilson 12,948, and H. W. Rook 4 votes, making a total of 26,313.

Under this election, of course John J. Davis is elected if the election could properly be held at that time. It will be seen that both these claimants submitted their claims to the people at that election, and not only so, but in addition an election was held in each one of the several districts of the State for Representatives in Congress. The people of the State of all political parties seem to have understood that that was the proper time for the election; and, in accordance with that understanding a very full vote of the voters of the State was had. This may be seen by a comparison of the vote of 1872 with that at the election held in the year 1870. At the election in October, 1870, John J. Davis received, as a candidate for Representative in the first district 11,630 votes, and General N. Goff 10,567, making a total vote of 22,197, being considerably less than the vote of August, 1872.

Another election, however, was held in that State, for Representatives in Congress only, on the fourth Thursday of October, 1872; and at that election in the first congressional district Benjamin Wilson received 3,708 votes, and thirty-nine other candidates received in all 391 votes. The total vote cast in the district in October, 1872, was therefore 4,099, against a vote of 26,313 in August of that year. It will be seen from these statements that the voters of that State have given construction to their laws, and it was very distinctly understood by all political parties that the proper time for the election was August, 1872. The political parties of the State held the usual conventions and put candidates in nomination for the August election in every county and district.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question of the validity of the elections of August, and of October, 1872, depends on certain constitutional and other provisions of law and their proper construction, to which I will call the attention of the House. The Constitution of the United States in the fourth section of the first article, provides that—

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

On this it is to be remarked that this constitutional provision does not require a specified day to be fixed, either a day of the month or a day of the week. All that is required is that the time shall be fixed by some definite means sufficient to ascertain it. Again, it may be remarked that the time may be fixed by references to any certain event, and such has been the practice in the State of West Virginia and in other States. For instance, for many years in that State the time for the election of Representatives in Congress was fixed to be held on the first day on which the county court was held; and that day was determined by officers and changed from time to time, so that the election was held, not by any law specifying a day of the month or day of the week, but by an event fixed by officers in their discretion, and changed from time to time.

So far I have stated the facts. I now proceed to consider the provisions of law which relate to the validity of the elections, and which, as I conceive, show the election of August to be valid, and that of October to be void. The first section of the code of West Virginia of 1868, provides that—

> The general election for State, district, county, and township officers, and members of the Legislature, shall be held on the fourth Thursday of October.

The second section provides:

> At the said elections in every year, there shall be elected delegates to the Legislature, and one senator for every senatorial district; and in the year 1870, and every second year thereafter, a governor, secretary of the state, treasurer, auditor, and attorney-general for the State; a prosecuting attorney, surveyor of lands, recorder, and the number of assessors prescribed by law, and a Representative in the Congress of the United States, for the term beginning on the 4th day of March next after the election, for every congressional district.

Now, it will be seen from these provisions of the code which I have read, that if they continued in force to, and including, October, 1872, and if no change had been made, a "general election" undoubtedly must have been held on the fourth Monday of October of that year, for all State officers and for Representatives in Congress.

It will be seen, too, that the second section of the code which I have read determines that the congressional election shall be held at the "general election" of that year whenever held. The provision which fixed the "general election" "on the fourth Thursday of October" was subject to change by competent authority, and such change to another day or time would carry with it necessarily the election of Representatives in Congress to the time so fixed or to be determined.

The code of 1868, then in effect, provided that Representatives in Congress should be elected at whatever time the general election was or might be held, without reference to any fixed day. The fact of a "general election" for State officers determined also the fact that an election should be held for Representatives in Congress at the same time. It was the event, the fact of the general election, and not any day fixed by the code, that determined the period when Representatives in Congress should be elected. And this was sufficiently definite upon that principle, familiar to every lawyer, and which is found in the books that "that is sufficiently certain which can be rendered certain."—"Id certum est, quod certum reddi potest."

It will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that the language of the first section is—

> The general elections for State, district, county, and township officers, and members of the Legislature, shall be held on the fourth Thursday of October.

And then the second section, which controls the election of Representatives in Congress, provides that it shall take place "at the said elections," that is, at the "general election," whenever that general election might be held, regardless of the particular time fixed in the code of 1868, and subject to a change of the time so fixed for that general election. Now, Mr. Speaker, the day of this election in August, 1872, was fixed, not by a day or time, but by an event, the holding of the general election. If the code of 1868 had remained in force unchanged, if no change had been made in the day of electing the officers of the State of West Virginia generally, then undoubtedly the proper time for the election of Representatives in Congress would have been on the fourth Thursday of October. But this day was abolished, as I will show; and the time for the year 1872 was changed to the fourth Thursday of August, being the 22d of that month.

Mr. LAMISON. By what power?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will state to my friend and colleague the authority by and the mode in which it was done. The constitution of West Virginia in force prior and up to August 22, 1872, authorized its amendment by a convention, when so provided by law, and sanctioned by the vote of the qualified voters of the State. The requisite law was passed by the Legislature of West Virginia. The requisite vote of the people was had in favor of calling a convention to amend their State constitution.

In pursuance of this law and vote of the people a constitutional convention assembled in West Virginia which completed its work on the 9th of April, 1872, agreeing to a new constitution for the State, which constitution I now hold in my hand. This constitution in its schedule provides that on the fourth Thursday, being the 22d day of August, 1872, the qualified voters of the State should vote on the question of its rejection or ratification. It was provided further that in case of its ratification the constitution should become operative and in force from and including the day on which the vote was had, on the very first moment of that day. It provided further for a "general election" on the same day of State, county, and district officers. In other words, it fixed the day for the general election for the year 1872. At that general election, on the 22d of August, 1872, the officers of the State, including State, county, and district officers, were elected, and their terms of office were fixed to run beyond the year 1872. There was no other general election held in the State in that year. That election also ratified the constitution, and the officers elected at that election are now in office by virtue of that election, the only general election held in the State in that year.

It was at that election that John J. Davis was elected a Representative to this Congress by the vote which I have stated. The constitution so ratified took effect on and including that day, from the very first moment of the day by its own terms, and it has been carried into operation, and has been in operation ever since.

I have already stated that there was no other general election held in the State in that year. The adoption of the constitution rendered it impossible that there could be. Here, then, was a general election, and that was the year for the election of Representatives in Congress. Now, the code of 1868, in express terms, declares "that at the general election for State and county officers there shall be elected a Representative in the Congress of the United States for every congressional district." The language is, "at the general election." That excludes the right to elect at any other election. That, it seems to me, is conclusive of the question.

The voters of West Virginia have given a construction to their own constitution and laws, and that contemporaneous construction is the one which should be adopted by this House. All lawyers know the force and value of contemporaneous construction. Any election in October of 1872 undoubtedly was in flat violation of the provision of the code which I have read, because an election of members of Congress could be held only at the general election held in the State. There was not, and could not be, any general election except that of August.

I know it may be said that the Constitution of the United States provides that "the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof." I answer that by the code from which I have read the Legsilature of West Virginia did fix all these at the general election held in West Virginia in that year. All the new constitution did was to fix the day when the general election for State, county, and district officers should be held. Then the code declared that on that same day, at that same election, Representatives in Congress should be elected. The constitution itself says nothing about the election of Representatives in Congress. It merely prescribes the time for holding the general election, and leaves the election of Representatives in Congress to the operation of the second section of the code which I have read. But if it were necessary, I would say that the convention which made the constitution is a legislative body—is a "Legislature" within the meaning of the provision which I have read from the Constitution of the United States. Why not? Its work is law—the highest law of the State—and what power but legislative can make law? That convention was a Legislature.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. SMALL. Was this whole constitution submitted to the people for ratification?

Mr. LAWRENCE. The whole constitution was submitted to a vote of the people and was by them ratified, and took effect on the 22d of August, 1872, and became the law from the very first moment of that day, and has continued in force ever since. The convention which made it was a legislative body within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, for, as I have already remarked, its work duly ratified is a law, the highest law of the State. Will it be said that no body could fix this time of election but the Legislature under the Constitution? I might well apply the maxim,

Qui haeret in litera haeret in cortice.

He who sticks in the letter sticks in the bark—he does not go to the heart of the subject, or reach its substance.

Mr. KASSON. Say, does not go to the core.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Well, does not go to the core, if that is better.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. Allow me a few minutes longer.

Mr. CESSNA. Very well.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This question has been settled by the uniform practice of the Government from its origin down. New States are admitted; they come to Congress with their constitutions, with Senators and Representatives already elected in pursuance of constitutional provisions, before there is any other legislative body. They have been uniformly admitted. The Representatives from California were admitted when there could be no legislative body there to fix the time of their election but the convention. In the case of California there was no enabling act of Congress to authorize a convention. But the act of admission ratified what had been done, and this, by a well-known principle, "related back" and validated all from the time it was originally done. This question has also been settled by this House in a report made by my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] I refer to the case of Shiel vs. Thayer, an Oregon contested-election case, the syllabus of which report I will now read:

The constitution of Oregon has fixed beyond the control of its Legislature the time for holding an election of Representatives in Congress. The contestant having been elected on the day fixed by the constitution, the committee held that he was entitled to the seat. The House adopted the report.—Report July 26, 1861, volume Contested-Election Cases, 1834 to 1865, page 349.

Here, then, is a determination that when the constitution of a State has fixed the time for electing Representatives in Congress it is a compliance with that provision of the Constitution of the United States which requires that the time shall be fixed by the Legislature of the State. A convention called to frame a constitution which is ratified and becomes a law is the Legislature of the State, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States. In any view of this case, Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly clear that John J. Davis is entitled to the seat in this House as a Representative from the first district of West Virginia.

His title to the office must be decided on the facts and his certificate of election, now before the House in due form.

The title to an office is property which no act of the Legislature can divest. The law of West Virginia which attempted to authorize evidence to divest the right vested in Davis is void, and will find no lawyer to sustain its validity.

In confirmation of the general views I have stated, I present an able article from the Wheeling Intelligencer of November 29, said to have been written by a distinguished democratic lawyer of that city. It is as follows

THE VEXED QUESTION AS TO THE WEST VIRGINIA CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION.

To the Editors of the Intelligencer:

Was the election of Congressmen on the 22d of August, 1872, valid? Article 1, section 4 of the Constitution of the United States provides that "the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof." Read the italicised portion of this provision, and you have all that pertains to the question. Must the State Legislatures, in responding to this requirement of the Constitution, fix a day certain, meaning a specific day, as for instance the 1st day of April, the 10th of September, the 4th Thursday of August, &c.? We believe that no such requirement is intended, and for the following reasons: The word "times," in the provision quoted, was evidently used, not with reference to a day certain, in the sense used hereinbefore, that is, in that restricted sense, for in that same section 4 of article 1 of the Constitution, when specifying a day certain in its restricted sense, it uses the word "day" instead of the word "time."

Again, in article 2, clause 4 of section 1, the words time and day are used in two different senses, the former evidently liberally and the latter restrictive. Again we have the interpretation of the legislators of the good old mother of Presidents in her palmy days, of the times of holding elections for Representatives, provided in article 1, section 4, above quoted, showing they did not believe that it was the duty of the Legislature to prescribe a day certain. This interpretation may be found in the act of the Legislature of Virginia, passed February 6, 1813, revised code of 1819, page 151 of volume 1, wherein the times provided for the election of Congressmen were the first day of their April courts, and we find that in scarcely a dozen of the counties of the State was their April court fixed to begin on the same day.

This law remained in force for many years, and has been regarded as fully responding to the requirements of the Constitution of the United States, article 1, section 4, even though it was so far from coming up to the requirements of those who insist that a fixed, certain day must be contained in the legislative enactment. Then the Legislature fixed the days for opening the courts, and oftentimes changed those days, but the statute prescribing the times of holding congressional elections remained unchanged, and left them to follow after and depend on the court opening days.

Now, observe that while the constitution, the sole power authorized to change section 1, chapter 3 of the code, has done so, and substituted in place thereof the fourth Thursday of August in 1872, it kept alive and in force all of said chapter 3, not in conflict with itself. This being true, then we submit that the law governing the election of Congressmen in 1872 was as follows:

"Chapter 3, code of West Virginia, section 1. The general election for State, district, county, and township, or district officers, and members of the Legislature, shall be held for the year 1872 on the fourth Thursday of August.

"Sec. 2. At the said election there shall be elected * * * in the year 1872, and every second year thereafter * * * a Representative in the Congress of the United States for the term beginning on the 4th day of March next after the election, for every congressional district."

It is not a fair interpretation of our legislative enactment, found in chapter 3, section 2, code, prescribing the time of holding elections for Representatives in Congress, that that time depends on the time for holding the general election, rather than a certain day peculiar to itself, seeing that the Legislature did not possess the power to fix a day for holding general elections, the constitution of our State alone possessing that power; and when the Legislature named the fourth Thursday of October, in section 1, chapter 3, code, it was certainly not regarded in the sense of prescribing that day for holding the general elections. That duty had been performed by the only power competent—the constitution. The people, then, through their constitution, possessing the power to fix the day for the general elections, possessed of course the power to change the day, which they did in the year 1872, to the fourth Thursday of August.

When the Legislature enacted sections 1 and 2 of chapter 3 of the code it is presumed to have done so with the understanding that the people could at any time change the day in said section 1 to another day; hence, in order to confine the congressional elections to the same day of general elections, as it always has been, it uses just such language as will insure the end at said election, to wit, at said general elections, whether occurring on the fourth Thursday of October or on such other day for said general election as the people may determine. Unacceptable to some as Messrs. Davis and Hagans may be, nevertheless we cannot see how they can be excluded from seats in the Forty-third Congress without doing injustice to them and to ourselves by a precedent founded on rules of interpretation of the laws calculated to render uncertain almost any law framed.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following-named members to constitute the standing Committee on Elections:

H. BOARDMAN SMITH of New York, CHARLES R. THOMAS of North Carolina, GERRY W. HAZELTON of Wisconsin, LEMUEL TODD of Pennsylvania, AUSTIN F. PIKE of New Hampshire, JAMES B. SENER of Virginia, JAMES W. ROBINSON of Ohio, HORACE H. HARRISON of Tennessee, WILLIAM E. ARTHUR of Kentucky, R. MILTON SPEER of Pennsylvania, and L. Q. C. LAMAR of Mississippi.

WEST VIRGINIA ELECTION CONTEST—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the resolution of Mr. CESSNA.

Mr. CESSNA. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] desires to ask the unanimous consent of the House to occupy fifteen minutes.

Mr. BECK. The arrangement by consent was for two hours' discussion, each side to have an hour. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CESSNA] and myself have agreed that I shall occupy fifteen minutes now, in opposition to his resolution, so that the two sides of the debate may alternate.

Mr. CESSNA. I have no objection at all to the gentleman occupying fifteen minutes, provided the time be not deducted from my hour.

The SPEAKER. The understanding will be that it shall come out of the second hour.

Mr. CESSNA. I have no objection at all.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, having been called upon by the gentlemen from West Virginia to look into their case, I did so, and prepared a brief memorandum of my views upon the law of the case; and I do not know that I can do the House more service than by repeating what I have heretofore said to them on that subject.

I think this is a case that ought to go to the committee. If we take cases of this sort out of their hands, I see no use we have for a Committee on Elections. It will be observed that all these gentlemen have contingent certificates. It is certified that John J. Davis was elected to Congress in the first district, provided August was the time prescribed by law for holding the election. It is also certified that Mr. Hagans was elected in the second district, provided that was the time. The governor further certifies that Mr. Wilson was elected in the first district, provided October was the legal time for the election; and a similar certificate has been given to Mr. Martin for the second district. This is the form of the credentials presented. None of them are absolute and unqualified; therefore there is no prima-facie right in any of them. The merits are involved in any decision we may make. The only question, therefore, in these cases is, whether the fourth Thursday in August or the fourth Thursday in October, 1872, was the day prescribed by the Legislature of the State as the time for holding the elections for Representatives in Congress. If August was the time prescribed, Mr. Davis and Mr. Hagans are entitled to be sworn in. If October was the legal time, then Mr. Martin and Mr. Wilson should be admitted. The only provision on this subject in the Constitution of the United States is in section 4, article 1, as follows:

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to places of choosing Senators.

We all know that Congress has not exercised its authority in this matter; and it is conceded that up to August, 1872, the time prescribed by the Legislature of West Virginia was the fourth Thursday of October. All previous elections for members of Congress had been held on that day, it being the time prescribed by the Legislature, as shown by the following provisions of their code, to which I call especial attention:

> SECTION 1. The general elections for State, district, county, and township officers and members of the Legislature shall be held on the fourth Thursday of October.
>
> SEC. 2. At the said election, in every year, there shall be elected delegates to the Legislature, and one senator for every senatorial district. And in the year 1870, and every second year thereafter, a governor, secretary of the State, treasurer, auditor, and attorney-general for the State; a prosecuting attorney, surveyor of lands, recorder, and the number of assessors prescribed by law, and a Representative in the Congress of the United States, for the term beginning on the 4th day of March next after the election for every congressional district.

That was the provision of the code prior to the adoption of the new constitution. That constitution contains this provision:

> Such parts of the common law, and the laws of this State, as are in force when this constitution goes into operation, and are not repugnant thereto, shall be and continue the law of the State until altered or repealed by the Legislature.

The only provision in the new constitution of West Virginia on this subject is in the schedule, which provides for a general election on the fourth Thursday of August, 1872, "for senators and members of the house of delegates, and all officers, executive, judicial, county, or district, required by this constitution to be elected by the people."

It will be observed that, by the provisions of the code, township officers and members of Congress are especially designated among the persons to be voted for at the October elections, and that they are carefully omitted in the enumeration of officers whose election is provided for in the clause just read, to take place in August, 1872.

It is evident that members of Congress were specially named in the code, and the time for their election prescribed therein, because the Constitution of the United States made it the duty of the Legislature to fix the time, and it is equally obvious that they were omitted from this number of those whose election is provided for in the schedule to the new constitution, because the framers of that instrument did not intend to interfere with the time prescribed by the Legislature for the election of members of Congress. They had no authority to do so, and it was not necessary, in order to put the machinery of that instrument into successful operation, that existing laws as to the election of township officers and members of Congress should be interfered with; therefore, with the code before them, they left them to stand as they stood by existing law, section 36 of article 8 of the constitution they had framed continuing in force the existing election laws as to them until the Legislature should see fit to alter or repeal them.

That was the general line of the opinion I gave to the gentleman who consulted me on the subject, and I thought it as well to state it to the House.

I need not show that the Constitution of the United States meant to confine the authority to prescribe the time for the election of members of Congress to the ordinary Legislatures, composed generally of two houses, whose acts require the approval, in some form, of the executive. It must be obvious that its framers never supposed that a convention, no matter for what purpose it might be called or with what powers it might be vested, would ever assume to prescribe the time for the election of members of Congress under the provisions of the Federal Constitution. They would as readily have supposed that a convention would undertake to elect Senators to represent the State in the Senate of the United States, the authority of the Legislature to elect Senators being no more absolute or exclusive than the authority to prescribe the time for the election of members of Congress.

Again, the new constitution of Virginia, when providing for the election of a limited number of officers, which it does provide for, leaving out, as I said, township officers and members of Congress, made provision that if the constitution was rejected in August, all elections held on that day should be null and void. Does any sane man pretend to say either the Legislature of West Virginia or its constitutional convention intended to place the right of that State to be represented in Congress upon such a contingency as that? Because if they had changed the time from the fourth Thursday of October to the fourth Thursday of August, they necessarily coupled it with the condition that if that new constitution was not adopted all elections for members of Congress, as well as for State officers, were null and void; and, having destroyed the previous day of election, to wit, the fourth Thursday of October, there was no day prescribed by law when members of Congress could be elected by West Virginia to this Congress.

Will any gentleman rise here and say he believes that to be so? Yet that is the necessity, unless it is assumed that the Legislature intended to have two days fixed, one contingent in August, and, in the event of failure then, to fall back upon the old law and try it over again in October, which is a strained construction, not to be assumed in the absence of positive enactment. Gentlemen say that the Legislature never fixed a time for the election of members of Congress; that the time was to be controlled and determined by the happening of an event, to wit, the general election. If the constitutional convention saw fit to do away with the general election on that day, and coupled it with all sorts of conditions, to occur in August, all former laws were a nullity. No, gentlemen; it was so perfectly apparent that I think all that is necessary is to read the code to show what was done. It shows that the Legislature fixed the time in October, without any contingency whatever, and that the constitutional convention carefully avoided altering the election law so far as the election of members of Congress was concerned. That construction is fortified, if anything further is necessary, by the fact that, if the constitution was rejected, then all elections held on that day would be null and void, leaving the members of Congress to be elected as provided by law already existing. It can hardly be assumed that such a state of case was intended or contemplated either by the Legislature or the convention. The question should go to the Committee on Elections, which is now organized, so that the facts may be thoroughly sifted.

The proof is here, and should be laid before that committee, that while no record was made of the speeches in the convention, nearly every prominent man in it has repudiated the idea that by its action the time was changed for the election of members of Congress from October to August. I am informed by gentlemen who ought to know that it was not believed by the members of the convention that they had the power to do it, and they did not intend to do it even if they had the power. The leading members of that convention will appear before the Committee on Elections and make this statement of facts, and show what was their course on this subject. It will be shown, too, as I am advised, that both of the great political parties of the State met prior to the August elections, and both refused to make nominations for members of Congress at that election, both believing they had nothing to do with the election of members of Congress at the August election, and believing it was only for the purpose of putting in operation the machinery of the new constitution, by providing the necessary State officers to carry out its provisions; providing, as they did, if it were not adopted by the people, then the elections which had taken place would be null and void, holding no contingent elections except such as the new constitution, by imperative and explicit provisions, rendered it necessary to elect.

Before any man is sworn in, these facts ought to appear by the report of a committee, after full and careful consideration of the facts. It makes no difference how many votes are cast for a man, or whether there was or was not opposition. This is simply a legal question, one to be examined carefully by a committee appointed as it has been by the Speaker, which will ascertain all the facts and give their judicial opinion to this House. Let those four gentlemen stand as the governor of their State has placed them, on terms of equality, each with a hypothetical statement of his right depending upon the final decision of the law. There is no question as to the facts in regard to Davis and Hagan's having been elected in August, and the other gentlemen in October. Let their title to the seats be determined by law. For my own part, I would as soon vote for the one set of men as the other. Mr. Davis served with me for two years in this House, and I liked him much. But I cannot go against the law, and I want to vote intelligently after a full report from a committee.

Mr. CESSNA. I was to have yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] In the absence from the House of that gentleman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire simply to state the case to the House as I understand it, without argument. By the constitution and laws of West Virginia an election was to be held on the fourth Tuesday of October of every alternate year, at which members of Congress might be elected. That was according to both the constitution and the law. The law said that members of Congress should be elected at a general election. Then the people of West Virginia, through its Legislature, organized a constitutional convention, which constitutional convention, among other things, in its schedule provided for the ratification of the constitution on the fourth Thursday of August. It also provided that there should be a eneral election held on that day, including members of Congress.

It seems to have struck the West Virginians that there was an incongruity in holding an election on the same day as the ratification of the constitution, when that constitution was not in force. So there is a provision in the constitution that, if it was ratified, it should take effect so as to include the day when the election was held. It was ratified by a very large majority, and all the officers of the State that were to be elected were elected under that constitution; and members of Congress were elected under that constitution, which was ratified and became the law of the State. Then certain gentlemen under the exploded constitution, and under the repealed law, got up an election and elected themselves to this House. The governor, with an impartiality which is commendable, recites these facts in the certificate, and says that if the first election in August was a legal election, then the men whose names are in the resolution are entitled to the seats; but that if the second election was legal, then certain other persons are entitled to the seats; and he put in Mr. HEREFORD, I understand, by giving him a certificate under both elections.

Now, then, the question left for us to determine is, whether a constitutional convention, duly organized, can change the constitution and require an election to be holden on the day when that is ratified. That has been done so often in every Southern State, that it establishes a precedent, at least. Then the question arises, whether that election day, so fixed, contravenes the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which says that the times and places of holding elections for members of Congress shall be fixed by the Legislature of the State. This was not fixed by the Legislature of the State technically, but by a constitutional convention authorized by the Legislature of the State to fix it, and it has been over and over again decided in this House that the word "Legislature" in that provision of the Constitution does not mean the technical Legislature, but that it means the law-making power of the State. If it should be called a parliament it would be the same thing; if it should be called a general convention it would be the same thing; if it were called a general assembly it would be the same thing. The meaning of the provision is that the time and place shall be fixed by the law-making power of the State. Now, who shall say, that when a convention held under due authorization of the Legislature, and authorized to fix the time when the new constitution should go into effect, fixes the time of the election, and the whole elections are held under it, and when there is a provision that the ratification shall take place on the morning of that day, who shall say that such an election is not valid?

There is the whole question, and it becomes simply a prima-facie case, because the certificate is all right. But in order to find out what the certificate is, we always have to look into the laws of the State which govern it. That is the case as I understand it, and I have heard nothing which puts it in any different light; and from some examination of the law of West Virginia, I am certain that I am right; because the twentieth section of the act of the Legislature providing for the constitutional convention says:

> The said convention shall provide by ordinance or otherwise for submitting said constitution to the people for ratification or rejection.

And the seventeenth section provides:

> The persons who shall be elected in pursuance of this act shall, on the third Tuesday in January next, meet and assemble at the seat of government in general convention to consider, discuss, and propose the new constitution, &c.

And the very governor who gave this certificate, who is the acting governor who gave all the certificates, and every State officer in that State, are now holding office and conducting the affairs of the State with entire acceptability to the people of the State of West Virginia. Besides, if we look beyond that, there is not a pretense but that five times more votes were thrown on the election day in August than on the election day in October. But we cannot look behind the prima-facie case. Therefore the whole question resolves itself into this: Has the constitutional convention of the State duly authorized by legislation the right to fix the day of election of officers on the same day as the day of the ratification of the constitution? And having done so, and the election being held, and the constitution ratified and to go into effect on the morning of that day, if ratified, is that a fixing of time and place of holding an election by the law-making power such as to meet the constitutional requirement that the time and place of holding the election shall be fixed by the Legislature of the State?

Mr. CESSNA. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] desires the floor. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has already occupied some fifteen minutes of the hour allotted to the other side. I now yield to the gentleman from West Virginia, and he can assign the forty-five minutes as he pleases.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am individually concerned, this is a question in which I am not interested, having been elected at both the August and October elections, having all the certificates, and nobody contesting. I have appeared here and taken the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, which provides that the time, place, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; not by any constitutional convention. The Constitution of the United States says that the State Legislature, and the State Legislature alone, shall control this matter.

My friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who has just taken his seat, says that it has been decided, time and again, that the constitutional convention of a State has that power. Now, the last decision by the American Congress is directly the other way, upon a report of a committee of this House, with the oldest member of this House as the chairman of that committee. I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, the report of that committee. It was in the case of Beach, from the State of Virginia. That is the last decision upon this subject that has been made by an American Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A new government must begin somewhere, and there must be somebody to make it. As necessity was the foundation, so also it was the limit of the power called into being for the purpose of inaugurating a new government. It could do anything necessary to carry out that purpose; and when that was done it could do no more. Its functions ceased the moment the new government took on form and life. The two cannot, in the nature of things, exist and move pari passu. Now, long before this ordinance had passed the convention there was in existence a governor and a Legislature, having all the powers that a governor and Legislature could have in Virginia—that is, all the powers which the constitution of Virginia clothes a governor and Legislature with, not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.
>
> Now, this latter instrument provides (art. 1, sec. 4) that "the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislatures thereof." It is a legislative act. It is a law. If the time had been fixed in the constitution of the State, recognized and acquiesced in by the Legislature, it may be said to be the act of the law-making power—a legislative act. But this time and manner were not fixed in the organic act, nor by Legislature, but by the convention, assuming legislative functions in the presence of the Legislature itself.—Miscellaneous Document No. 57, page 393, Thirty-eighth Congress, second session.

Mr. HEREFORD. Now, gentlemen will see, from what has just been read, that the last decision on this subject by the American Congress, with Mr. DAWES as the chairman of its Committee on Elections, the recognized leader of this House, was that this question of fixing the time, place, and manner of holding the election of member of Congress is a legislative act.

Now, the proposition before this House is to seat here a gentleman against whom I have nought to say; with whom I have sat upon this floor for two years. The proposition is to give him a seat. On what principle? That he has a prima-facie case. Now, what are the facts in this case? Mr. Wilson, who I claim is entitled to a seat here, not only has a certificate exactly like that of Mr. Davis, (and I shall ask the Clerk to read both of them,) but in addition to that fact the Legislature of our State, which is now in session, knowing well that the governor had failed to do his duty, and that our State was about to be without representation upon this floor, passed a law to the effect that as the governor had failed to perform his duty, all the executive officers, including the governor, the attorney-general, the secretary of state, the auditor, the treasurer, and the superintendent of public instruction, should assemble, count the votes, and certify who was elected. They did meet, all of them, except the governor, who desired to disfranchise that State for certain reasons known to himself. He failed to meet with them, but the other five executive officers met and gave to Mr. Wilson his certificate; and I now ask the Clerk to read the first and second certificates, so that we can have them both before us.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEREFORD. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Suppose the election of August, 1872, was legal, and suppose that the governor certified to the election of Mr. Davis, could he, under the Constitution of the United States, be divested of his right to the office by virtue of any subsequent legislative act?

Mr. HEREFORD. Certainly not. I will come to that directly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Now one other question.

Mr. HEREFORD. I do not want all this taken out of my time.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Was not the gentleman himself a candidate at the August election?

Mr. HEREFORD. I will explain all that in due time.

Mr. LAWRENCE. And did not the people of the State——

Mr. HEREFORD. I cannot allow my time to be used up in this way. I ask the Clerk to read the two certificates I have sent to his desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, to wit:

I, John J. Jacob, governor of the said State, pursuant to the act of the Legislature thereof in such case made and provided, do hereby certify that Benjamin Wilson was duly chosen on the 24th day of October, 1872, (provided that was the time prescribed by law for holding an election for Representatives in the Congress of the United States,) a Representative in the Congress of the United States for the first congressional district of this State, composed of the counties of Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, Marshall, Wetzel, Tyler, Pleasants, Doddridge, Harrison, Ritchie, Wood, Wirt, Gilmer, Calhoun, and Lewis, for the term commencing on the 4th day of March next.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the said State of West Virginia, this 29th day of January, 1873.

JOHN J. JACOB.

[SEAL.]

By the governor:

JOHN M. PHILLIPS,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, to wit:

We, Charles Hedrick, secretary of state of said State, Benjamin W. Byrne, State superintendent of free schools of said State, Edward A. Bennett, auditor of said State, John S. Burdett, treasurer of said State, Henry M. Mathews, attorney-general of said State, pursuant to the act of the Legislature thereof in such case made and provided, do hereby certify that Benjamin Wilson, of the county of Harrison, was duly chosen and regularly elected, in accordance with the laws of this State, on the 24th day of October, 1872, a Representative in the Congress of the United States, for the first congressional district of this State, composed of the counties of Wood, Ohio, Marshall, Calhoun, Lewis, Doddridge, Gilmer, Ritchie, Tyler, Wirt, Harrison, Brooke, Wetzel, Hancock, and Pleasants, for the term commencing on the 4th day of March, 1873.

Given under our hands and the great seal of the said State of West Virginia, which is hereto affixed by the secretary of state, this 22d day of November, 1873.

CHARLES HEDRICK,
Secretary of State.

B. W. BYRNE,
State Superintendent of Free Schools.

JOHN S. BURDETT,
Treasurer of the State.

HENRY M. MATHEWS,
Attorney-General.

E. A. BENNETT, Auditor.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto affixed the great seal of the State the day and year last aforesaid.

[SEAL.]

CHARLES HEDRICK,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HEREFORD. Now, if gentlemen will give me their attention (for this is a matter of a great deal of importance to our State) they will see that the proposition before this body now is to seat Mr. Davis immediately, when he has but one certificate, while Mr. Wilson has not only a certificate from the governor precisely like that of Mr. Davis, but also a certificate under the law of the State, signed by all the executive officers except the governor. In other words, Mr. Wilson has one certificate from the governor certifying that he was elected in October, provided that was the legal day for the election; and he has another certificate from all the other executive officers certifying absolutely that he was elected on that day. Now, then, I present to all fair-minded men in this House the question, which of these gentlemen has the prima-facie case?

The mistake in the argument presented here on the other side of the question has been in assuming that this day in August was fixed by the new constitution as the day for our general elections. That is not true. The election held in August was a special election, and it was specifically provided who should be voted for. Is this Congress now going to override the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of the State? I ask you, gentlemen, before giving your votes on this question, to stop and reflect what is the truth of the case. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] said that August was the general election day. Now I read from the new constitution:

General elections of State and county officers, and of members of the Legislature, shall be held on the second Tuesday of October until otherwise provided.

Thus it will be seen that the argument on the other side is based upon wrong premises. The day for our general elections was not in August, but in October under both constitutions. True, the two constitutions fixed different days in October, but the month is the same under both constitutions. Now, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts himself must, when he comes to consider this whole case, be satisfied that he was in error.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman read the provision of the schedule?

Mr. HEREFORD. I was about to do that. The third clause of the schedule provides:

3. The officers authorized by existing laws to conduct general elections shall cause elections to be held at the several places of voting established by law, in each county, on the fourth Thursday of August, 1872, at which elections the votes of all persons qualified to vote under the existing constitution, and offering to vote, shall be taken upon the question of ratifying or rejecting this constitution and schedule.

Now, then, I will read the seventh section of the schedule, and it is under this that the power is claimed to seat Mr. Davis to-day. The claim cannot be sustained legally and justly. I have read the provision of the constitution fixing a certain day in October as a day for our general election. Now, here is the provision for the special election, as contained in this schedule:

7. On the same day, and under the superintendence of the officers who shall conduct the election for determining the ratification or rejection of the constitution and schedule, elections shall be held at the several places of voting in each county for—

For whom? It is expressly provided what officers shall be voted for; and no others could be voted for. I appeal to every lawyer here to bear in mind in considering this question the well-known legal maxim, Inclusio unius, exclusio alterius. It is expressly stated what officers shall be voted for, and nobody else could be legally voted for. What officers is it provided should be voted for? Now, listen, and you will find that members of Congress are not named:

For senators and members of the house of delegates, and all officers, executive, judicial, county, or district, required by this constitution to be elected by the people.

There was no power, then, on the part of the people to vote for any other officers than those thus enumerated. The constitution designates the officers for whom the people should vote; and they had no power under the sun to vote for any others. We had plenty of other officers in the State that were not voted for on that day. The people might just as well have gone to the polls and voted for all our various county and township school officers; but they did not do it. Why? Because the constitution did not authorize it. The constitution expressly designates the officers to be voted for. Now, I appeal to members of this House whether they are going to say, by their votes to-day, that the people of West Virginia had the right to vote for other officers than those the constitution said they had the right to vote for? I say that this was a special election—for what? To ratify or reject the constitution, and to vote for a sufficient number of officers to put that constitution in operation if ratified. It was proper that these officers named should be voted for—the State and county officers—in order to put the constitution in operation. But was it necessary for that purpose to elect members of Congress? No, sir.

Will the gentlemen who maintain that the legal day for the election was in August answer me one question, which, to my mind, settles the whole matter? How did the fourth Thursday of August become the legal day for the election of members of Congress? The fourth Thursday of October had been the day, under the law of the State; it has never been changed; and how did the fourth Thursday of August become the day? Suppose the constitution had been defeated, would Mr. Davis then have been regarded as elected, and admitted to a seat? No, sir. Then his election depended upon a contingency. One portion of the people went to the polls to defeat the constitution; and if they had defeated it, nobody would have been elected.

All we ask you to do is that you shall refer this question to a proper committee. Let the law and the facts be there fully investigated. That is all that these gentlemen ask; it is all that the State asks. Let the appropriate committee examine this question calmly and carefully; then let this House adopt or reject that report, and then we shall be satisfied.

This is not a political question. I cannot believe that any republican in this House will vote for the admission of any of these gentlemen because they are republicans. I hope and believe that such considerations can have no weight with men occupying the high position of members of the American Congress. The leading republican organ of the State of West Virginia, the Wheeling Intelligencer, has published an article, which I hold in my hand, expressing the very same sentiments that I have uttered in your presence to-day. The leading democratic paper in that State has done the same thing. Both parties, through their organs, agree that the fourth Thursday of October was the legal day for the election. But I do not ask the House to pass upon that question to-day. All that I ask is that this question be referred to a committee to determine which of these gentlemen have the prima-facie case. Let me repeat what I have said, that Mr. Wilson has a certificate like that of Mr. Davis, both certificates being dependent upon a proviso. But in addition to that Mr. Wilson has——

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEREFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman makes an appeal in the name of the people of the State. I desire to ask him whether there were not more than 40,000 votes cast at the election in August, while but 22,000 were cast at the election which he now attempts to vindicate?

Mr. HEREFORD. I will answer that question. It is true that more votes were cast at the August election than at the October election. The reason will be readily understood by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and every man upon the floor. We had a great fight in that State upon the adoption or rejection of the constitution and the proposed election of all State officers. This contest brought out all those in favor of the constitution and all those against it; and it brought out also all the friends of the opposing candidates.

Mr. KELLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman another question, whether he himself was not a candidate for Congress at the August election.

Mr. HEREFORD. I was, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. And is not the gentleman here on a certificate based upon that election?

Mr. HEREFORD. As I said in the opening of my argument, I was elected at both elections. I did not believe that August was the time for the election; but fearing that my opponent might be voted for in August, I had myself voted for at the same time. Hence, I said in my opening remarks to-day that to me, personally, the question made no difference. But these inquiries propounded by my friend from Pennsylvania have nothing to do with the question before this body to-day. Whether there were few or many votes cast at either of these elections is not the question. The question is as to the power of a constitutional convention to fix the day for the election of members of Congress.

Allow me to reiterate a point I have already made, as to what officers were to be voted for on the day when the new constitution was submitted to the ratification or rejection of the people. That constitution provides:

On the same day—

That is, in August—

and under the superintendence of the officers who shall conduct the election for determining the ratification or rejection of the constitution and schedule, elections shall be held at the several places of voting in each county, for senators and members of the house of delegates, and all officers, executive, judicial, county, or district, required by this constitution, to be elected by the people.

This constitution did not require members of Congress to be elected by the people. It could not do it. There was a higher law—the Constitution of the United States. What right, what power, had the people to vote for members of Congress on that day, when the new constitution to be voted on said virtually they should not?

I do not intend—I do not think it meet and proper to do so—to go outside of the limits of what I consider proper debate. I will not go into the facts of this case. They are not before this body. I could go on and state in reference to the election in the second congressional district—not with regard to the first, but with regard to the second congressional district—what are the actual state of affairs, but I do not choose to enter into that now. I do not think it proper to do so upon this occasion. All we ask is that this question shall be referred to the Committee on Elections. Let them examine it wisely, calmly, dispassionately. Let them report as soon as possible to this House. Then let us adopt or reject their report. With that I will be satisfied, and the people of my State will be satisfied.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia has eighteen minutes remaining.

Mr. HEREFORD. I will yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] and then for five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] who has spoken on this subject, that it is mainly, if not exclusively, a question of law. The Clerk of this House, in the exercise of his duty under the law, refused to place either of these contestants upon the roll of the House when it was presented on the first day of the session; and I will read the reasons assigned by him on that occasion, so the House may, as I think, have a proper understanding of the position he took, and be induced to follow the course then taken, thus allowing the whole subject to go to the Committee on Elections in order to investigate which of these respective certificates has the most force on a prima-facie case. The Clerk of the House states "that these certificates of election are issued in the alternative, setting forth the due election of these respective parties; provided the time at which they were chosen was the time prescribed by law for holding the election." He considers "these certificates inadmissible for enrolling either of the claimants in the first and second district."

Now, let us examine into the fact in reference to these certificates. No man here will assert that either of them is in fact legal in form. They emanate from one man, acting in his capacity as executive of the State of West Virginia. No one ought to ask for a single moment that either of these two certificates, which are alike in language, should be taken, one over the other, without the fullest examination by a committee of this House, and so seat either as a member upon this floor. It is idle to say that this is a question of law, and should be determined by the House immediately before reference to the Committee on Elections to inquire into the prima-facie case; for if we now decide this question of law without investigation by the committee, there will be an estoppel in reference to the prima-facie case, and the committee would at once go into the merits of the case embraced by the facts involved in the contest. Therefore, I insist that it is only fair dealing to these claimants, only just and right to these contesting parties, to refer this question of law for investigation by the committee and hear their report before any decisive action is taken here. To be sure, you have the power on that side of the House to do it; but let me tell gentlemen they are establishing precedents which may be brought up hereafter against themselves, as justification to this side for like conduct, when the power will be on this side of the House, although I hope such power will never be exercised as it is proposed to be done by gentlemen on the other side.

No man will contend that either of these certificates is in legal form, and they should go, in my judgment, to the Committee on Elections, who can not only investigate the prima-facie case upon the certificates themselves, but, so far as they are applicable, looking to the surrounding facts, determine what the prima-facie case is under the law—whether the prima-facie case is with the certificates of the August election or those of the October election. The constitutional convention not only did not possess the power, but it never exercised the power, as to these two elections, to determine when election of members of Congress should be held. If that convention never did, what force, then, has it in this discussion? It comes back at last to the naked proposition whether we should follow the usual custom, which is a safe one, and have a diligent and proper investigation of all of the legal points involved in the case before any decision is attempted to be made in behalf of any of these contestants.

Mr. CESSNA. I yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. In the short time allowed me I can make but a remark or two on this question. It seems to me, in the first place, that the House has been misled in regard to the action of the constitutional convention of West Virginia. The argument has been made upon the hypothesis that the new constitution of West Virginia, through its schedule, provided for the election of members of Congress. It provided for no such thing. The old constitution and the act of Assembly in obedience to it provided for the election of members of Congress on the fourth Thursday of October. The schedule to the new constitution provided only for the election of officers of the State called for under that constitution, and therefore left the election of members of Congress to take place upon the 4th day of October.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman give us the language of the constitution?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Yes, sir; I will give the gentleman the language of the constitution. The schedule, in the seventh clause, says:

On the same day, and under the superintendence of the officers who shall conduct the election for determining the ratification or rejection of the constitution and schedule, elections shall be held, at the several places of voting in each county, for senators and members of the house of delegates, and all officers, executive, judicial, county, or district, required by this constitution to be elected by the people.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Was not that the general election?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. No, sir.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Was there any other general election?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It was a special election, and if not special, the constitution did not change the general law, which fixes the fourth Thursday of October as the day on which there should be an election for Congress. It is not every election where all the people vote that is a general election. A general election is an election, not for a special occasion, but it is one held under the general law at the regular annual or biennial election of the State, and although an occasion may arise when all the people may vote, that does not constitute a general election in the meaning of the law. For instance, Pennsylvania votes in a few days to ratify her constitution. That is not a general election under the law of Pennsylvania. Their general election takes place on the second Tuesday of October of each year. Though all the people may vote at the coming election, yet it is only a special election, and not general.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Was there any election for any officers in West Virginia in 1872 but that held on the fourth Thursday of August?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. No, sir. But in my State, and in other States, elections may be held for members of Congress, and for no other officers. And though the law had hitherto fixed the fourth Thursday of October as the day of election, the convention did not assume to change it, as it had no right to do. The Constitution of the United States, which declares that the Legislature shall elect the United States Senator, says that the Legislature shall fix the time and place for holding the election of members of Congress. Now, if that convention had the right to change the time of holding the election at which to elect members of this House, it had the right also to elect a United States Senator; and who pretends it could do that? I deny that there is any precedent for such action. I admit that, in the case of Territories coming into the Union as States, from necessity provision has been made at the same time for ratifying the State constitution and for elections to Congress. But I say that in no old State of this Union—and I defy any gentleman to produce such an authority—has any constitutional convention fixed the time for elections of members of Congress. The question, however, before the House is not whether the election was held in October or in August, or which was the legal day; but it is whether there is a prima-facie case. If there is a prima-facie case in favor of either party, admit him. But if there is any doubt as to that, under the record, as honest men we are sworn here not to decide the case, but to refer it to the Judiciary Committee.

The certificates which all the gentlemen hold are conditional upon their face, and show no right to either party. If Mr. Davis has a prima-facie case by virtue of his certificate, they his competitor, Mr. Wilson, holding a duplicate, also has a prima-facie case; thus presenting the absurdity that both contending parties have prima-facie cases. Therefore, one is as much entitled to be seated as the other.

How many members of this House from the discussion the case has received can fully understand it? And if they do not understand how the case is under the law, then they are bound to refer it to the legal committee.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would ask the gentleman whether that provision of the code of 1868 which provided for a general election on the fourth Thursday of October was not repealed by the constitution that was adopted?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It was as regards the election of State officers, but not as regards the election of members of Congress. Gentlemen who undertake to enlighten the House upon the case ought themselves to understand it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I think I do.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I do not think the gentleman understands it. That provision of the code applied to the election of State officers and not to the election of members of Congress. I desire to say just one word further.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Which of these two elections was the first in point of time; the election under the schedule or the other?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The election under the schedule. And if the new constitution had not been adopted, where then would have been your members of Congress? Would it not have been the duty of the people to hold another election on the fourth Thursday of October? Otherwise the State would have had no representation. If the constitution had been voted down there would have been no election in West Virginia for State officers and members of Congress, unless it had been held in October. The election was conditional upon the ratification of the constitution, and gentlemen call that a general election.

Mr. KELLEY. Did not both political parties put full congressional tickets into the field at the August election?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I have here the certificate of the friends of Mr. Wilson that in eleven counties of the State the people did not vote because they had no right to vote.

Mr. KELLEY. I repeat my question: did not both political parties put full congressional tickets into the field at the August election?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I was not there, and cannot say. The facts do not appear on the record. I stick to that, and do not look to the action of parties to construe constitutional questions.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I tell the gentleman that they did.

Mr. HEREFORD. And I beg to tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he is in error.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am informed by one of the gentlemen interested that in his congressional district both political parties met in convention and both declared that they had no right to make nominations for an election in August. My friend from Pennsylvania ought to inform himself better before he speaks.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Was not Mr. Wilson nominated by the regular democratic convention?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEREFORD. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HEREFORD. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER.]

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that if the House should refuse to seat these gentlemen, I shall move to refer the credentials of both applicants to the Committee on the Judiciary, which I think is the proper disposition that should be made of this case. It is true that the resolution only proposes to give the gentlemen it names a prima-facie right to the seats; but although it is a prima-facie case, it is also all the case there is about it. The case has but one phase—a single, naked question of law.

If the members elected in October were legally elected, then beyond question they are entitled to their seats. If, on the other hand, the legal election was in August, then the members elected at the August election are entitled to their seats. There is nothing else in this case but just simply that naked question. Was the election for members of Congress which took place in the State of West Virginia in August, 1872, a legal election, or was the one which took place in October the legal election? My impression has been that it was the election in October which was the legal election. But I am satisfied that the case is far too grave for us to pass upon it in this hasty manner, and that before we set the precedent in a matter of such importance and so new as this, the Committee on the Judiciary of this House should have an opportunity to consider it. Therefore, I seek to have the resolution now pending voted down.

I do not go into the merits of the question at all, when I seek to state, as I now do, the question involved. These questions are, first, whether by any just construction of the statutes, the day of the election can be said to have been changed by the constitutional convention of West Virginia from October to August, 1872? That is a question not free from difficulty, because it requires the combination and consideration of several various laws. Then the second question is, if that be the effect of the constitutional and legislative action together, to change to August the day of election, which before 1872 had been in October, then had the constitutional convention the right to make that change? Prior to 1872 the constitution and Legislature of the State both fixed October as the time of the general election. The constitutional convention of 1872 in its schedule submitted itself for adoption by the people. Both the constitution of 1872 and the prior constitution fixed October as the time of the congressional or general election. But by the constitution of 1872 it was provided that for that particular year the election should take place in August. And it was said that by force of previous statute that provision included the election of Representatives in Congress.

Now, the facts are that the district in which Mr. Hagans is contestant, the different parties met and made no nominations. But a few days before the election the one claiming a seat had his name placed upon some ticket and received some votes upon that day. At the October election in that district there were six candidates in nomination, the highest of which reeeived over 5,500 votes. Therefore, the public opinion of that State seems to have been entirely unsettled in regard to the matter, and the majority in that district seemed to favor the election in October. Now, whether the day in August was the day the constitutional convention intended or not is a very grave question, for there arises this question, is the convention a Legislature? The Constitution of the United States says that Representatives in Congress shall have the time of their election fixed by the Legislatures of their States. Now, was this constitutional convention a Legislature? If it was, then not only might it fix the day for electing members of Congress, but it might also have proceeded to elect Senators of the United States. While I do not mean to say that it was not a Legislature, I do not want to pass upon that question, and I do not. I do not know what the committee of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] may have decided in that regard. He probably will tell the House. But without reference to what the decision of the House has been in previous cases, this is too serious a question for us to determine in this hasty manner.

Then there remains this other question to be considered. The constitutional convention in West Virginia directed the constitution to be submitted for adoption upon a given day in August. Now, assuming that it provided for the election of members of Congress on that day, then it provided for their election before that constitution was adopted. Could the constitutional convention have the power to provide for the election of men in that conditional manner, that is, if the constitution was adopted it was to be a good election, if not adopted it was not to be a good election? I understand that that question, and the whole question of the constitutional convention ordering an election, is now before the courts in Philadelphia, and before being called upon to pass upon the question here, I should like to have the benefit of their judgment.

Now, upon the grounds I have indicated, I am disposed to insist that this resolution shall be voted down, with the view of giving me an opportunity to move that this question should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, where it properly belongs.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. BABCOCK, his private secretary.

EXPENDITURES OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting estimates of expenditures, in compliance with the act of August 26, 1842; which was ordered to be printed, and to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs when appointed.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury; which was ordered to be printed, and to be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means when appointed.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the clerk of the Court of Claims, in compliance with the act of June 25, 1868, stating the judgments rendered by said court for the year ending December 1, 1873; which was ordered to be printed, and to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations when appointed.

REPORT OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House

a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency, transmitting to the House his eleventh annual report, for 1873; which was ordered to be printed, and to be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed.

LAWS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the secretary of the District of Columbia, in compliance with the act of February 21, 1871, transmitting four copies of the laws of the District of Columbia; which was ordered to be printed, and to be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia when appointed.

REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873; which was ordered to be printed, and to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

CONSULAR EXPENDITURES, ETC.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit to Congress a report, dated the 2d instant, with the accompanying papers, received from the Secretary of State, in compliance with the requirements of the 16th and 18th sections of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August 18, 1856.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, December 2, 1873.

The message, with accompanying documents, was ordered to be printed, and to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs when appointed.

WEST VIRGINIA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CESSNA] is entitled to thirty minutes.

Mr. CESSNA. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MARSHALL.]

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I have a word or two to say in regard to this question. It is certainly one presenting various difficulties, and for that reason I feel the force of the point made by my friend from New York, [Mr. POTTER,] that this case is one which should go to a competent committee for the purpose of determining it. I think by this delay it will work no injury to any party, as it is a legal question, which can be disposed of within a very few days. My first impression was otherwise, and I only rise for the purpose of saying I have been unable to feel the full force of the argument presented by my friends on this side of the House in favor of the validity of the October election. I must admit, on the brief examination I have given to this question, that my mind tends strongly to the conviction, if there was any legal election in West Virginia in 1872, it was in August, and not in October. I came to this conclusion after hearing everything that has been said by members on this as well as on the other side of the House.

It is not necessary to read the clause in the Federal Constitution, it must be familiar to every member of the House, that the time and place of holding the elections for members of Congress must be fixed by the Legislature in the absence of any action on the part of Congress. That is not controverted; but that does not dispose of this question. The code of West Virginia does not say the election for members of Congress shall be held on the fourth Thursday of October.

The code of West Virginia simply provides that the general election of the State shall be held on the fourth Thursday of October, of each year, but then, in a subsequent clause, there is a provision in regard to the election for members of Congress "that at such election every second year members of Congress shall also be elected." What is the meaning of this phraseology? Does it mean that on the fourth Thursday of October there shall be an election for members of Congress. Not at all. "At such election." What election? The general election of West Virginia. That is unquestionably the interpretation of that language. I can come to no other conclusion from the examination I have given to it. It refers to the general election of West Virginia held at such time; and then, in a subsequent clause, it is provided that at such election every second year members of Congress shall be elected. What was the object? That there should not be two elections in West Virginia for State officers and for local officers and for members of Congress, but that they should all be elected at the same time and at the same general election.

That, it seems to me, is the true interpretation. Now, what follows? The constitutional convention of West Virginia have provided for the holding of the general election for State officers for the year 1872 in August instead of in October. It is true they say nothing of members of Congress. Why not? Following out the view of my friends from Kentucky and Virginia they had no right to do so, assuming it was not a Legislature. I will not go into that question whether the constitutional convention was a Legislature or not. Assuming it was not a Legislature, what follows? The Legislature has settled the question. Not by naming the time, but by relation. Relation to what? Relation to the general election for State and local officers. It says, in almost express words, that members of Congress shall be elected on the same day the election is held for State and local officers. The constitutional convention had the right to change the time of the general election for State and local officers, and the law already in existence provided that the election for members of Congress should be held at the same time. There was no general election in October, and it follows, if members of Congress were to be elected at the general election, then if there was a legal general election in August, 1872, there could be no legal general election in October. It was set aside by the action of the constitution ratified by the voice of the people, and by relation made operative from the commencement of that day.

I do not propose to go into the argument at this time, for the reason that whatever may be my own impression, I believe this question is of such character that it ought to go to the committee with instructions, if you please, to report upon it immediately. It is a legal question, and ought to be disposed of promptly. Not being able to agree in the views presented by my friends who have spoken thus far, I have sought the floor to say this much in expression of my own opinion.

Mr. CESSNA. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR.]

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I was originally of the opinion that this was a question which should more properly be referred to a committee, and accordingly voted with the minority against taking it up at the present time; but as the House have resolved to devote these two hours to its consideration, and it is simply a single question of law, it seems to me now, bowing to that decision of the House, we may consider this question has been discussed in Committee of the Whole and this discussion is tacked to its decision.

And upon the question I must say that any doubts I may have had upon it have been thoroughly relieved by the argument of the able member from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD,] and of my friend from New York, [Mr. POTTER.] The whole question seems to me to be in a nutshell. When you come to the construction of the statute law of West Virginia, you will find this to be the fact, that instead of providing by law for a specific day of a specific month in which the election shall be held, the people of West Virginia have provided, as I believe has been done in some other States, that the election shall be on the day when something else takes place, whenever that day is; as in one State I remember there was a provision that the election for members of Congress in the year of the presidential election should be on the day of the presidential election.

The Legislature of West Virginia have decided, and have passed a statute to that effect, that the election for members of Congress shall be on the day of their general election in the year of the congressional election. Well, in this year, in which the amendment to the constitution was adopted, the constitutional convention, who had power to frame a constitution for West Virginia, which should fix the day of the general election, embodied in the constitution a provision that the general election for that year should be on a particular day in August, provided the people of the State ratified their action on that day. The people of the State did ratify their action on that day. That was the only day on which the general election was held or could be held in that year; and the law of West Virginia had said that on the day of that general election members of Congress should be elected. If they had not been elected on that day, Mr. Speaker, I fail to see, under the language of the law of West Virginia, how they could have been elected at any other time during that year without a new legislative provision.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. If the constitution of West Virginia submitted to the people had not been ratified, and the elections of all the officers it provided for had gone for naught, then would not the old act, which required the election to take place in October of that year, have revived?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I understand it exactly so; that if the constitution had failed, then there would have had to be a general election and the only lawful general election in October, and that members of Congress would then have been chosen. But as the constitution was adopted the general election was held by the vote of the constitutional convention, and by the acts of the people of West Virginia, in August. No other general election was held in that year. If the constitution had not been adopted, then the election of members of Congress would have failed, along with the election of all other officers, because it would have turned out that that was not the day of the general election of that year.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him with a question?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Does the gentleman not make a general election depend upon the fact of the election of certain officers, and should he limit a general election to that definition? May not an election be a special election because it takes place at a particular time, as well as because it elects a particular officer; and was not this a special election because it was at a special time fixed for a special purpose, to wit, to adopt the constitution, and to put in force that constitution by the election only of the officers required to put it in force?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. That point was made before. But it all comes to just this: What does the State of West Virginia, in everybody's understanding, mean by a general election when it provides that in such a year, on such a day, and no other, it shall be held?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CESSNA. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD.]

Mr. MAYNARD. It certainly required all the well-known sagacity of my excellent friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to detect partisanship in this measure, introduced into this House at this time after its organization, and into a House constituted numerically as this is. I suspected nothing of the sort, and I fear none of us would have discovered it had it not been so forcibly pointed out.

It seems to me that to state the question is to decide it. Two elections were held last year for Congress in West Virginia, one in August and one in October. One gentleman, the gentleman from West Virginia who has addressed the House, was a candidate at both elections, and in his district was the successful candidate at both. In the other two districts of the State two candidates were elected in August, and other two in October. I freely admit that the legal question lying at the bottom of the matter is not devoid of difficulty. I have my own views of it pretty decided, but not yet so decided as that on further consideration, on further examination, and on further argument, they might not be changed. With this view, I desire that the case shall be referred to the proper committee, where the statute of West Virginia, the action of the constitutional convention, and anything else bearing on the question, may be analyzed and presented in such a manner that we may be able to settle it without establishing a precedent which might work harm hereafter.

Meanwhile what shall be done? It is public policy that no portion of the country shall be unrepresented in Congress. It is public policy that somebody shall upon this floor represent West Virginia while this inquiry is proceeding, whether it proceed for a day, a week, or a month. Important questions are constantly arising, in which the people of that State have a right to be heard, and on which it is of importance to all of us that they should have a hearing. The fact, I believe, is not controverted, that, at the August election, a very general vote was polled for members of Congress, a much larger vote than was polled at the October election; and that it was the general understanding and belief of the people of West Virginia, and of the officers who held the election of the two political parties, and of the several nominees, that the election at that time was valid and proper. It was an election that was held in earnest, and that was contested in earnest.

A question somewhat similar rose in the last Congress. It will be remembered by gentlemen who were members of the House in that Congress that a question was raised in regard to the delegation from Tennessee. An election had been held, certain gentlemen had been returned, and it was alleged that, by operation of certain statutes of the State, the election had been held at an improper time, and that there was, in reality, no law for holding an election on that day. It was claimed that the election was null, and a challenge was made to the enrolling of the gentlemen elected at that time.

That House decided to let those gentlemen take their seats pending the inquiry ordered before the Committee on Elections. That committee examined the law arising upon the case, and they made a report, a copy of which I hold in my hand, in which, after analyzing the several statutes which were repealed and re-repealed, they reported that, in their judgment, the election was held on the proper day. And they add this suggestion, which I wish to present to this House as, in my judgment, bearing upon this case:

> If, however, the question as to whether by the act of 1870 the time for holding the election in question was changed from August to November was one of doubt, we should feel bound to follow the construction given to it by all the authorities of the State of Tennessee, whose duty it has been to construe it and to execute it. It is admitted that the governor and all other authorities in Tennessee having anything to do with the construction and enforcement of this act of 1870 have construed it as in nowise affecting the act of 1868, and by common and universal assent the election was held at the time fixed in the latter act.

It seems to me that this is a case in which is eminently applicable the old common-law maxim, so old that it has come down to us in the barbarous language of that time, prior in tempore, potior in jure; that the gentlemen who were elected at the first election by the assent of the entire body of voters, an election presided over by the properly constituted officials, should be held by the House, for the time being, to represent the people of the State until such time as the Committee on Elections shall have opportunity to examine the whole subject and to report thereupon to the House. It is in this view of the case that I shall vote for the admission of these gentlemen at this time.

Mr. CESSNA. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that I have the slightest desire in this case, except that we shall now establish a precedent that shall be safe, and at the same time that we shall do as little injustice to these districts as possible in the matter of representation. And I would not take up a moment of the time of this House had not two gentlemen, entertaining precisely opposite views upon this question, done me the honor, if there be any honor in it, to cite me as authority for the support of their various views.

I desire, therefore, to ask the attention of the House for a few moments, in order to see if I have furnished the gentlemen who entertain these opposite views any authority for those views by anything I may have said or done in the discharge of the duties that devolved upon me in this House for ten years as a member of the Committee on Elections.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] has cited the report of the Committee on Elections which I made to this House in an election case from the State of Virginia, and draws the conclusion that, if the opinion expressed in that report be correct, it is impossible for a constitutional convention to establish the time for holding an election for members of Congress, but that duty devolves at all times solely upon the Legislature. He cites a case that arose during the rebellion, in a State in which there was no constitution or law operative at all. In a state of anarchy and without law, a voluntary convention, having no authority whatever conferred upon it by the people, ex necessitate rei, got together voluntarily, and set in operation a form of government, created a Legislature, provided the time, mode, and manner of the election of a governor, and when that form of government should take effect. That government came into existence; that Legislature was summoned and entered upon its duties, and was in session discharging, as well as it might, the duties devolving upon a Legislature. Cotemporaneous with it, sitting side by side with it, was this constitutional convention, voluntary in its origin, without any authority in form of law conferred upon it by the people, but undertaking to perform the functions of a Legislature side by side with the Legislature then in session.

It was the opinion of the Committee on Elections at that time that that convention, whatever authority it had, possessed authority derived from the necessity of creating a form of government for the State of Virginia, but that it could not assume, after it had created a government, to perform the very functions with which it had clothed the Legislature it had itself called into being. That Legislature, having undertaken to fix the time for holding an election of members of Congress, it seemed to the committee that that convention could not assume any authority to control that Legislature in that matter. That was the opinion of the Committee on Elections cited by the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD.]

The report or decision of the committee cited by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] was in a different case. The extract which the gentleman quotes from the syllabus of that case seems to me altogether unnecessary in the decision of this case. The syllabus to which he refers was put in by the clerk of the committee, and not by the committee itself. By that syllabus the committee are made to say what there was no occasion to say, because the case did not require it to be said at all; that is, that in their opinion the constitution of Oregon could fix, beyond the control of the Legislature, the time for holding elections for members of Congress. There was no occasion in the case for the committee to have said that at all. I doubt very much whether that is the law. I have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the constitutional convention can fix that time, but, as at present advised, I do not believe that they can so fix it that it cannot be afterward changed by the Legislature.

I think that when a constitutional convention, clothed with power to make an organic law for a State, enters upon its duties, it is exercising the highest legislative power known in a State, absorbing all other power, and whenever it does exercise that authority, and it comes in conflict with any then existing law of the State, that authority must prevail over any existing law. But I have my doubts whether it is quite accurate to say that such a convention can so fix this matter that in all subsequent time the Legislature can make no alteration in that respect. I find upon looking into this case that there was no necessity for the committee to express any such opinion whatever, therefore I am unwilling to sit here and see that case cited as an authority upon that point. The proper view may be what has been urged, but I have very considerable doubts upon the subject. The trouble with me, however, in this case does not lie there.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is it not the logic of the case of Baldwin vs. Trowbridge, decided by this House on the 14th of February, 1866, that the constitutional convention may fix the time beyond the control of the Legislature?

Mr. DAWES. I have always been aware, while my friend from Ohio and myself have occupied this floor together, that he could make a better argument for me than I could make for myself; but, as I have told him before, I would always rather make my own argument. [Laughter.] One reason why I doubt the authority which has been cited from an opinion I wrote myself is, because in the case of Baldwin, which my friend from Ohio insisted upon naming before I got to it, my learned friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] drawing the report, although it appears that I acquiesced in it, the contrary ground is stated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to occupy a few minutes more.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. DAWES. It appears, therefore, that the Committee on Elections has laid down the doctrine both ways. The question is one of great importance, and it is very desirable that upon such a question the conflict of authority which has gone upon the record of the House should be reconciled. There may come times when the settlement of this question will be vital to the rights of men upon this floor; and it is quite as well to settle it when we can do so calmly and considerately.

These opinions on our records here were put forth in troublous times. They extend over the period of the rebellion. We hear cited in the House of Representatives, as authority, opinion after opinion given upon cases that had no analogy to any others, and could be governed by no precedent then in existence. The committee realized then, and they realize even more now, that they had to feel their way and tread on doubtful ground. In reference to this book of contested-election cases, I once said with considerable confidence that whatever might be its demerits it had this one merit, that all the decisions were alike. I do not think so well of this book now as I did then. The longer I live and the more I see of the uncertainty of the questions and circumstances involved in the cases which then arose, and which in some instances were very summarily disposed of, the more I am inclined to think that they are dangerous precedents for times of peace and quiet. I do not now set that value upon those decisions that I vainly did at the time when they were promulgated in this House.

But, as I was about to say when I was interrupted, there is another trouble with me in this case. While, as at present advised, I regard the August election as the only legal election in West Virginia, yet I want to have this question sifted by a learned committee of this House, so that the case may be put upon a ground that will stand; so that the decision may be cited as a precedent in times when power shall have passed out of our hands, if that time should come. If I studied anything while acting upon the Committee on Elections it was that I should not make dangerous precedents. I am as conscious as any other man how far short the committee came in undertaking to reach that result.

But, Mr. Speaker, my colleague in his argument has stated that, in the schedule providing for an election a general election was provided for. I do not so understand it. I understand that the provision was for the election of certain officers eo nomine; and it turned out that the list embraces most, if not all, of the State officers.

Mr. LAWRENCE. All.

Mr. DAWES. All the State officers, as my friend from Ohio states. Now, inasmuch as the statute had established a general election, and had designated the day of the general election for the election of members of Congress, if the constitutional convention had intended that there should be different days for these elections, (I do not say whether they did so intend,) they would have chosen precisely the language of the seventh article in the schedule. In other words, they would have said, substantially, "We will fix the time for electing these officers designated, leaving those not mentioned to be elected under the existing law." Now read the schedule and you will see that, instead of providing for a general election in terms, there is a provision for the election of certain designated officers, members of Congress being omitted from that enumeration. The rule of expressio unius, exclusio alterius would therefore seem to have some bearing upon this question; and hence a difficulty arises in my mind. I would prefer, therefore, (and I shall vote for such a motion if it be made, though I do not propose to make it,) that this case be referred to the Committee on Elections, in order that they may review, as they will be able to do, the prior decisions of that committee upon the authority of a constitutional convention to fix the time for holding elections of members of Congress, as well as all the other questions involved.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CESSNA] has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. CESSNA. So much has been said by various gentlemen on this side of the House, that I deem it altogether useless to attempt to go over the argument in the five minutes remaining. I therefore yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR,] giving notice that at the expiration of the five minutes I shall resume the floor to call the previous question.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Speaker, I think that there are insuperable objections to the adoption of this resolution. I do not agree in the opinion expressed by the member from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] and by the member from Massachusetts farthest from me, [Mr. BUTLER,] that the question which this proposition presents is whether a convention of the people of a State is, in the sense of the Federal Constitution, a Legislature, and whether it has the right to fix the time and place of election, nor whether, being such a Legislature, the constitutional convention in West Virginia, upon a fair interpretation of the constitution adopted, fixed the election in that State on the day when this gentleman was chosen who is now proposed to be sworn in. It seems to me that these grave constitutional questions are not involved in this issue, and that the discussion of them at this time is premature and irrelevant. The simple question, if I understand it, is whether Mr. DAVIS has a prima-facie right to be sworn in and recognized as a member of this body pending the contest between himself and his rival claimant for the seat in dispute.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what constitutes a prima-facie right to a seat in this House? What is it that contradistinguishes the right of a member to be sworn in, from his title to a permanent occupancy of a seat in this House? What is the principle which so severs these two rights that one may be in one person and the other in a different person. It is, if I comprehend it properly, simply a right based on a credential—formal, regular, and perfect on its face, showing the person therein named to be duly elected according to the laws of his State. If he does not present such a credential—perfect, absolute, and in due form, and showing on its face that the election was according to the laws of the State, whatever may be the merits of his claim as developed, by evidence obtained outside of it, he cannot, in case of a contest, be said to have a prima-facie right to be sworn in pending the contest.

Now, will any member pretend that Mr. Davis, the gentleman mentioned in the resolution, presents to the House a credential of this character? Will any gentleman say that the certificate is regular and sufficient; or that the governor who signs it certifies that in his opinion Mr. Davis was elected at all? Apart from information derived from sources outside of this certificate, would any member upon reading it hesitate to pronounce it insufficient in every respect, especially in view of the fact (of which the House has been officially notified) that the claim to the seat is contested and the validity of the election itself is denied?

Allow me to read the credential, for it seems to me on this point, and on this point alone, hinges the decision of this preliminary question.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, to wit:

I, John J. Jacob, governor of the said State, pursuant to the act of the Legislature thereof in such case made and provided, do hereby certify that John J. Davis, of the county of Harrison, was duly chosen on the 22d day of August, 1872: (Provided——

Is it necessary to go any further when we are informed on the very face of this paper that there is a proviso which may render nugatory the right which it certifies to? What else?

Provided that was the time prescribed by law for holding an election for Representatives in the Congress of the United States, a Representative in the Congress of the United States for the first congressional district of this State, composed of the counties of Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, Marshall, Wetzell, Tyler, Pleasants, Doddridge, Harrison, Ritchie, Wood, West, Gilmer, Calhoun, and Lewis, for the term commencing on the 4th day of March next.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the said State of West Virginia, this 29th day of January, 1873.

[SEAL.] JOHN J. JACOB.

By the governor:

JOHN M. PHELPS,
Secretary of State.

Sir, this condition incorporated into this credential emasculates it, deprives it of all vitality, and makes it an unreality, so far as a prima-facie title to a seat in this House is concerned. The condition is that he is duly elected, provided his election was a valid and legal one. Why, sir, this is no certifiate of an election. It is equivalent to saying that Davis was not elected on that day unless the election was legal. Yet this is the paper presented here upon which it is proposed to swear in a member whose right is contested by a claimant holding also a certificate of his own election precisely the same in character, and signed by the same governor.

The member from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] says the certificate refers to the law, and by examining the law it appears that the election is valid. The argument is fatal. If he, in order to show the right to a seat, is compelled to refer to something outside of the certificate (whether it be matter of law or fact is immaterial) there can be no prima-facie right based on such a certificate.

But there is another and stronger objection to the action proposed by this resolution. That there is no such prima-facie right in Mr. Davis is evinced in another way.

But there is another and stronger objection to the action proposed. That there is no such prima-facie right as that claimed in this resolution is evidenced in another way.

By the law of Congress the Clerk of the preceding House is invested with the power and charged with the duty of determining, in making up his roll, what members have regular credentials, and are, prima facie, entitled to seats upon this floor. It was through the exercise of this power lodged in the discretion of the Clerk that we were enabled to elect our Speaker and to organize the House. It cannot be said that this power is merely nominal and is expended when he has completed the roll. It is a vitally pratical power. It has played an important and controlling part in the organization of this House, and has been on more than one occasion instrumental in shaping the legislation of Congress. It was by the exercise of this power of the Clerk to decide who were, prima facie, the regularly-elected members, that, within a few years past, the delegations from all the States in one entire section were excluded from seats in Congress.

Now, sir, the Clerk has made his decision as to the prima-facie right in this case. The tribunal to which the law of the land has referred these questions of prima-facie right has made its decision, and has announced to the House that, there being two sets of credentials from West Virginia, purporting to come from the same authority, in the same language, there is no prima-facie case, and no one is entitled, prima facie, to a seat upon this floor; and he refers it to this House for investigation.

I do not wish to be understood as intimating that this law can limit the constitutional power of the House to judge of the election of its members. Its power is plenary, and it can, if it chooses to reverse the decision of the Clerk, do so. What I mean to say is that the decision of the Clerk in this case furnishes record evidence that there is a controversy affecting the prima-facie right to be sworn in, which the Clerk has remitted to this House for investigation. What is the duty of the House under these circumstances?

In such cases the practice of this House has been so uniform and the precedents have been so numerous that they may be considered to have hardened into parliamentary custom and law; and that is to refer to the Committee on Elections for investigation as well the question of the prima-facie right, as the question of the merits of the controversy. The great New Jersey case, in 1839, was a case of this sort.

In this notable and leading case two delegations presented themselves; one with the certificate of the governor of the State, the other with the certificate of the secretary of state of New Jersey. After a debate, covering nearly two weeks, the House refused to permit either set of contestants to be recognized as members, but referred the matter to a committee, which, in an elaborate report, decided in favor of the prima-facie right of the delegation bearing the certificate of the secretary of state. Since the war there have been up to 1870, five cases in which the House was called upon to decide the question as to which of the rival claimants for the seat in dispute had the prima-facie right thereto, pending the contest.

In the case of Coffroth and Koonst, each party presented a certificate of his election. Each certificate was signed by a different set of return judges, the only question being which was the legal certificate.

The question of the prima-facie right of the claimants to the disputed seat was referred to the Committee on Elections for consideration and action.

The other cases I have not time to refer to; but the action of the House was the same as that in the cases I just cited, and the reverse of the course proposed in this resolution.

In the few moments allowed me I can advert to but one more objection to this resolution which strikes my mind as conclusive. I admit, Mr. Speaker, that in many cases the distinction on which gentlemen insist, between the right of a person to be sworn in on the face of his regular certificate, signed by the proper authority, and the right of permanent membership, which, in case of a contest, may be developed by proof exists.

As a general rule it is a well-recognized distinction; but in this case it does not exist practically; for both rights rest precisely on the same ground.

The subtle and refined considerations so ably and clearly presented by a gentleman, whom I have not the pleasure of knowing, on the other side, and to whom I cannot, therefore, refer more definitely, (I am just informed it is Mr. E. R. HOAR, of Massachusetts,) bear directly on the merits of the controversy, and, if well-founded, will be decisive of the final result.

The propositions of gentlemen that a convention convoked by a Legislature to form the fundamental law of a State government is itself an unlimited Legislature, and can enact statutes as well; that convention of West Virginia did fix the day of election for Congressmen, and that this party who now seeks to be sworn in was elected on that day, these and the other constitutional propositions which have been urged to make out the prima-facie case of this party, bear directly on the merits of the case and will, if passed upon now, control finally the rights of the contestant to the seats in dispute.

The House cannot decide the question of the prima-facie right without prejudging the merits of this contest; for in this case the rights rest on the same ground, and cannot be severed. These grave and perplexing constitutional questions, amid the intricacies of which gentlemen thread their way so cautiously, and on which so much difference of opinion has been expressed, not only in this debate but also by the most eminent writers on public law, should not be hastily decided on a question preliminary to the real investigation of the case.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CESSNA. I now call the previous question.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Will the gentleman allow a motion to refer before the previous question is ordered?

Mr. CESSNA. I decline to allow any amendments.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is there any way to reach a motion to refer except by voting down the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes that the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows the effect of the rules in regard to that as well as the Chair does himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOFIELD. But perhaps there are other members who do not know.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, should the previous question not be seconded, it would then be in order to move a reference, or any amendment.

The question was taken on seconding the call for the previous question; and there were—ayes 54, noes 109.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I now move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Elections; and on that motion I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was referred to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour will now begin.

Mr. COX. Would it be in order to raise a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment, to allow me to introduce a bill for reference?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman.

REDEMPTION OF LOAN.

Mr. DAWES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1) to provide for the redemption of the loan of 1858; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NIBLACK. I ask the gentlemen from New York to yield to me, to allow me to introduce a bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the regular order.

LOUISIANA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. COX. As a question of privilege, I move the following resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the name of E. C. Davidson be placed upon the rolls as a Representative from the fourth district of Louisiana.

Mr. COX. I also send to the Clerk's desk the certificate of the governor of Louisiana which is in the same form as the certificates which have been read heretofore; also a certificate dated the 4th day of February, 1873, from the acting secretary of state, which shows that in the fourth congressional district Mr. Davidson received 14,321, and his opponent Mr. Peters 10,566 votes. The certificate bears on its face the great seal of the State of Louisiana. I do not ask to have this document read, but I ask that by unanimous consent, it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There was no objection, the certificate and extract from election returns are as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, December 4, 1872.

This is to certify, that at a general election held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, E. C. Davidson received fourteen thousand three hundred and twenty-one votes, and Samuel Peters received ten thousand five hundred and seventy-one votes.

Now, therefore, I do hereby declare E. C. Davidson duly elected to represent the fourth congressional district of the State of Louisiana in the Forty-third Congress of the United States.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State, this 4th day of December, A. D. 1872, and of the Independence of the United States of America the ninety-seventh.

[SEAL.] H. C. WARMOTH.

By the governor:
Y. A. WOODWARD,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Extract from compiled returns of an election held in the State of Louisiana, for Congressmen, on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, pursuant to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the conduct and to maintain the freedom and purity of elections," &c., approved March 16, 1870.

Fourth Congressional District.

Parishes.	LONG TERM.				SHORT TERM.
	E. C. Davidson.	Samuel Peters.	I. S. U. Wells.	Frank Morey.	Harry Loet.	Alex. Boarman.
Avoyelles	1,795	1,370	.....	1,370	.....	1,796
Bossier	953	554	.....	554	.....	948
Caddo	1,790	1,577	.....	1,571	.....	1,766
De Soto	1,448	446	.....	446	.....	1,445
West Feliciana	248	1,457	.....	1,458	.....	249
Grant	511	400	.....	402	.....	513
Natchitoches	1,246	541	.....	543	.....	1,246
Point Coupée	1,097	1,592	.....	1,592	.....	1,097
Red River	361	913	.....	913	.....	361
Rapides	1,928	976	228	1,161	.....	2,003
Sabine	789	53	.....	60	.....	767
Vernon	661	18	21	16	.....	708
Webster	941	622	.....	622	.....	941
Winn	544	47	.....	19	37	537
Total	14,312	10,566	249	10,727	37	14,377

STATE OF LOUISIANA, OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE,
New Orleans, La., February 4, 1873.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy from the compiled returns of the board of returning-officers duly constituted under the provisions of the act No. 98 of 1872, approved November 20, 1872, and which returns were duly promulgated in the New Orleans Picayune of January 22, 1873.

Witness my hand and the seal of the State of Louisiana, this 4th day of February, A. D. 1873, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

WALTER S. LONG,
Acting Secretary of State.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Speaker, having obtained the consent of the House that those papers shall appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to-morrow, so that they may be read by gentlemen if no vote shall be taken, I beg to say that this case is distinguished from the cases we decided yesterday. The difference is that the opponent of Mr. Davidson (Mr. Peters) died after the election. Perhaps he received a certificate. I do not know as to that; but he is dead, and there is no certificate in his favor here; or at least none is presented. There has been an election ordered since that time to fill that supposed vacancy. Mr. Smith was elected, as reported in the papers. I am stating all the facts. The vote has not yet been compiled. There has not been time since the election to have it done. But I claim that the certificate I have presented makes a prima-facie case, no other certificate being presented here. Hence it differs from the cases yesterday, in which, as all the gentlemen who discussed those cases confess, there were two certificates from two conflicting governments in Louisiana. I much fear me that the House seems to have decided as to the validity of the certificates yesterday more by party bias than by a fair judgment, influenced by their preconception of the validity of the two conflicting governments.

I am inclined to think that what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] once said in a public lecture in reference to the partisan judgment of the House of Representatives as to the qualification of its members, is especially applicable to the action of the House of Representatives yesterday.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I wish to raise the question of consideration at this time of this matter, if it is to take up much time. It is interrupting the morning-hour business with a question of privilege.

Mr. COX. I suppose if the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] had his own case at stake, he would not be so very particular to shut out a member who was duly elected to a seat in this House.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does the gentleman propose to take up much time in this case?

Mr. COX. I am trying to make my statements compact. So far as I am concerned I will eliminate from the discussion all the matters which were discussed yesterday.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The gentleman can answer my question. If this is to take but a short time I will not raise the question of consideration.

Mr. COX. Suppose it takes an hour; what are you going to do about it?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The morning hour was announced by the Chair, and I want the morning-hour business to go on.

Mr. COX. I do not know what the object of the gentleman is. What does he propose by going on with the business to-day?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will tell the gentleman plainly what I propose. As I understand, the morning hour is devoted to the call of States; that will bring up at some stage a call of States for the introduction of bills to be put upon their passage. I want at the earliest moment possible, and that is what I am now seeking, to bring before this body a bill which has been elaborately prepared by a committee of a portion of this House for the repeal of the increase of salaries. That is why I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. COX, If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] has put his money back into the Treasury as I did, it will keep there until to-morrow morning, [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I propose to let it stay there.

Mr. COX. I know as well as the gentleman the meaning of this great desire for immediate consideration of business. But the matter to which he refers, though bad enough, is a mere pecadillo compared with the spoliation of great States like Louisiana. And, if the gentlemen understood it right, he would not ask me to give way for a matter which can be disposed of as well to-morrow, and which I will help him to dispose of; ay, and go even further, perhaps than he proposes to go; for I desire to repeal all increase of salaries.

The SPEAKER. It is too late now to raise the question of consideration, after gentlemen have proceeded to debate the question. The Chair will have the rule read, which it may be well for gentlemen to attend to.

The Clerk read as follows:

When any motion or proposition is made, the question "Will the House now consider it?" shall not be put, unless it is demanded by some member, or is deemed necessary by the Speaker.—Rule 41. And it is competent for a member to raise the question of consideration upon a report, even though a question of privilege is involved in the report.—Journal, 1, 35, pp. 1083-1085. But after a question has been stated, and its discussion commenced, it is too late to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Has this question been stated to the House? I was aware of no resolution sent to the Clerk's desk, though it was stated that there was one.

The SPEAKER. A member may call up a subject for consideration although there may be no resolution presented; and if a member has the floor sufficiently long to commence the discussion of that subject, that precludes any other member from raising the question of consideration, for that must be done at the very outset.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Upon the disposal of this case will the morning hour begin?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour comes up upon the call of the regular order, immediately upon the disposition of this case.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Unless some other question of privilege comes up.

The SPEAKER. Unless some other question of privilege should be raised to postpone it again.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Maine [MR. HALE] had brought forward his bill in some form before we disposed of the other Louisiana cases, it might have been in much better taste. But to cut off this remaining case from our side, I do not propose to interfere with his business, nor with that of his caucus, nor with that of any caucus, if you please. Nor do I propose to discuss this Louisiana question very long. I will eliminate from it all the matters relating to the State government there, all the questions relating to the character of Judge Durell's acts; all questions relating to the usurping character of either one or the other of those State governments—in fine, all those matters of con-troversy which go to the status of the State government, under one form of government or the other. Then I will come down at once, if uninterrupted, to this points of this case, not presented yesterday.

I will remark, however, that I do not agree with the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] who spoke here yesterday, that the government of Louisiana, which was "recognized by the Government of the United States," is therefore the lawful government there. That would be a very strange doctrine in this House. Are we not arguing upon the constitution of the Legislature? Must we give to the Federal Government here, and to the executive portion of it, the power to recognize a government in the Southern States, or in any other States? Would it not choose its own friends? Would it not give to that government the power to make out credentials, to constitute the Legislature, and therefore to establish the two powers, legislative and executive?

The argument, therefore, on that head goes to the very question of tyranny. It is compounding power. It is consolidation. I do not propose to discuss it fully now; but it was generally agreed by men on both sides of the House yesterday that there were two prima-facie cases growing out of the certificates. In this case there is but one. Unless gentlemen can bring Mr. Peters from the grave, and let his skeleton hand present his credentials, the question here rests upon one simple certificate; that of the governor, backed up by the certificate of the secretary of state, giving the votes, and all the subsequent proceedings.

As to the election last November, I can show aliunde, if I must go outside of the prima-facie record, that that election was utterly null and void, on the principle laid down yesterday by the gentlemen on the other side. It is, therefore, not to be considered in determining the question of a contest here.

Mr. MOREY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York what course he proposes to pursue in this matter. Does he propose to divide the time between his side and ours? In other words, is he willing to make any arrangement?

Mr. COX. I shall have no time to divide if the gentleman interrupts me in this way.

Mr. MOREY. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but to get an answer to my question.

Mr. COX. I presume that the gentleman's side of the House will have control of the time as they had yesterday. When the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] moved this morning to lay the Pinchback case on the table, I did not know but that the gentlemen on that side had so changed their minds after sleeping over the subject, and perhaps praying over it, [laughter,] that we might save one member from Louisiana in an old democratic district; and especially as the man who recently ran against him was a Greeley man, and in about the same position as the competitor of the claimant, who is dead, and who was elected two years ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOREY. I would like to know whether my friend from New York proposes to have this matter discussed in a particular order. Does he propose to give this side of the House any particular length of time, or to occupy on the other side any particular length of time; or does he wish the House to have control of that matter?

Mr. COX. I never believed much in the previous question. I believe in the largest discussion. I believe that if we had discussed this Louisiana question last session, these outrages on the people there would not have continued; that even the "grangers" would have taken up the question as involving their water communication, since you have obstructed the mouth of the Mississippi by your bad government.

But this is all irrelevant. The gentleman is drawing me away from the point I wished to make. I hold that even if Mr. Smith, said to have been recently elected, should present his credentials; even if the votes are all ready, all compiled—(and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] may be reading them over now for all I know)—I hold that that election was utterly null and void by the laws of Louisiana; for the law of that State requires——

Mr. MOREY. Will the gentleman from New York be kind enough to answer my question directly? Does he propose any arrangement in regard to the division of time for the discussion of this case?

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman may get a day to speak on this question. I propose to speak, perhaps, a portion of an hour. If I finish before my hour expires, I will yield to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. MOREY.]

Mr. MOREY. Does the gentleman propose that we shall occupy an hour?

Mr. COX. I have no control of that question, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. MOREY. Then does the gentleman wish to make any arrangement, or does he wish the House to take control of the question?

Mr. COX. I want to make my speech without interruption. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a digest of the statutes of Louisiana, from which I read the following provisions of the election law:

SEC. 26. All elections held in this State to fill any vacancies shall be conducted and managed, and returns thereof shall be made, in the same manner as is provided for general elections.

SEC. 34. In case of vacancy, by death or otherwise, in said office of Representative in Congress, between the general elections, it shall be the duty of the governor, by proclamation, to cause an election to be held according to law to fill the vacancy.

SEC. 39. It shall be the duty of the governor, at least six weeks before every general election, to issue his proclamation, giving notice thereof, which shall be published in the official journal of the State, and copies thereof forwarded to the several supervisors of registration throughout the State.

SEC. 40. Notice of every general election held under the provisions of this act shall be given at least thirty days before the election, by notices posted up in each precinct; or, if there be an official newspaper published in the parish, by publishing the notice in such paper.

That law required that at the recent election there should be six weeks' proclamation. It required that thirty days' notice should be given to the voters of the precinct. I hold here the writ of election from the acting governor.

It is as follows:

WRIT OF ELECTION—FOURTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, October 27, 1873.

Whereas by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of Louisiana, it is made the duty of the executive authority, whenever any vacancy shall happen in the representation to Congress from the said State, to issue a writ of election to fill such vacancy;

Whereas a vacancy has occurred in the representation to Congress from the fourth congressional district of the State of Louisiana, by the death of Samuel Peters, member-elect to the Forty-third Congress from the said district:

Now, therefore, I, C. C. Antoine, lieutenant-governor and acting governor of the State of Louisiana, do issue this my proclamation, designating Monday, the 24th day of November, 1873, as the day for the election of a Representative to the Congress of the United States from the fourth congressional district of the State of Louisiana; and I hereby direct all supervisors of registration, and other officers, of the parishes of West Feliciana, Point Coupée, Avoyelles, Rapides, Sabine, Natchitoches, De Soto, Caddo, Bossier, Winn, Grant, Red River, Webster, and Vernon, forming said congressional district, to take all necessary steps for the holding of said election in accordance with the laws of this State and of the United States.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State, hereunto attached, this 27th day of October, A. D. 1873, and of the Independence of the United States of America the ninety-eighth.

[SEAL.] C. C. ANTOINE,
Lieutenant-Governor and Acting Governor of Louisiana.

By the acting governor:
P. G. DESLONDE,
Secretary of State.

That writ of election of Acting-Governor Antoine, dated October 27, 1873, fixed the time of election on the 24th day of November, 1873—hardly twenty-eight days, counting both outside days; really about twenty-six days; so that it violated the law. They have not, in truth, elected any one in place of this man who died, provided he himself was elected. They are not certainly, therefore, in condition to oppose the prima-facie certificate brought here by my friend Mr. Davidson.

Now, do gentlemen wish to sustain an election like this? Here are the papers; there is the law. The law is express. If you undertake to send this case to the committee for examination into this law, you do just exactly what was said yesterday you should not do; for by examination of the statute itself you find the election is absolutely null and void for lack of this notice. So there is no reason to be urged why this certificate of prima-facie election should not be received now, and the member seated under it.

I may say also, with respect to the gentleman who asks to have his seat, that at the recent election at Shreveport, the fourth congressional district of Louisiana, no one on his side voted—although it is the old democratic Gibraltar of Louisiana—that no one voted on the democratic side; while the man who ran against him, having been a Greeley man, who two years before voted for this claimant, is not in any condition, therefore, to appeal to any party feeling on either side. This is exactly a case where gentlemen can exercise unbiased, unpartisan judgment. My friend gave notice to every one on November 14, 1873, that his record was made up, and that he left the matter to Congress on his prima-facie certificate. There he stands now; and I hope he will be accorded the pleasure and privilege which he deserves of taking a seat in our midst.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. There are many of us who desire to understand the exact status of this gentleman. If he has no competitor, and has the prima-facie certificate, then let the fact be stated.

Mr. COX. Will you vote for him if he has no competitor here?

Mr. SYPHER. I wish to say that he has a competitor here.

Mr. COX. I do not know that.

Mr. SYPHER. You will hear from him.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let the paper which I send up be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, November 29, 1873.

Be it known that, at a special election, begun and held on the 24th day of November, anno Domini 1873, for member of Congress to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Samuel Peters, member-elect of the Forty-third Congress, in pursuance of a proclamation dated October 27, 1873, by the acting governor of the State, the whole number of votes cast was 13,897. George L. Smith received 13,897 votes.

Now, therefore, I, William P. Kellogg, governor of the State of Louisiana, do hereby certify that George L. Smith received a majority of the votes cast at said election, and is duly and lawfully elected to represent the fourth congressional district of the State of Louisiana, in the Forty-third Congress of the United States of America.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State the 29th of November, 1873, and of the Independence of the United States of America the ninetieth.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM P. KELLOGG.

By the governor:
P. G. DESLONDE,
Secretary of State.

Mr. COX. What is the date of that certificate?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. November 29, 1873.

Mr. COX. Was it made here in Washington or in New Orleans?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Not being made by a democratic governor I presume it was made in New Orleans. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I know this gentleman was once in that party.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, I was; and understand all about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. This district is eight hundred miles long and they could not have made this canvass in that time, and then brought this certificate to Washington, from New Orleans.

I will commend to the gentleman from Louisiana, or rather to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who has been some time in Louisiana, and who seems to know the fashion of doing things down there so well, the question, whether he believes it possible to make that certificate, since this election, from returns of an election district, eight hundred miles long, without railroads? Why, there was no pretense of having that vote compiled, before the gentleman whom he now seeks to have seated, left there. I showed him a moment ago, and it is exactly in harmony with the argument made by the gentleman and others yesterday, that this election was not at all in conformity with the statutes of the State, on account of the absence of a proclamation. It was, in fact, a part of that general system of usurpation in Louisiana, a part of that general system, by which that State has been treated worse than by a rebellion. Why, sir, rebellion, when it is unsuccessful, is called so always in history; but a rebellion which is successful, like this usurpation, has been very aptly described in a book which I have here before me, and which I will read for the information of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.] I will ask him to guess who is the author when I get through. Speaking of a rebellion he says:

These observations might be exemplified by numerous instances in the history which led to them; and without them it is impossible to understand in any sort the general character of the chief actors in it who were engaged in the black design of subverting the constitution of their country. This they completed with the most enormous act of mere power, in defiance of all laws of God and man, and in express contradiction to the real design and public votes of that assembly whose commission, they professed, was their only warrant for anything they did throughout the whole rebellion. Yet, with unheard of hypocrisy toward men, toward God, and their own consciences—for without such a complication of it their conduct is inexplicable—even this action, which so little admitted of any cloak, was, we know, contrived and carried into execution under pretenses of authority, religion, liberty, and by profaning the forms of justice in an arraignment and trial like to what in regular legal proceedures. No age, indeed, can show an example of hypocrisy parallel to this. But the history of all ages and all countries will show what has been really going forward over the face of the earth to be very different from what has been always pretended; and that virtue has been everywhere professed much more than it has been anywhere practiced; nor could society, from the very nature of its constitution, subsist without some general public profession of it.

And who does the gentleman from Massachusetts think laid down that very sensible doctrine? Did he have Louisiana in his prophetic mind? Why, his name is Butler. [Laughter.] Dr. Joseph Butler, a good man, the learned bishop of the "Analogy." He was a Christian, though not a statesman. He did not present, perhaps, the combined character of a Christian statesman. But he laid down for all time the doctrine that men who profess more than they practice, are, though indispensable, to be reprobated. Now, what have we seen here? Gentlemen, in the name of law, in the name of justice, in the name of liberty, and under the color of law, have prevented the people of Louisiana from maintaining their rights. They have outraged every form of human society in that State. These oppressed people ask only for their rights. They have no voice on this floor. Give them, gentlemen on the other side, justice by your votes. Especially at this time of political independence, when men are breaking up, as your President has said, old party organizations; when men are caring for the Mississippi River as well as for other water-courses; when men are anxious to see something of the old order restored in the South, give these people a fair opportunity to be heard in the person of the representative of one of their districts at least, who brings a prima-facie certificate, who has no real contestant except a dead man. Give the other side in the State one chance to be heard here, when you have given the opportunity for your side to be heard by the men you admitted yesterday.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, obtained the floor, and said: I desire to yield a moment to my friend from Louisiana [Mr. MOREY] to offer an amendment.

Mr. MOREY. I offer the following as a substitute for the resolution submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX:]

Resolved, That the name of George L. Smith be placed upon the roll, as the Representative from the fourth congressional district of Louisiana.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now ask the Clerk to read the certificate, in favor of Mr. Peters, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.
New Orleans, December 30, 1872.

Be it known that at an election begun and held on 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, for members of Congress, S. Peters received thirteen thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven votes, and E. C. Davidson received seven thousand seven hundred and fifty-two votes.

Now, therefore, I, P. B. S. Pinchback, acting governor of the State of Louisiana, do hereby certify that S. Peters received a majority of the votes cast at said election, is duly and lawfully elected to represent the fourth congressional district of the State of Louisiana in the Forty-third Congress of the United States.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State, this 13th day of December, A. D. 1872, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

[SEAL.] P. B. S. PINCHBACK.

By the acting governor:

E. B. MENTZ,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The case is precisely this: The certificate of Mr. Peters was exactly like that of Mr. SHELDON and that of Mr. SYPHER, whom the House seated last night. Mr. Peters died, of the yellow fever I believe, at Shreveport. Mr. Smith was duly put in nomination, and elected unanimously, the other side not thinking it quite worth while to brave the dangers of the yellow fever; and his certificate came to me to-day. I was notified by the delegation that it was on the road, but I could not get it in season to include the case in yesterday's resolution. Therefore, the case of Mr. Peters was decided yesterday, when we decided the cases of Mr. SYPHER and Mr. SHELDON; and his successor duly presenting a certificate in due form from the governor, recognized by the executive department of the Government, now presents his certificate. And it is the only one which has any validity.

The certificate of Mr. Davidson was dated on that famous 4th of December before the record was made. It is a plain case before the the House. There can be no dispute about it. If Mr. Peters had been alive, he would have stood beside Mr. SHELDON and Mr. SYPHER yesterday. He died, and another member has been elected in his place, and his prima-facie certificates are on the table of the Speaker, and have been read to the House. Therefore, I trust the House, having fully discussed the whole question, will now come to a vote, and that it will vote for the substitute of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOREY] that Mr. Smith is entitled to be admitted to the seat. I do not think it worth while to go into the discussion of this subject, although there are many things in the speech of my friend from New York [Mr. COX] to which I would have liked to call attention, especially to that remark which, I think, must have fallen from his lips inadvertently, that he desired to restore the old order of things. I can not believe that of him.

Mr. COX. That was when you were a Democrat, before the rebellion.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No; "the old order of things."

Mr. COX. The old State-rights doctrine that you indorsed at Charleston, when you voted for Davis and the rest.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I never held up the State-rights doctrine that a State could do wrong. That is "the old order of things" that I do not want to see restored. But I will not trifle with the House upon this subject. It is a grave matter of constitutional privilege. A party presents himself here with a certificate in due form; he has the prima-facie evidence of a right to a seat here, and by the decision of the House yesterday he is entitled to his seat. I call the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. When will it be in order to move to refer this matter to the Committee on Elections?

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order, should the House refuse to second the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was then seconded and the main question ordered.

The first question was upon the amendment moved by Mr. MOREY, to substitute the name of George L. Smith for that of E. C. Davidson, as having the prima-facie right to a seat as the Representative from the fourth district of Louisiana.

The question was taken, and upon a division there were—ayes 81, noes 78.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. SPEER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was again taken, and there were—yeas 161, nays 94, not voting 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bafflinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Joseph G. Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Crocker, Crooke, Crutchfield, Curtis, Darrall, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnel, Eames, Elliott, Farwell, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlburt, Hyde, Kasson, Kellogg, Kelley, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McDougall, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Mellish, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Pendleton, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Saylor, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Thomas, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Wilber, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—160.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, De Witt, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Joseph R. Hawley, Herndon, Hunton, Jewett, Kendall, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Luttrell, Magee, Marshall, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Mitchell, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, Niles, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Phelps, Potter, Randall, Rawls, Read, Robbins, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Sener, Sloss, William A. Smith, Southard, Speer, Stanard, Standeford, Stone, Storm, Swann, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whithorne, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodford, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—95.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barrere, Clinton L. Cobb, Crounse, Danford, Field, Fort, Freeman, Eugene Hale, Hereford, Holman, Howe, Hynes, Killinger, Nesmith, Parsons, Pelham, James W. Robinson, Sheats, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, Stephens, Thornburgh, Waldron, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, and Woodworth—26.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The motion as amended was then adopted.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE L. SMITH then presented himself, and qualified by taking the oath prescribed by the law of July 2, 1862.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the credentials of Effingham Lawrence of the first district, Lawrence J. Gibson of the second district, and E. C. Davidson of the fourth district, and of P. B. S. Pinchback, and George A. Sheridan, Representatives at large from the State of Louisiana, claimants of seats in this House, be referred to the Committee on Elections, with instructions to report upon the merits of the several cases as early as may be.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House testimony and papers in the following contested-election cases; and the same were referred to the Committee on Elections:

Arkansas—first congressional district	L. C. Gause vs. Asa Hodges.
Arkansas—second congressional district	M. L. Bell vs. O. P. Snyder.
Arkansas—third congressional district	T. M. Gunter vs. W. W. Wilshire.
Georgia—first congressional district	Andrew Sloan vs. Morgan Rauls.
Georgia—second congressional district	Marion Bethune vs. Henry R. Harris.
Indiana—ninth congressional district	John P. C. Shanks vs. John E. Neff.
Kentucky—tenth congressional district	John M. Burns vs. John D. Young.
Virginia—fifth congressional district	C. Y. Thomas vs. Alex. M. Davis.
Utah	George R. Maxwell vs. George Q. Cannon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KILLINGER. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KILLINGER] yields to me, I understand, that I may make a proposition to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the parliamentary question of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. If the proposition to adjourn be voted down, will the House at once come to a call of States for bills for action?

The SPEAKER. It will, if the regular order should be demanded.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Then I hope we shall not adjourn.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, who holds the floor on the motion to adjourn, has consented to yield to me for a purpose which I think will not be objected to. It is to introduce a bill which has been referred to as prepared under the instructions of a conference of a portion of this House. I desire that this bill may be printed; and, in connection with it, I ask that the same leave be given as to the other bills on the subject of salary, of which notices have been given by several gentlemen. It is thought this arrangement will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] asks unanimous consent that a bill which he holds in his hand in relation to the repeal of the increase of salaries may be printed, and that gentlemen who have given notice of their intention to introduce bills on the same subject may have the same privilege. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, it is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. KASSON. I will only say that I propose to transfer the bill to the gentleman from Maine, whose State will be first called.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, the Speaker declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being—ayes 24, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. ARCHER: The petition of F. O. Wyse, late lieutenant-colonel of Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, requesting the restoration of certain rights denied to him in 1862.

By Mr. BUFFINTON: The petition of William T. Smith, Jonathan Bourne, jr., and Samuel Osborn, jr., New Bedford, Massachusetts, agents of the barks Midas, Progress, Lagoda, and the ships Daniel Webster and Lagoda, praying for relief.

Also, the petition of Joseph M. Caton and others, of Provincetown, Massachusetts, for indemnity for vessel taken by the Government.

Also, the petition of Captain H. N. Brightman, of Fall River, Massachusetts.

Also, the petition of Pelham Holmes for losses sustained by depredations committed by French vessels between the years 1793 and 1801.

Also, the petition of Samuel Flanders, of Chilmark, Massachusetts, for moneys expended on property belonging to the United States.

Also, the petition of Mrs. Penelope T. Heald, of Somerset, Massachusetts, praying for a pension.

Also, the petition of Robert Loper and others, of Massachusetts, for indemnity for vessel taken by the Government.

Also, the petition of H. E. Tinkham, of Freetown, Massachusetts, praying to be placed on the retired list of the Navy.

Also, the petition of Clarissa Whitney, of Fall River, Massachusetts, praying for a pension.

Also, five petitions of citizens of Massachusetts, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Cuttyhunk.

Also, the petition of citizens of Massachusetts, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of Plymouth Harbor.

Also, petitions of citizens of Fairhaven and New Bedford, in behalf of underwriter claimants, against exclusion from their just participation in the damages awarded by the Geneva Tribunal.

By Mr. CLARK, of Missouri: The petition of Frank M. Lewis, late captain of Company I, Fifty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for reimbursement of money illegally paid to Union National Bank, New York, by the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New York.

By Mr. DURHAM: The petition of R. C. Caffey, of Russell, Russell County, Kentucky, asking compensation for goods taken by the Union soldiers in 1862.

Also, the petition of Daniel Suddath, praying for a pension for services in the war of 1812.

Also, the petition of Daniel Suddath, of Adair County, Kentucky, asking for a pension for disability contracted during the war of 1812.

By Mr. McCRARY: The petition of Russell Smith, praying for a pension.

Also, the petition of George McNeeley, praying for a pension.

Also, memorial of Eleanor McGugin, widow of Dr. D. L. McGugin, praying for an act of Congress granting her back pension.

Also, petition of Elizabeth McKenney and others, praying an amendment of the pension laws.

Also, memorial of S. F. M. Byers, United States Consul, praying for a change in the consular system of the United States.

By Mr. MAYNARD: The petition of the agent or attorney of the publishing house of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and accompanying papers; and move they be referred to the Committee on Claims; and that the papers now on file in the same case be withdrawn and referred to the same committee.

By Mr. PACKARD: The petition of N. S. Miller, and many other citizens of Saint Joseph County, Indiana, asking for prepayment of newspaper postage, and the adoption of a new system for the determination of postmasters' salaries.

By Mr. TREMAIN: The petition of four hundred and thirty-one ship-owners and ship-masters, for the repeal of the shipping-act of June 7, 1872.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

By Mr. SMALL: A bill in relation to the franking privilege and free mail-matter.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 4, 1873.

Prayer by Rev. E. D. OWEN, of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COLUMBIAN INSTITUTION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, in compliance with the second section of the act of July 27, 1868, appointed Mr. EDMUNDS a director of the Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb.

NEW MEXICAN LAND CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior accompanying reports of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the private land claims of Bartolome Marquez and Francisco Padilla, and of Juan Luis Ortiz; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PRATT presented the petition of Ruth Ellen Greland, widow of John H. Greland, late captain Fourth Artillery United States Army, praying to be allowed a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Noble County, Indiana, praying that James Dolan, late a private in Company F, Thirtieth Regiment Indiana Infantry, be placed on the pension list as an invalid soldier; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SPENCER presented the petition of W. A. Saylor, of Austin, Texas, praying that certain taxes collected on cotton, twice assessed and collected in 1867 and 1868, as shown by papers in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, be refunded; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. I have in my hand a petition which I am told has ten thousand signatures, asking for the enactment of the civil rights bill offered by myself. As this petition has so many signatures, I think I shall be pardoned if I read it; it is not long:

We ask it at your hands, because we are citizens of this free Republic, a part of the body-politic, and are deprived of rights and respect which are justly due us. We cannot travel upon the railroads, steamboats, or stages, without being subjected to inconvenience, proscription, and insult, and when we apply for accommodation at a public inn are refused.

We meet the greatest barrier when we present our children at the public schools and are rejected. All this, and more, we are compelled to endure because we are colored. We pray you to remove these hinderances, so that we may enjoy the common rights to which we are entitled as citizens, as tax-payers, and members of the human family. It is no special legislation in our behalf that we ask for, but we ask you to remove whatever legislation there is against us.

I move that this petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I present resolutions of the Board of Trade of the city of Baltimore, and desire them to be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Copy of resolutions on finance adopted by the Baltimore Board of Trade, on Monday, December 1, 1873.

Resolved, That the true interests of this country demand a return to specie payments at the earliest practicable period.

Resolved, That any further inflation of an irredeemable paper currency would postpone the period when a return to specie payments may be accomplished, and is, therefore, in the opinion of this board, inexpedient.

GEORGE U. PORTER,
Secretary of the Board.

The resolutions were ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 53) for the relief of Mary E. Purnell; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BOREMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 54) to complete a water highway from tide-water on the James River to the Ohio River at the mouth of the Kanawha; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 55) to authorize the construction of a public building at Topeka, Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of George Wright; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. STEVENSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 57) to remove all political disabilities; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 58) in aid of the execution of the laws in Utah, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY AT HARPER'S FERRY.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate all the information in his possession in relation to the Government property at Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, including the sale thereof.

LOAN OF 1858.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to do what is perhaps an unusual thing; but I think the reasons for it which I can give will satisfy every member of the Senate. It is necessary during this week some time, or early next week, to pass a bill which has been sent to me from the Treasury Department and introduced also in the other House, to provide for the redemption of the loan of 1858. The reasons for it are given in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. They also appear on the face of the bill. I have shown the bill to the members of the Committee on Finance, who are familiar with the subject, and I think there can be no doubt about the necessity of the passage of the bill very early. I should like to have it passed at once.

Mr. SUMNER. Why not have it read?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly I will let it be read, and then I will state the difficulty that arises.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. No. 51) to provide for the redemption of the loan of 1858, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purpose of redeeming the bonds issued under the act entitled "An act to authorize a loan not exceeding the sum of twenty millions of dollars," approved June 14, 1858, as amended March 3, 1859, called the loan of 1858, the Secretary of the Treasury may issue, in exchange for any of said bonds, an equal amount, at par, of 5 per cent. bonds of the funded loan, under the act for refunding the national debt, approved July 14, 1870, and the act amendatory thereof, approved January 20, 1871.

SEC. 2. That it is hereby declared to be the pleasure of the United States to pay such as the holders thereof may elect, within six months from said date, to exall the coupon bonds of said loan of 1858 on the 1st day of January, 1874, except change for 5 per-cent. bonds of the funded loan, with interest from said January 1; and money in the Treasury sufficient to carry into effect the provision of this act is hereby appropriated therefor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Secretary to read what is said by the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to this matter. It will explain briefly, if Senators will pay attention to it, the necessity for action now.

The Chief Clerk read as follows from the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury:

LOAN OF 1858.

Under the provisions of the act of June 14, 1858, as amended by the act of March 3, 1859, (chapter 82, section 6,) the then Secretary of the Treasury contracted a loan of twenty million dollars, for part of which registered bonds were issued "redeemable at the pleasure of the United States at any time after the expiration of fifteen years after the 1st of January, 1859;" and for the balance and much larger part coupon bonds were issued "payable at any time after the 1st day of January, 1874, on presentation and surrender of the certificate at the Treasury of the United States."

It will be perceived that the two classes of bonds differ materially in phraseology as to the option of payment after January 1, 1874; but I am unable to discover, either from the act itself or from the records of the Department, that any difference in the contracts was intended, and it is presumed that the variation in language of the two classes of bonds was wholly accidental. Since the passage of the act of June 30, 1864, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue registered bonds of any loan in exchange for coupon bonds of the same loan, the coupon bonds of this loan to the amount of about $4,000,000 have been exchanged into the registered bonds, and the amount of each class now outstanding is $6,255,000 registered, and $13,745,000 coupon.

It is understood that some holders of the coupon bonds have regarded them as payable on the 1st of January next, or at any time after that date, at their option. Applications have been made to the Department for the privilege of exchanging coupon bonds for five per cent. bonds of the funded loan, which exchange the Secretary of the Treasury has now no authority to permit.

No appropriation has been made, either in the act authorizing the loan or in any subsequent act, for the payment of the principal; and no provision of law exists for determining the pleasure of the United States as to the time of payment of either class of bonds.

The attention of Congress is thus called to this loan, with the recommendation that such action in relation thereto may be taken, before the 1st day of January next, as Congress may deem wise and just.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can see no possible objection to this bill. It simply appropriates $20,000,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay bonds maturing on the 1st of January. There is some conflict between the terms of the coupon bonds and the registered bonds, which makes it necessary for the United States to express its choice whether it will pay on the 1st of January or not. This will authorize the issue of an equal amount of 5 per cent. bonds under the law of 1870 in payment of the bonds issued under the act of 1858. It would be supposed, naturally, that the Secretary would have the authority to do that under the general provisions of law; but it seems the law of 1870 confined the exchange therein provided for to the issue of 5 per cent. bonds for the 5-20 bonds, which were not of the character and description mentioned in this bill. There can be no possible objection to the bill; and I therefore venture to ask the Senate to pass it now, without a formal reference.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It will strike Senators as quite obvious that there are only a few days left between this and the 1st of January; and while there are ample funds to pay these bonds that mature on the 1st of January, it would yet be far more convenient at the present time that the Secretary of the Treasury should have the power either to pay or to exchange them for 5 per cent. bonds, or other bonds with a longer time to run.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, in the chair.) The question is on the motion to take up the bill mentioned by the Senator from Ohio for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CURRENCY.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which I introduced on Monday last.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to consider the expediency of providing for a national system of banking and currency, in lieu of the present one, which shall embody the substantial features following, to wit:

First. Banking to be open and free to all, individuals and associations, without limitation of capital.

Secondly. The maximum currency circulation to be eight hundred millions of dollars, exclusive of fractional, and to be issued and authenticated solely by the Government, of uniform character, with "United States currency" imprinted on its face, made lawful money and a legal tender for all public and private dues, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt, and convertible on demand into Government bonds bearing interest at 3 65-100 of 1 per cent. per annum in currency.

Thirdly. The Government to issue bonds stamped "Currency bonds," of denominations of $100 and multiples, bearing interest at the rate of 3 65-100 of 1 per cent. per annum, convertible into currency on demand, and to be exempt from taxation by Federal, State, municipal, and local authority.

Fourthly. Substitution of United States currency for national currency, to be done at the convenience of the Government, without diminishing the volume of current circulation, and the bonds held for the security of the national currency to be adjusted with the banks by purchase or surrender. Substitution of United States currency for other existing forms in bringing about uniformity of currency, to likewise be done without lessening the current circulation.

Fifthly. For immediate relief to existing monetary stringency, the forty-four million Treasury reserve to be issued without delay, in the purchase of Government bonds bearing the higher rates of interest, and, as fast as practicable, additional purchases of like bonds to be made with United States currency, until the maximum circulation be reached.

Sixthly. Preparatory to withdrawal of the fractional currency, the Secretary of the Treasury required to make public designation of a period after which to begin the redemption, in silver, of denominations of twenty-five cents and under; also a second period designated at which to commence like redemption of the remaining fractional currency then in circulation, and all, when so redeemed, to be destroyed.

And that the committee report at as early a day as practicable by bill or otherwise.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Finance, whose special province is to consider financial means and ends, I have submitted a resolution for reference to that committee, for their consideration in determining a remedy for existing monetary derangement. Having given some thought to the subject-matter, I deem it in place to present views upon the remedy, that my course may not be misapprehended or misunderstood. The resolution suggests not mere theory—no pet scheme—nor do I claim for it sovereign remedy for all ills incident to any financial system. Neither is it a change proposed for the sake of change; but, sharing the public conviction, freely expressed, it is a remedy for recurring evils that is demanded; a change giving stable relief, which finds echo in the popular voice. Stagnation of industry, stoppage of trade, and prostration of commercial vigor demand that every legitimate and practical resource of the nation should be invoked to stay the tide of disaster which threatens the prosperity of the country, in the impoverishment of its people. In such an emergency as the present the people look to their public servants for ways by which to escape impending ruin. To the State do they appeal for measures beyond the possibilities of individuals, and regard it as the author of methods and means. I would not merge all enterprises in the State, but it should justly be charged with the general duty of devising and establishing a monetary system adequate to the wants of the people, and free from those elements of disturbance which entail distrust and disaster. If, as believed, the people, through their Government, have exclusive control of the power to create money and regulate its value, why should they not look to the same source for remedy against abuses which periodically jeopardize and paralyze public interest? It is in face of such general expectation that Congress assembles. The people feel sorely the consequences of the panic, and appeal to us. The moment is exigent; the opportunity is pregnant with the weal or woe of the land. With no idle speculation, but with a suggestion springing from business experience and practical observation, matured under thoughtful solicitude and the force of transpiring events, and which, to a business mind, seems a practical solution of the financial stress—this have I embodied in the resolution submitted. At the same time I am ready to support any plan which promises results more remedial, deeming it the duty of each and all to contribute whatever of thought and experience will aid the nation to escape from financial ruin.

When amid shoals a stranded ship drives away every thought but to save life, each on board may forecast his own way of escape, but all seek one end—safety from death. So of a financial wreck; each in peril has his plan of escape, but none can wisely disregard other reasonable modes of relief. Threatened alike, they naturally plead alike. The more plans suggested for recovery having features substantially alike, the more certain it is that sure relief lies within their embrace. With conviction of national peril, and measures to avert it imperative, the resolution is offered suggestive of a way of escape.

A peculiar crisis has fallen upon the country. Not a revival of former experience altogether, such as panics of poverty, or panics of currency, but, coming in the midst of ample industrial resources and a sound currency, it has taken the form of commercial distrust—a lack of faith in the ability of the community to meet obligations. Breaking out in the suspension of a banking-house of great repute, the mania spread with electric speed, threatening general misfortune. Underlying outward prosperity came to light an array of nominal values, in the form of railway and other securities, which so startled apprehension that capitalists declined to come to the rescue. Suspicion of like paucity of values elsewhere took wider scope, and beset other monetary circles, till banks, capitalists, and people withheld available means because they ceased to place the ordinary confidence in the situation. Business men, however, were as honest during as before the panic; and as truly was the volume of the currency—the means of relief—as reliable throughout as preceding the panic. The cause of the fall of faith did not lie in person or currency, for both stood as soundly as before. Individuals held their integrity as firmly as they grasped the currency. This was often illustrated by the readiness and honorable desire with which business men sought every means to meet their obligations, and finds heroic examples in the cheerfulness with which suspended capitalists surrendered their private fortunes. The quality or quantity of integrity did not lessen, nor did the quality of the currency diminish.

We are left to find the primary cause of the panic in the insufficiency of available currency. It was the breaking out of a hidden conviction which the year past had been working to the surface, that the volume of currency was insufficient. This belief, brought generally to light, drove the business public, from center to circumference, to damaging expedients, losses, and failures, in attempts to meet the universal pressure for payments. Banks held what currency they had, and, in turn, individuals hoarded theirs—thus arresting deposits and discounts—under a sense of insecurity, based upon general opinion that the volume of circulation was inadequate to supply the natural demand. Trade, in consequence, stagnated. Farmers, mechanics, artisans, and capitalists found no sale for their products; commerce waned, and all, in turn, gathered no means with which to pay their obligations, and notes at bank went to protest or extension. The banks beheld their deposits shrinking, while their bills receivable were helpless to save them from forced suspension. In vain they called for aid from balances at the great centers. New York, the emporium of national surplus, found her inability to respond, locked in call-loans to Wall street, which answered the call—demands, with put-up securities—frightful skeletons of departed values. With country bank balances slipped through the hands of insolvent brokers into the grasp of crafty operators, New York was driven to protest and announced "suspension of currency payment."

Therefore, I repeat that lack of currency was primarily the cause of the derangement; and want of elasticity, a second incident, intensified the panic. To remedy this recurrence for the future, the resolution proposes that banking shall be open and free to all, individuals and associations, without limitation of capital; and Government bonds, to be issued and known as currency-bonds, bearing interest at $3\frac{65}{100}$ per cent. per annum, principal and interest payable in currency, and convertible on demand into currency. This would, I believe, render a centralizing tendency and "lock-up" of the currency a practical impossibility. It has been suggested by some that this centralizing tendency has been occasioned by the payment of interest on bank balances, and that the practice should be prohibited by law. Experience has demonstrated that prohibitory legislation affecting pecuniary interests generally works defeat of the end intended, and is more often evaded than executed. Laws of trade are often stronger than legislation. The impractibility of Federal control of an evil of this nature by statute has led me to the more feasible plan of regulating it through self-interest—employing the stimulus of the evil to work its cure.

First, by opening the banking system to all, and making it free to individuals as well as to associations, you divest it of exclusiveness or classification, and multiply its benefits and centers of distribution, so that its advantages would become more competitive and more equalized. Next, as a counterpoise to the tendency of money flowing to the sea-board centers, I have renewed substantially the proposition I made in committee, sessions past, of a currency-bond, to be issued by the Government, which shall attract currency to all sections, communities, and individuals in the various trades. What was then proposed were bonds bearing 4 per cent. interest. In the Senate the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUCKINGHAM] proposed by bill a bond drawing $3\frac{65}{100}$ per cent. interest, and, being of more convenient computation, was an improvement, and which I now readily adopt. It is to be regretted that that Senator coupled his bond-issue with early specie resumption, which, appearing impracticable, worked defeat of the salutary plan of a low-rate currency-bond. Had this feature united with the currency in regulating the circulation of the country the recent disaster would have been greatly modified. Such bonds, principal and interest convertible into currency on demand, and the currency reconvertible into bonds at the pleasure of the holder at convenient points of conversion to meet the exchangeable wants of the community, would serve as an absorbent and check in seasons of redundancy, and an outflow and supply at periods of stringency. It would prove a regulator of the circulation of the financial body. Serving as the governor at the throttle-valve regulates the engine when in and out of labor, the result, as in machinery, would be steadiness of motion in the distributing forces.

Bank reserves would largely be held in these convertible bonds, and obviate at any crisis the use of clearing-house certificates. Their facility and certainty of conversion, with their interest-bearing character, would make them available and preferable. Issued in denominations of $100 and multiples, the $3\frac{65}{100}$ per cent. interest would be a cent a day upon the smallest, and so easily computable that they would largely interchange in the various channels of trade. Farmer, mechanic, merchant, clerk, and banker would find them serving their ready purposes. They would become the absorbent of surplus for every locality, and, by their convertibility, be the agency of supply for immediate wants, and enable each community, conjointly with its banks, to break any locking up of circulation to the detriment of any section. The people, with them, would then share with capitalists the monetary power of the nation and control its elasticity.

To break the force of this beneficial agency, some assume that the bonds would not be taken because they bear a lower rate of interest than the 5 per cent. bonds, and those would be the choice. How is it that those 5 per cent. bonds were not purchased as well before, and instead, money placed in bank at 4 per cent. interest? For the business reason that the 5 per cent. bonds were not payable or convertible except through sales in a fluctuating market, and the balances at bank were payable upon call. The same facility is offered in the immediate convertibility of the currency bonds, and they tempt investment even at $3\frac{65}{100}$ per cent., because the purchaser can with them hold his own means of relief and not be subject to the will or convenience of others. To serve the uses of elasticity the interest should not be so high as to induce permanent investments, but at such a rate as will lead the holder, when stringency of money comes, to cheerfully convert them for his own and the public relief.

Another assumption is that there will be fear to take the currency bonds. If the currency could be hoarded in a panic, why could there be distrust of bonds which were convertible at will into the very currency that was so hoarded and which is now largely held in banks of safety because of the belief in a scarcity of circulation?

With such a flexible medium the fluctuations of trade would be self-adjusting. An outstanding average of fifty millions of these bonds would work this adjustment. This would be at an annual expense of interest to the Government of less than $2,000,000, paid to the people, against a saving to the people of the payment of annual interest in gold, on a like amount of fifty millions of 6 per cent. bearing bonds, retired and canceled at the time when the currency bonds were first issued. Here is, on the use of but fifty millions of currency bonds, an actual saving in annual interest paid by the people, of over $1,000,000; and saving more, in the same ratio, if more bonds were used.

When there was a plethora anywhere of currency, it would seek the Treasury vaults and return in more currency bonds. When a stringency occurred, through the activity of business or otherwise, in any section of the country, the bonds would go back to the Treasury, and currency would reappear to relieve the tightness of money. So the self-helping process would beneficently go on from season to season, and from year to year.

With no sudden or irregular contraction or relaxation to thwart business enterprises and cripple men, the equalizing effect of these bonds would give life and prosperity to the whole land.

Then, with the next feature of the resolution, a sense of greater security would also be imparted. This is, that all of the currency of the nation be issued solely by the Government; that it be of uniform character, with "United States currency" imprinted on its face, and made lawful money and a legal tender for all public and private dues, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt, duly authenticated with the seal and the signature of the Treasurer of the United States.

The Constitution vests the power to create money, or emit bills of credit, and the regulation of the value, in Congress—the sovereign legislative will of the whole people.

The necessities of our late war made it imperative to give emphasis to that power as never before in the history of the nation. Its stable value is now well measured by the people. Various kinds of issue, supplanting the old State-bank system of notes, finally took two forms, which now substantially compose the circulating medium of the country. The first fifty-million issue was authorized by the act of July, 1861, and increased to sixty millions by act of February, 1862, and known as old demand notes, stamped "Receivable in payment of all public dues," and were by law made lawful money and a legal tender; thus answering every purpose of money for Government or people.

They paid the customs, and were the equivalent of gold. Subsequently most of them were retired, and United States notes issued, made lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all public and private dues, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt. These were authorized by the acts of February and July, 1862, and March, 1863, to the amount of four hundred and fifty millions, fifty millions of which were constructively retired, leaving four hundred millions now in circulation, save what remains of the forty-four millions in the Treasury and known as the reserve.

By the national banking act of June, 1864, three hundred millions of national currency were issued, and increased by fifty-four millions by act of July, 1870, of which about three hundred and fifty millions are supposed to be in circulation. These national bank notes, known as national currency, are made redeemable by the banks in United States legal-tender notes, the Government adding its guarantee for their redemption. The legal-tender notes are made payable at the Treasury but not on demand. They are in practice simply exchangeable.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held that they are payable in coin some time, at the option of the Government—payable to bearer, but not on demand.

The national banks are required to keep from 15 to 25 per cent. of their average circulation and deposits in legal-tender notes or greenbacks, to insure redemption of national currency.

At the same time the Government holds its own unmatured bonds, belonging to the banks, upon which 90 per cent. of their face-value have been issued to the banks in national currency, and the bonds held in pledge for its redemption.

In other words, the Government has created and employed the agency of national banks through which to issue and redeem, in greenbacks, about one-half of the circulating medium of the country; while it issues, itself, without redemption, the other half. To one it denies and to the other it grants the function of lawful money—a legal tender in payment of debts.

The depreciation of national currency by this denial, compared to legal-tenders, has been about 1 per cent. By the investment of greenbacks with the force of a legal-tender, the appreciation was, in the midst of the panic, within 2 per cent. of gold. In New York market gold stood 106, and greenbacks 104, while national currency commanded a premium of 3 per cent., that being paid by Western banks to the banks of New York. In the light of these historical facts is it at all strange that citizens who justly claim their Government to be of the people, by the people, and for the people, should ponder upon and question the governmental propriety of exercising the sovereign function, in the creation and regulation of money and its value, by diminishing the value of one-half of it! It is a creation bearing national discredit. Let the Government substitute for it United States currency, made lawful money and a legal tender for all dues save for customs and interest on the public debt, and it would be such an appreciation as the greenbacks bear. Nothing then to diminish its value below them would be borne upon its face. It would be a currency as valuable to the masses as to capitalists. It would perform its function of money for which it was issued, with equality in all the financial avenues, both public and private.

The Bank of England suspended specie payment for twenty-four years following her continental wars, and issued bank notes, which were accepted as lawful money and a legal tender for public and private purposes. Was our war more exhausting, and are we less able than England to so accredit our circulating medium? If the national currency, with its volume increased by fifty-four millions, could, in the face of such an increase, steadily appreciate in value, compared with gold, from 285 toward the close of the war, to 106 during the panic, is it unreasonable to predict that it would, if made uniformly lawful money, at an early day rise to par? This gradual appreciation of our national currency has been attained in the space of eight years. Within that time the country has shown her good faith by fulfilling the declaration of the President, that her obligations, contracted upon a gold basis, should be paid in coin. Rapidly has she thus reduced the public debt. In the face of the losses of a four years' destructive war, and five hundred millions loss by unprecedented fires, has she borne the shrinkage incident to the recovery of her circulation with an alacrity and prosperity that justifies no denial, but merits instead, prompt concession to meet her advancing wants.

This brings me to another feature of the resolution; that the whole currency, if issued direct by the Government, and of uniform character, as United States currency, its substitution for the national currency now afloat, would be brought about gradually at the convenience of the Government, without diminishing the volume of current circulation.

As fast as it were substituted, the Government bonds held for the security of the national currency would be adjusted with the national banks, either by purchase of, or surrender to, them. The banks, at their option, would take up their bonds or exchange them at their currency market value for the new United States currency. There would be no sudden pressure for substitution, nor disturbance of the current volume of circulation. While the United States currency was being prepared for issue the national currency would still hold its place in the volume of the country. As fast, or faster, than it naturally found its way to the Treasury, the Secretary would, in his discretion, order it replaced and destroyed. As the new invariably took the place of the old, the volume would at no time be lessened, and the exchange go on with unnoticeable regularity. As fast as this took place, in corresponding sums, bonds held for the security of like amount of the national currency would either be surrendered or their value liquidated by deliveries of United States currency to the banks, and the bonds cancelled and destroyed. The accrued interest on such bonds would be adjusted with the banks. For the three hundred and fifty millions of national currency afloat there are in the keeping of the Government about three hundred and eighty millions of Government bonds bearing 5 and 6 per cent. interest in gold, and these are held as security for that currency issued to the banks.

The interest on these bonds is paid the banks. The substitution of United States currency would practically work the payment of these three hundred and eighty millions of Government bonds, and reduce, by so much, the public debt; at the same time stop the annual payment of over twenty millions interest and save to the Treasury that amount in gold.

The total annual interest now paid upon the public debt in round numbers is a little less than one hundred and five millions. This substitution would reduce that annual outlay of gold interest to less than eighty-five millions. That saving of twenty millions interest would nearly equal the 1 per cent. required by law to annually be paid in reduction of the public debt. What political economist can safely overlook an item of such magnitude in adjusting a financial policy to the necessities of a people whose interests are confided to his keeping?

It will not be singular if, at first thought, the banking interest should demur to this innovation. Aside from the national currency issued to the banks by the Government, and paid out in lines of discount at rates from 7 to 10 per cent., the twenty millions of gold interest drawn upon bonds deposited with the Government to secure this currency is a rare perquisite. The banks may hesitate to part with it. Accustomed to this coin interest income, and counting upon it to swell their ordinary discount and exchange earnings into dividends and surplus, whatever tends to diminish these will be regarded and argued by them as inimical to public policy. I can understand how such surrender may importune public convictions, having some stock myself in one of these banks. Private interest, however, should give way to public welfare. The question covers the nature and extent of all values, private ones included. Whatever enhances the whole will be felt to conserve the parts. And the second and more wholesome reflection of bankers will sanction and commend, as they now do share, in that broader view which finds in a general policy their surest gain.

The recent panic has taught the lesson that success and assured wealth lie more in a stable system than in a precarious one. These spasmodic trials bear down the value of their bills receivable and securities. The deeper truth of this will be read when stockholders at next declaration day fail to receive notice of their usual dividends, unfortunately equated by arrays of protested and insolvent paper. A people so active, delving amid resources so vast, developing a progress so rapid, and bidding fair to rival nations with their wealth, invoke the highest considerations for some sound, uniform, flexible, and adequate system to facilitate exchanges. Legitimate bankers appeal for this. They also predicate their hopes for success more upon the steadiness and safety of a monetary system than upon outcropping ventures and the fluctuations of values. The interest of "dens" and "pools" ought not to be considered. They are the scourge of finance and the dread of any people. None feel this more than legitimate operators. Besides, the bankers, by their surrender of this twenty millions of bonded interest, will find themselves, in great measure, made up by release from nearly seven millions Federal tax the present banking law require them to pay into the Treasury as well as by escape from other irksome provisions.

Let us see, in the light of actual loss, what they may suffer. Take, for instance, that of a national bank of $200,000 capital as a basis for the rest:

Investment in United States bonds to secure circulation	$200,000
Amount of currency thereon furnished by the Government	180,000
Retained as reserve by the Government		20,000
Average premium on $200,000 bonds, at 10 per cent.		20,000
Fifteen per cent. legal-tender reserves required to be kept on hand, for $180,000 circulation		27,000
Total idle capital		67,000
This capital, $67,000, is worth 10 per cent.	$6,700
Government taxes annually on $180,000 circulation, at 1 per cent.	1,800
Annual cost of circulation	8,500

The bank receives an average of 5 per cent. in gold interest on $200,000 bonds	$10,000
Average premium on $10,000 gold interest, at 10 per cent., is	1,000
Making	11,000
Deduct cost of circulation above	8,500
Leaves an annual gain to the bank of	2,500

This amount may be reduced by fall in premium on gold.

In glancing over the last annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency, just laid upon our tables, under the heading of "Profit on circulation, taxation, earnings, and dividends," I notice that the Comptroller, in considering the misapprehension prevailing as to the excessive profits of banks organized under the national banking system, instances, for illustration, a national bank organized in the city of Chicago, depositing with the Treasurer $100,000 of 5 per cent. bonds, costing in the market $115,000 in currency, and, discussing the relative benefits of banking with other business, concludes thus:

If the $115,000 had been invested in bonds and mortgages bearing 10 per cent. interest, it would net annually $11,500, leaving a profit of $100 to the bank for circulation during the year, and a loss of $15,000 premium upon the bonds at the date of their maturity.

The Comptroller has presented the case in his report more fully than I care to do, and I supplement his view as excellent authority, showing how little really the banks would lose by the surrender I have proposed. Would this compensate for other advantages? Much of their surplus and reserves would be held in the currency bonds, and they would avail themselves of their use as well as individuals outside of banks.

They would be the quickest to know that the tendency of such a system would be to bring monetary affairs to a solid and safer basis, and tend to lower the average rate of interest of the country. Dealers and dealing would rise into higher classes of transactions. Fictitious securities and inflated stocks would be shunned and the better type of values become the favorites. Such as do a regular business, who eschew speculation, would then be regarded with favor, and their lines of discount met and extended, while those who dealt in fiction and preyed upon the credulity of dupes would be looked upon with disfavor, and their accommodations required to be fortified beyond question. Men would be regarded then for their personal worth as well as for their private wealth; commercial probity would wear a premium, and the tone of business morals widen and brighten. The questions then put would not only be, What are your securities? or, Who is your indorser? but, What is your business?

Moreover, the relief from redemption would be a great gain. Their surplus, drawing interest in bonds convertible at any moment into currency to meet depositors' checks, there would follow such a freedom from apprehension—the bane of any business—as would send a healthier current through all the avenues of trade. Bankers, depositors, and others, by the free interchange of currency and bonds, would share the banking capital and business of the country. This would cultivate more individual independence, a disuse of special privileges of whatever sort, and a free, open emulation in financial and industrial circles which accords more with the advancing spirit of the day. How much readier then would a uniform circulation be adapted to this multiform fiscal copartnership. It would be the people's money, authenticated by the people's Government, and bearing their own seal of assurance. No two forms and values then to answer one end of circulation, but all would wear one face and value. Like the bonds, the currency would be but another form of national obligation, and the aggregated wealth of the nation would be pledged for its security. The whole people held to pay, the people would have faith to use. Their own promise would then become their own measure of value, while economy and stability alike would attest the change.

With free banking open to all; with a uniform currency of face and value; with a curreney bond to equalize its distribution, the significant question arises, What amount shall compose the circulating volume of the nation? We have now, exclusive of fractional, in round numbers, $750,000,000 in currency, four hundred millions of which are legal-tenders, or greenbacks, and three hundred and fifty millions of the national currency. This would be for the population of the country a per capita of $18.75. To make a just comparison with other nations, and thus ascertain whether by their experimental necessities we have more or less circulation than a healthful condition demands, our currency must be reduced to the basis of their standard. Reduced to coin at present market rate it would substantially be seven hundred millions, giving us but $17.50 per capita, while England has a circulation per capita of $20, and France that of $25. To give the United States an equal per capita to these nations, upon a coin basis, would be eight hundred millions to equal England, and one thousand millions to equal France; calculated in currency, at the market rate of coin, the United States should have eight hundred and fifty-six millions to be equal to England, and ten hundred and seventy millions to equal France; instead of which we have but seven hundred and fifty millions, being one hundred and six millions less than England's ratio, and three hundred and twenty millions below that of France. This relative measure, with prosperous and leading nations, is another undeniable proof that the general belief among our people that they had not enough currency was well founded. When, a year ago, Congress was beset for more currency, and a deaf ear turned to the claim, last winter's financial rigor attested the justness of that plea. Denied the needed increase, business and industries dragged, and the conviction of a want of sufficient currency to meet the growing demands of the nation took deeper hold of the public. Predictions were often made that a harder time was upon the country if Congress did not at this session give increase for relief. The calamitous fact broke out sooner than public expectation, and before Congress met. After the startling fact, shall we now hesitate to grant what was mistakenly denied before?

With an area of country about equal to the whole of Europe, developed under higher prices paid for labor, and greater transporting distances, involving more time and relatively more money to effect the national exchanges; with railroads spanning the continent from ocean to ocean as part of a vast system of railways, compared to which those of Europe dwindle in importance; with an ever-increasing population, stimulated by extraordinary immigration, and whose activity grapples with agricultural, manufacturing, mineral, and commercial resources of untold extent; with an unexampled crop of cereals and cotton already blocking our commercial capacities in its effort to reach the sea for an inviting foreign market, can there be a valid doubt that the country has outgrown its circulation and staggers?

How can it wisely be questioned that primarily the cause of the panic was dearth of circulation? The farmer whose 40-acre farm requires the use of $100 in its cultivation, enlarged to double and more, in size, can no longer bring his culture within the bounds of his hundred-dollar purse. The mechanic, grown into the master workman and inventor, finds his machinery idle for want of needed means; the factory of an hundred hands enlarged into the employment of thousands; the merchant's local trade multiplied into the mammoth house, with sales in every State and Territory; the capitalist, whose thousands have increased to millions; and railway projectors whose outstretching ways know no obstacle or bounds to compass the traffic of the land—all like architects of the country's fortune, demand that with an already established integrity there shall also be given an adequate circulation, to meet the nation's growing capacity.

Impressed with this necessity, the resolution proposes to utilize the forty-four million reserve, and additionally an increase of fifty six millions to make the circulation, exclusive of fractional, eight hundred millions. Counted on a coin standard this would be but $795,000,000, and a per capita less than that of England. Reckoned in currency, it would be just England's coin per capita, and fall much below that of France. Why disregard this prudent supply, and cheat the public want with the timid, deceptive cry of "inflation?" It is a fact of our national experience which cannot be gainsaid, that our currency, in the face of an increase of fifty-four millions, gradually appreciated in value from 285, its quotable rate in 1864 during the war, to 106, its marketable value in 1873 in the midst of the panic.

Escaping from a successful but consuming struggle with a formidable debt, and many industries languishing, the nation's ability to recover from its exhaustion seriously questioned, the national obligations of all forms shared the general distrust. When, however, the Government entered upon the payment of its obligations, and exceeded in this the most hopeful expectations, the effect was immediate in appreciating the value of our bonds and currency. That effect grew less out of the amount of the public debt paid, than the proof established, by a portion paid, that future payment was placed beyond cavil. This done, bonds rose and gold fell. Foreign capitalists sought then our longest running bonds. It was manifest in the funding of a portion of our bonded debt at a lower rate of interest. Are not these evidences of the fact that ability to pay, rather than haste to pay, lies at the foundation of any sound system of finance? We have negotiated loans bearing 5 per cent. interest, while England carries her greater debt, with no expectation of ultimate payment, at the lower rate of 3 per cent.

The Bank of England issues notes to a large amount of her circulation, and, notwithstanding, they pass as current as coin. Because redeemable in coin, it may be said. Not always. Repeatedly has the Bank of England overleaped her charter in excessive issues of currency with no possibility, at the time, of redemption. It expects to do it again whenever the public emergencies require. The rate of discount has recently been raised by that bank to 9 per cent. and over. But twice before in its history, in 1857 and 1860, has it reached higher rates, when unlimited issues of notes were resorted to as the only remedy against disaster, and Parliament indorsed the action, as it will again and may soon for another emergency which seems foreshadowing.

More than this, the Bank of England suspended specie payment in 1797, and did not resume till 1821, taking over twenty-four years suspension to recover from the strain of her continental wars. Unwise attempts were during that period repeatedly made, as in our day, to resume by resuming, but her wisest statesmen as often defeated such legislative spasms. Without convertibility these notes of the Bank of England were, without act of Parliament, simply by common sanction, used as tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and the nation, with no other circulation, prospered as never before.

France has also suspended specie payment with seven hundred millions coin in the empire. Specie basis is, therefore, not an indispensable requisite to national prosperity for England, nor for the future of France. We have suffered from our war, and nine years have not yet elapsed since it closed. Is there any greater reason why the United States should resume than England had, when she refused to resume for twenty-four years, that she might recover from the effects of a war of far less magnitude? Are we not as wise, as strong, and with faith as clear, as Great Britain? And have we less than France? Why deny a safe and limited increase of currency, demanded by every consideration of political economy, by raising the wail "inflation," with the equally fallacious refrain "resumption?" Put the question to these resumptionists, "How resume?" and the self-adjusted reply is heard, "The way to resume is, why, just resume." It avails nothing with them to remark the utter folly of resumption with less than one hundred and forty millions of gold in the whole country, of which but little over eighty millions is available in the Treasury, to redeem seven hundred and fifty millions of currency.

I am no advocate for expansion in its accepted sense, neither do I incline to contraction, to precipitate specie resumption; both are perilous to the country. Death may come either by inflation or contraction; it would be in either case simply a question of time.

There is a middle ground to take that insures business life, activity, and national prosperity. In defiance of moderate expansion, United States notes have gradually worked up to nearly the value of gold. It is no just conclusion that a further moderate increase will widen the marketable space between the two. The fact of our experience is against such conclusion. Excess of currency did not cause the present depression in business. As long as business prospered, stimulated by enough circulation to supply the ordinary wants, currency and gold approached each other. When the business of the country outgrew the volume, stagnation followed and the further appreciation of currency ceased. Were we on a gold basis this natural business demand for an increase would be met by our annual forty million coin product. Upon a currency basis this necessity and fact are ignored, and a reasonable increase denied. Over the ruin of industries and the prostration and pauperization of the people some would enforce contraction to effect resumption. Not even to restore the country to its condition before the panic would they yield to a judicious increase. Former prosperity gave us a natural and certain appreciation of our currency. They seek an unnatural precipitation, by contraction, to resume even at the expense of that prosperity. The let-alone policy is to let business stagnate and let the people suffer, rather than depart a step from the kindred and more dangerous plea of contraction.

It is easy to see why moneyed men want contraction and resumption. The shrinkage, then, which others suffered would find compensation in their expanded purses. It would only be robbing Peter—the people, to pay Paul—the millionaires.

One section and a class of capitalists who do not feel the present money-pinch, and whose values appreciate by forced resumption, declare, in purpose and words, "contract or do nothing." These may withstand for awhile the reasonable demands of less-favored portions of the country, but let them beware if they unwisely deny relief. The South and West may be debtors to the East, but they likewise are the muscle and hope of the nation. Creditors cannot long thrive without the resources of the land, and sooner or later they will know that in the prosperity of debtors lies their best estate.

There is a growth and increase that is full of promise to the country; to disregard it is to commit a fatal error, and inflict an irreparable injury to the nation. A nominal increase of currency of fifty millions, and the utilization of the Treasury reserve, to make of both a substantial increase of a hundred millions, which, added to the present volume, make a less per capita for our population than that of England, and far below France, is a circulation demanded by the most scrupulous regard for the best interests of the country. It is, in my judgment, a measure that will hasten specie payments more rapidly than by crippling the national resources in refusal to provide means to facilitate their development. The laws of trade will bring currency and gold together. The more vigorous the traffic the quicker will be the approach.

Legislation may attempt, but never can, enforce specie payment, and have it maintained. Coin is widely recognized as a monetary medium, and specie payment is welcome as long as it is sustained. It rests upon unbroken confidence in the stability of commercial trust. It is sure to stand when reliance upon other values is unshaken. But let apprehension arise of the stability of other values and confidence then abates, and fails in all else but coin, and when this point is reached coin cannot be had, and the invariable alternative is suspension. Specie payment, then, becomes specie-contingent; promises to pay are promises broken, and specie basis changes into base—less specie, when payment is arrested by suspension.

If, then, specie payments were forcibly attainable, of what avail to reach it when it is periodically discarded by other nations, and we have evaded it at intervals likewise? Good when maintained, it is worthless when not. It is but an expedient at best. Tradition and history hand down the various expedients nations have employed as the basis of their monetary systems.

Cattle, grain, shells, bone, bark, coal, iron, brass, tin, copper, pewter, silver, and gold, have successively been used. In Britain in 1066 two kinds of money were used—slaves and cattle called living, and metal called dead money. So that various commodities have served their part and have sprung from a barbaric age. Gold is taken from the category as a basis by some of the nations of the present age. Germany has changed from silver to gold. Denmark, Sweden, and Norway are now changing; while China, Japan, Spain, and South American states employ silver as theirs. Now Japan supplements her silver with unlimited issues of paper, as her wants arise, and employs American engravers for designs to baffle Japanese experts, whose skill at imitation outruns the ingenuity of that government.

Nothing better illustrates the truth that any medium is conventional, than the fact that the French indemnity paid to Prussia, in French coin, was first passed through German coinage before it could be used in the circulation of the German Empire. Prussian coin paid to France is first recoined with the imperial impress of France before the gold of Germany can pass current with Frenchmen. Some of the very coin of the indemnity paid and coined into German currency has already found its way back to France, and has been recoined before it could resume its former place in the circulating volume of France. So the foreign coin which is now flowing through our customs, to adjust the international balance in our favor, must first pass through our mint, and receive the legal proportion of alloy which our statute prescribes shall enter into the standard coinage of the United States; be of certain weight and fineness, then stamped by the Government before it can possess the function of American money and be current.

The idea that gold, as such, without Government authentication is money, is a figment. It has its value with other precious metals, and like silver, copper, iron, lead, cotton, and wheat, is a commodity, worth just what it will sell for in market. It can, no more than the other articles named, become a circulating medium, until made so by the nation using it. Its form, quality, and value as a currency must be approved and stamped upon it by the Government before it becomes a medium of exchange. The monetary standard, whatever it be, is conventional. Labor alone is the true standard of value, and is its origin in the cost of productions. Any expedient or commodity whatever, as history recounts, may be made the measure or representative of value and the legal standard of payment. The monetary unit is the established mode of computing values. England has her coin and note pounds sterling; France, Belgium, Switzerland, and Italy their francs, and Germany her thalers of gold; China, Spain, Japan, and South American states, the Spanish silver dollar.

The United States has her currency or note dollar. Each nation, therefore, has its monetary unit and made such by its own statute. The sovereign imprint gives the current element. So long as the faith and ability of the Government vouch for the current function and value, just as long does it serve all of the uses of national circulation and act as a more convenient measure of traffic. Gold bars or bullion cannot be a tender in payment of debts, but gold or currency dollars, made such by authority, can. The bullion is valuable as a commodity for commerce, the gold and currency dollar for exchanges. Nearly $80,000 of old demand notes are still outstanding and held somewhere, as safe representatives of so many dollars, are payable on demand in coin, and yet are not presented at the Treasury for redemption.

Another fact, currently known, is that during the panic people hoarded greenbacks and national currency, without a misgiving and without conversion into coin, which they might have done by the payment of a small premium of 2 and 3 per cent. Some banks state that the exchanges of gold were very slight, and that, as a general thing, they took in more gold than they paid out.

This is a practical test of the accepted value of our paper circulation, in the midst of a panic when individuals would be governed by their fears or distrust, and yet they clung to the currency with a tenacity which attested their belief in its safety. As long as it bore the faith of the Government, and the nation pledged as the essence of its value, they chose it and held it. This confidence would become implicit trust in the proposed "United States currency" made lawful money, and soon raise it to par with coin. It would then not be subject to the perils of notes redeemed in coin, which are liable to suspension when any monetary crisis comes, or any large diminution of coin occurs.

The notes of the Bank of England are now being affected by such contingency in the rise of rates of discount dictated by the directors of that bank. That body, acting upon a gold basis, is practically the financial barometer of Europe, rising or falling values by the length of their sittings.

Germany, on a gold basis, with an enormous French indemnity in her possession, shakes with the fears of a financial crisis. France, on a like basis, but now under specie suspension, finds her securities in market selling at 85 per cent. Those of the United States sell at par in coin. Can there be instability to their currency with such a credit?

History reveals the fact that we experienced panics on a gold basis in '37, '47, and '57, and suspended specie payment as well as England in several periods of her history,

Is gold a virtue and currency a virus? The law of supply and demand operates on gold more quickly than upon any other medium. No country has coin enough to meet its circulating wants, and is therefore subject at all times to suspension. The fact that the mines of the world produce but about one hundred millions of gold annually, is proof that as a basis it cannot answer the business growth of the world. Can there be more security to a circulation based upon the pleasure of the issuer, than on that resting upon the faith and property of the people? No; I repeat that any medium of circulation depends for its utility upon the nation's ability to maintain it, rather than upon the use of one that is subject to frequent suspensions. Instead of this, far better employ a medium of less intrinsic value than gold. It is upon this practical theory that our national currency rests. By raising it to its fuller measure of use, through a new issue made generally lawful, we shall take a step which will sooner or later bring other nations to recognize our monetary unit, the currency dollar. To-day England makes her exchanges payable in the currency of other leading nations, but compels the people of the United States to receive and pay in the measure of her own note or coin pound sterling.

We owe it to ourselves and to a proper regard for the dignity of a great Power to give our currency its highest measure of exchange; then, by this sovereign seal, will it command as well the respect of other nations. Made so nearly legal tender for universal use, and with sufficient volume to supply the legitimate needs of the people, our currency would bear our trust and very soon unite with coin in the national circulation, and take equivalent character among the other mediums of the world. It would then wear the national character of integrity and stability. The whole people would, through personal interest—the potent motive—be pledged to uphold and maintain its honor.

To afford immediate relief to present stringency, the resolution proposes to utilize the forty-four million reserve in the Treasury by the immediate purchase with what remains of it of any of the redeemable coin interest-bearing bonds of the Government, and so stop the further payment of coin interest on that much of the public debt.

These forty-four millions form a part of the four hundred million legal tenders, and were intended to serve their part in the general circulation.

The authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to reissue this reserve has been questioned. The distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] and myself had occasion last session to submit a minority report from the Committee on Finance upon that subject, vindicating the Secretary in his legal authority to reissue the reserve.

Confirmatory of this view, I cite the opinion of the lamented and eminent late Chief Justice, who was Secretary of the Treasury when the acts authorizing the legal tenders were passed, and must be supposed to have known the intent of the statute. His language on the bench I quote:

> The act of February 25, 1862, provided for the issue of these notes to the amount of $150,000,000. The act of July 11, 1862, added another hundred and fifty millions of dollars to the circulation, reserving, however, fifty millions for the redemption of temporary loan, to be issued and used only when necessary for that purpose. Under the act of March 3, 1863, another issue of one hundred and fifty millions was authorized, making the whole amount authorized four hundred and fifty millions, and contemplating a permanent circulation until resumption of payment in coin of $400,000,000.

As we have not yet resumed payment in coin, it would seem clear that it was intended that four hundred millions should circulate instead of three hundred and fifty-six millions, as now. The use of this forty-four million as suggested, would be that much immediate relief. Then to be followed as fast as they can conveniently be prepared, with the issue of fifty-six millions of United States currency—the proposed new issue. This to be done by the purchase of redeemable 5 and 6 per cent. interest-bearing bonds. This, with the three hundred and fifty millions national currency now in use, would make a total volume of eight hundred millions in circulation. When this was done the process of substituting United States currency for the national currency would proceed, and when done the uniformity of our circulating medium would substantially be reached. Then we should have as the total circulation eight hundred millions of legal-tender currency. Not even that actually, for I have not considered the losses of currency by fire, water, and on land since both greenbacks and national currency have been in circulation. Some put it as high as 4 per cent. annually. I think a fair estimate would be 1 per cent.; and certainly fifty millions total loss since 1862 would be a low estimate, for the loss on the fractional currency is said to be $4,000,000. So that, until the actual loss was known by substantial substitution of United States currency for other forms and that loss made up by new issues, we should have really but seven hundred and fifty millions in actual circulation. Absolutely no greater total of circulation than the public suppose is now the volume of our currency, and hardly to be designated "expansion."

The closing feature of the resolution is the withdrawal of the fractional currency by the substitution of silver. So much of this currency is mutilated and lost, that silver can as well take its place with no great inconvenience to the public. The Government is able to purchase and coin silver at a profit, and can at an early period effect the substitution. The Secretary of the Treasury could designate some period when the redemption of the denominations of twenty-five cents and under could practically begin, and another period be named when the fifty cents should likewise commence to be redeemed, and all as fast as so redeemed to be destroyed. Silver would thus be utilized in serving the uses of fractional currency, and be a more durable expedient, and in that respect compensate for comparative inconvenience.

Then, with a national monetary system of free banking; a uniform circulation of eight hundred millions, made lawful money and a legal tender; a convertible currency bond bearing $3\frac{65}{100}$ per cent. interest, adjusting the circulation to the fluctuations of business; immediate relief to existing stagnation by the issue of the forty-four millions reserve, followed by enough United States currency to make up the maximum of circulation to eight hundred millions, effecting by the increase and change of currency a saving of over twenty-five millions annual interest in coin, and more than enough thus saved to meet the 1 per cent. annually required to be paid on the public debt; and the fractional currency supplanted by silver, the country could rest from fears of suspension and thrive under its system of finance with redoubled strides. The steadiness and elasticity of the circulation would then adjust itself to the varying wants of the respective sections of the country, and no more locking up of money check its prosperity.

The cotton and sugars of the South; the mines and forests of the North; the manufactures and merchandise of the East; the precious metals of the West, and the cereals of the interior, would become utilized by the stimulus of restored confidence. New faith would inspire the people, and the nation would more rapidly gather wealth to early extinguish the public debt. This incubus removed, there would be no desire to change our circulating medium; for, whether currency or coin, then, both would interchangeably blend to serve all purposes of the people.

Can there be hesitation? Were any other consideration needed it is furnished in the pleading fact of over a million men thrown out of employment by the panic. The straits and suffering entailed need no words to voice their distressing want. Such waste of energies the nation feels, though tried not by personal pangs and woe.

From a material stand-point even, at low average of wages, this million-handed loss is a million dollars taken from the productive resources of the country daily. Prolonged for a year, the count swells to hundreds of millions and tells its own fearful story.

Such individual loss is no national gain. Whoever can dismiss all this cannot likewise escape responsibility. It bears with the cumulative pressure of daily denials of relief.

The gravity of the situation demands more than words; it challenges action.

Our financial extremity is the nation's opportunity.

The appeal is to Congress. Let us act.

I ask that my resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance when it shall have been appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, in the chair.) It will be so referred; but in the mean time it will lie on the table.

COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I propose to move that the Senate proceed to the election of the standing committees; but first I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

> Resolved, That the thirty-fourth rule of the Senate be amended by inserting after "Committee on Education and Labor" the words "a Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to consist of seven members."

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

> Resolved, That the thirty-fourth rule of the Senate be amended by adding two members to each of the following standing committees, viz, on Foreign Relations, on Claims, and on Education and Labor.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now move that the Senate proceed to the election of the standing committees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent that the rule which requires the chairman to be elected by ballot may be dispensed with.

There being no objection, the rule was dispensed with.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now offer a resolution which I ask to have read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

> Resolved, That the following be the standing committees of the Senate during the present session:
>
> On Privileges and Elections—Messrs. Morton, (chairman,) Carpenter, Logan, Alcorn, Anthony, Mitchell, Sumner, Hamilton of Maryland, and Saulsbury.
>
> On Foreign Relations—Messrs. Cameron, (chairman,) Morton, Hamlin, Howe Frelinghuysen, Conkling, Schurz, Stockton, and McCreery.
>
> On Finance—Messrs. Sherman, (chairman,) Morrill of Vermont, Scott, Wright, Ferry of Michigan, Fenton, and Bayard.
>
> On Appropriations—Messrs. Morrill of Maine, (chairman,) Sprague, Windom, West, Ames, Sargent, Allison, Stevenson, and Davis.
>
> On Commerce—Messrs. Chandler, (chairman,) Spencer, Conkling, Buckingham, Boutwell, Gordon, and Dennis.
>
> On Manufactures—Messrs. Robertson, (chairman,) Sprague, Gilbert, Fenton, and Stockton.
>
> On Agriculture—Messrs. Frelinghuysen, (chairman,) Robertson, Lewis, Dennis, and Gordon.
>
> On Military Affairs—Messrs. Logan, (chairman,) Cameron, Spencer, Clayton, Wadleigh, Kelly, and Ransom.
>
> On Naval Affairs—Messrs. Cragin, (chairman,) Anthony, Morrill of Maine, Sargent, Conover, Stockton, and Norwood.
>
> On the Judiciary—Messrs. Edmunds, (chairman,) Conkling, Carpenter, Frelinghuysen, Wright, Thurman, and Stevenson.
>
> On Post-Offices and Post-Roads—Messrs. Ramsey, (chairman,) Hamlin, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Dorsey, Jones, Saulsbury, Merrimon, and Hamilton of Maryland.
>
> On Public Lands—Messrs. Sprague, (chairman,) Windom, Stewart, Pratt, Oglesby, Wadleigh, Boutwell, Kelly, and Tipton.
>
> On Private Land-Claims—Messrs. Thurman, (chairman,) Ferry of Connecticut, Fenton, Bayard, and Bogy.

On Indian Affairs—Messrs. Buckingham, (chairman,) Allison, Oglesby, Morrill of Maine, Ingalls, Bogy, and McCreery.
On Pensions—Messrs. Pratt, (chairman,) Ferry of Connecticut, Oglesby, Ingalls, Patterson, Hamilton of Texas, and Norwood.
On Revolutionary Claims—Messrs. Brownlow, (chairman,) Gilbert, Conover, Johnston, and Goldthwaite.
On Claims—Messrs. Scott, (chairman,) Pratt, Boreman, Wright, Mitchell, Boutwell, Davis, Merrimon, and Goldthwaite.
On the District of Columbia—Messrs. Lewis, (chairman,) Spencer, Hitchcock, Robertson, Jones, Dorsey, and Johnston.
On Patents—Messrs. Ferry of Connecticut, (chairman,) Windom, Wadleigh, Hamilton of Maryland, and Johnston.
On Public Buildings and Grounds—Messrs. Morrill of Vermont, (chairman,) Gilbert, Cameron, Stockton, and Cooper.
On Territories—Messrs. Boreman, (chairman,) Hitchcock, Cragin, Clayton, Patterson, Cooper, and McCreery.
On Railroads—Messrs. Stewart, (chairman,) Scott, West, Ramsey, Hitchcock, Cragin, Howe, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Ransom, and Kelly.
On Mines and Mining—Messrs. Hamlin, (chairman,) Chandler, Sargent, Crozier, Tipton, and Goldthwaite.
On the Revision of the Laws of the United States—Messrs. Conkling, (chairman,) Carpenter, Stewart, Alcorn, and Ransom.
On Education and Labor—Messrs. Flanagan, (chairman,) Patterson, Ingalls, Sumner, Morton, Bogy, and Gordon.
On Civil Service and Retrenchment—Messrs. Wright, (chairman,) Boutwell, Sherman, Hamlin, Howe, Hamilton of Maryland, and McCreery.
To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate—Messrs. Carpenter, (chairman,) Jones, and Dennis.
On Printing—Messrs. Anthony, (chairman,) Howe, and Saulsbury.
On the Library—Messrs. Howe, (chairman,) Allison, and Edmunds.
On Engrossed Bills—Messrs. Bayard, (chairman,) Lewis, and Cooper.
On Enrolled Bills—Messrs. Ames, (chairman,) and Clayton.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Select Committees on the Revision of the Rules, on the Levees of the Mississippi River, and on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board be continued.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now move that the list of those committees which I send to the Chair be adopted.

The list was read, as follows:

On Revision of the Rules—Messrs. Ferry of Michigan, (chairman,) Hamlin, and Merrimon.
On the Levees of the Mississippi River—Messrs. Alcorn, (chairman,) Clayton, Schurz, Crozier, and Cooper.
On Transportation Routes to the Sea-board—Messrs. Windom, (chairman,) Sherman, Conkling, West, Conover, Mitchell, Norwood, Davis, and Johnston.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. MORTON. I move that the credentials of Mr. P. B. S. Pinchback and Mr. W. L. McMillen as Senators from Louisiana, now on the table, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF MESSAGE.

Mr. MORTON. I move that so much of the President's message as refers to the amendment of the Constitution of the United States be referred to the Committe on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

REFERENCES OF BILLS, ETC.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Secretary make the references of the bills, resolutions, and petitions according to the indications made at the time they were respectively introduced or presented.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I think the Senator had not better make a general proposition, but leave each Senator to move the bills introduced by himself. For instance, there is one bill on which I wish to have a question before it goes to a committee—the civil-rights bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make the motion that all bills and resolutions be referred according to the usual course, unless exception is made.

Mr. SUMNER. There are one or two that I should like to except. The financial bill, which I introduced, I should like to make some observations upon before it goes to a committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; my motion includes all not excepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts to except the bills mentioned by him from the general character of the motion.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask to have the bill on civil rights, introduced by me, excepted, and also the financial measure providing compound-interest notes for legal tenders, and one of the constitutional amendments introduced by me. The constitutional amendment relating to a single term of six years for President, I would have go to the committee; but the other one I think I should like to explain before it goes.

Mr. MORTON. Which one is that?

Mr. SUMNER. The one providing for the election of President directly by the people. That I should like to say a few words upon by way of explanation.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire also that the Senator from Ohio would except from his proposition the bill introduced by me on the first day of the session, on the subject of salaries. It will be remembered that I gave notice that, if I could get the floor on Monday next, I would say something on that bill. I therefore trust it will be excepted.

Mr. THURMAN. I suppose there is a very general desire to take up the bills that are on the table and refer them to the appropriate committees.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the motion I have just made. I have moved that all the bills and resolutions be referred to the appropriate committees unless some Senator should desire some bill excepted.

Mr. THURMAN. I was going to say further, that there are some of those bills which ought to be considered as soon as possible, and they should first be considered in committee, and in order that that may be done, supposing that it will expedite the business of the passage of these bills, I ask leave now to move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion has already been made and agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I am exceedingly glad to hear it. I was out for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has moved that all bills and resolutions heretofore introduced be referred to their appropriate committees in the order in which they were introduced.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I ask to except Senate bill No. 30, not that I propose to make a speech upon it; and yet I may occupy the attention of the Senate two or three minutes—not more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To the motion certain exceptions have been indicated.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] desires me also to except two resolutions introduced by him. I will hand them to the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the motion of the Senator from Ohio, except as to the special exceptions; and the order is made.

Under this general order of reference, bills and joint resolutions heretofore introduced were taken from the table and referred as indicated:

A bill (S. No. 2) to secure equal rights in the public schools of Washington and Georgetown—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. No. 4) to protect persons against inveigling from abroad, kidnapping, forcible constraint, or involuntary service—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 5) to provide for the adjustment and satisfaction of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801—to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill (S. No. 6) relating to certain moneys appropriated as compensation to Senators and Representatives—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 7) for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington the 8th of of May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 8) changing the times for holding certain district courts of the United States for the State of Iowa—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 10) to repeal the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 11) to establish a branch mint of the United States at Chicago, in the State of Illinois—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. No. 12) to repeal the sections in the bankrupt law of 1867, and acts amendatory thereof, which provide for involuntary bankruptcy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 13) to regulate the service in the collection of customs at the various ports of entry in the United States, and the disposition of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to customs, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. No. 14) in relation to bounties—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. No. 15) establishing the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 16) supplemental to the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

A bill (S. No. 17) relating to swamp-lands in the State of California—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. No. 18) relating to grazing-lands in the State of California—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. No. 19) to dedicate the public agricultural lands in the State of California to homestead and pre-emption purposes—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. No. 20) explanatory of the act entitled "An act to reduce the expenses of the survey and sale of the public lands in the United States"—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. No. 21) for the relief of aged or infirm pre-emption settlers—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. No. 22) for the sale of timber-lands in the States of California and Oregon and Washington Territory—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. No. 23) relating to the entry of homesteads and pre-emptions in California—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. No. 24) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce duties on imports, and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes,'" approved March 3, 1873—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. No. 25) to establish certain post-roads—to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

A bill (S. No. 26) in relation to mineral-lands—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

A bill (S. No. 27) to carry out certain Indian treaties of 1866, and to organize the Territory of Oklahoma—to the Committee on Territories.

A bill (S. No. 28) to set apart a certain portion of the island of Mackinack, in the Straits of Mackinack, within the State of Michigan, as a national park—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. No 29) to authorize the Secretary of War to ascertain the amount of expense incurred by the territorial authorities of Dakota for arms, equipments, military stores, supplies, and all other expenses of the volunteer forces of the Indian war of 1862—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. No. 31) for the relief of Captain Louis C. Sartori, of the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. No. 32) obviating the necessity of issuing patents for certain private land-claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (S. No. 33) granting the right of way to the Birmingham and Saint Louis Railroad Company through the public domain, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. No. 34) to extend the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of debts due from Southern railroads, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 35) granting aid to the Atlantic and Great Western Canal Company—to the Committee on Railroads.

A bill (S. No. 36) to amend the act entitled "An act to reduce internal taxation, and to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,'" approved July 13, 1866—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. No. 37) for the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of Indian depredations—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. No. 38) to vest the power of establishing post-roads in the Postmaster-General—to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

A bill (S. No. 39) to amend the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department"—to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

A bill (S. No. 40) for the relief of Andrew Dillman, of Illinois—to the Committee on Patents and the Patent-Office.

A bill (S. No. 41) granting a pension to Margaret E. Alexander, widow of Edwin A. Alexander, deceased, late a private in Company K, Eighth Regiment of Indiana Cavalry Volunteers, known as the Thirty-ninth Indiana Regiment—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. No. 42) granting a pension to Caleb A. Lamb, late a musician in Company E of the Forty-sixth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. No. 43) to provide for the better protection of the northern and northwestern frontier, and to facilitate commerce and diminish the expense of the exchanges between States—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. No. 44) to establish the Territory of Ojibway, and to provide a temporary government therefor—to the Committee on Territories.

A bill (S. No. 45) to grant the right of way through the public lands to the Canyonville and Galesville Road Company, in the State of Oregon—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. No. 46) for the construction of a custom-house and bonded warehouse at Portland, Oregon—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. No. 47) in aid of the execution of the laws in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 48) for the relief of loyal citizens of Loudoun County, Virginia, therein named—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. No. 49) to authorize the construction of a fire-proof building at Nebraska City, Nebraska—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. No. 50) to authorize the appointment of a captain of scouts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. No. 52) to provide for a building suitable for a post-office, for the accommodation of the revenue officers, and the United States courts and their officers, in the city of Charleston, West Virginia—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. No. 53) for the relief of Mary E. Purnell—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. No. 54) to complete a water highway from tide-water on the James River to the Ohio River at the mouth of the Kanawha—to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

A bill (S. No. 55) to authorize the construction of a public building at Topeka, Kansas—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of George Wright—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. No. 57) to remove all political disabilities—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 58) in aid of the execution of the laws in Utah, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 2) proposing an amendment of the Constitution confining the President to a single term of six years—to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 3) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of United States Senators by the people—to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HAMLIN. Before that motion is put, as our committees have been formed, I beg leave to present some papers.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the memorial and accompanying papers of D. B. Allen & Co., praying compensation for carrying the mails between New York and California. I move their reference to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present, also, a memorial, signed by James Butterfield and sundry other persons, praying that the persons therein named may be placed upon the pension-roll for the reason that they served a few days less in the war of 1812 than the law now provides. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hold in my hand the memorial of George Henry Preble, of the United States Navy, asking to be restored to the position to which he deems himself entitled in the Navy. I presented this memorial, or one very similar, at the last session of Congress. I commended it to the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs at the time as one of very great merit; and I am glad to say that the Committee on Naval Affairs gave it that view, and were unanimously of opinion that he should be restored. A bill was reported, and it passed the Senate, but it failed of its passage in the House; or, rather, I ought to say it did pass in the House also, but in connection with another bill. I invite the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs to early and prompt action upon that matter.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SPRAGUE presented the memorial of Frederic Francis Baury, a citizen of New York, praying to be commissioned a lieutenant in the United States Navy, and to be placed on the retired list in consequence of wounds received in the line of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a memorial, signed by William M. Cooper, of Philadelphia, and ask that it be read and then referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Chief Clerk read the petition, as follows:

To the honorable members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress of the United States:

HONORED SIRS: I have the honor to lay before you a detailed statement of services rendered by me during the late rebellion.

I was owner of the cooper-shop volunteer refreshment saloon, which at the breaking out of the war was the only support of myself and a large family.

I gave up my workshop for the full benefit of troops passing through our city to the seat of war, that they might be properly fed while in transit, likewise caring for the sick and wounded of almost every loyal State in the Union. This lasted for over four years. My services, with that of my family, were freely given, never expecting any remuneration for services rendered at that time. I am now in need, and desire your assistance, which I trust will not be withheld. During the time spoken of above we furnished meals to over 600,000 soldiers.

In doing this service for my country my business was necessarily almost entirely neglected, and by degrees left me and sought other channels by reason of my espousing the Union cause thus publicly, from which I have never recovered, and am now compelled to ask aid from a just and grateful country.

Respectfully, your humble servant,

WM. M. COOPER.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALCORN. I present the petition of Richard J. Murray, of Lowndes County, Mississippi, representing that, in 1855, he obtained a pension of $8 per month, in accordance with an act of Congress, having been disabled by disease contracted while a soldier in the Seminole war in 1818; that his name was dropped from the pension-rolls during the late war, but restored on proper application; since which time his pension has been reduced to $6 per month. The petitioner is now over seventy-six years of age; is feeble and infirm, and unable to work to aid in his own support; and he prays that his pension may be increased. Accompanying the petition is a certificate, signed by many citizens of Mississippi and Alabama, that the facts stated by the petitioner are true, and recommending that the prayer of the petition be granted; which I trust this Congress will do.

I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CARPENTER, it was Ordered, That William C. Brashears have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Cowan and Dickinson be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. CARPENTER, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of P. O'Donnell be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. SARGENT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Joseph R. Curtis be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of James K. Drew be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of George W. Anderson be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of mechanics and laborers employed by the Government on Dix Island, in the State of Maine, praying compensation for two hours' additional daily labor performed by them, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 59) granting relief to Eva, Etta, Henry, and Guy Carleton, heirs of General James H. Carleton, deceased; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARPENTER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 60) for the relief of P. O'Donnell; which was read twice by its title, referred with the accompanying papers to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at two o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 4, 1873.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Hon. FREEMAN CLARKE, a member-elect from the twenty-ninth congressional district of New York, presented himself, and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862.

ARRANGEMENT OF THE HALL.

Mr. POLAND. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol be directed to place a substantial railing outside of the outer circle of members' seats in the Representative Hall.

Mr. DAWES. I hope it will be a good ways outside. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. So do I.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction of this resolution?

Objection was made.

Mr. POLAND. Then I ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds when appointed.

There being no objection, the resolution was so referred.

REPEAL OF SALARY BILL.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a special committee of seven be appointed to take into consideration the subject of the repeal of the "salary bill," so called, and that said committee be instructed to report at the earliest practicable day, and that all bills on the subject be referred to said committee.

With the permission of the House I should like to say a word, and only a word, on this subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I object, unless the opposition to this proposition be allowed a like privilege.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman from Maine will permit me to say that as he has proposed to bring this question up in the morning hour, I hope he does not intend to delay the repeal of this law by referring the subject to any committee whatever. [Laughter.] I think the House is prepared to act on the question now.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The resolution I have sent to the Clerk's desk is drawn in such a way that it will not delay the matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate unless there is some understanding for having debate on both sides.

Mr. COX. Would it be in order to move to amend the resolution by instructing the committee? I have the form of a bill which is very sweeping.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] swept his back pay into the Treasury at a very late day. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The committee can report upon this subject to-morrow morning, so that my resolution will not involve any improper delay.

There being no objection, the resolution of Mr. HALE, of Maine, was considered and agreed to.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consider the resolution just adopted as an instruction to receive for reference all the bills on this subject which gentlemen may now be ready to present.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to introduce a bill on this subject, which is not my own individual measure, but which I introduce in pursuance of an order which is well understood by the House.

The bill (H. R. No. 2) to repeal certain parts of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, and to enact provisions in place thereof, was introduced, read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on the Repeal of the Salary Bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not put the question upon ordering these bills to be printed, because he assumes that the committee will desire immediate possession of them, and will not wish to be delayed by the sending of the bills to the Government Printing-Office.

Mr. NIBLACK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3) changing the rate of compensation to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Select Committee on the Repeal of the Salary Bill.

Mr. POLAND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4) regulating the compensation of members of Congress; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. DEWITT introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5) to repeal the increase of certain salaries, to regulate the same, and to cover undrawn balances into the Treasury; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6) to fix the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on Salaries.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 2) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on Salaries.

Mr. HURLBUT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 7) to establish the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on Salaries.

Mr. WELLS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 8) to establish the pay of the Vice-President, Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on Salaries.

Mr. BURCHARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 9) to repeal the provisions of the act of March 3, 1873, increasing the salaries of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on Salaries.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether it would not be in order to move to take a recess for fifteen minutes, so that the rest of us can prepare bills on the same subject. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have ample opportunity to do so without taking any recess.

Mr. STARKWEATHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 10) to repeal the increase of salaries, and to cover the undrawn balances into the Treasury; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on Salaries.

Mr. TOWNSEND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 11) to fix the salaries of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on Salaries.

Mr. MOREY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 12) to abolish all salaries and allowances of members of Congress, [laughter;] which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on Salaries.

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. No. 13) to repeal so much of the act of March 3, 1873, as increased the salaries of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on Salaries.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that the special committee have leave to report at any time.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I ask that the committee, in order that it may have power to report at any time, be relieved from reading all these bills. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Some arrangement must be made that this committee may have the right to report at any time, for it cannot report now until a late period in the session, because being a special committee it is put in after every other committee, and the standing committees, when they are called, will absorb, as the gentlemen well know, the larger portion of this session.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I thought the terms of the resolution itself directed the committee to report at the earliest day practicable.

The SPEAKER. Yes, "at the earliest day practicable."

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I had the understanding that the terms of the resolution authorized the committee to report to-morrow.

Mr. NEGLEY. It was not my understanding.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes the matter may be accommodated, for if the standing committees be announced it will be tantamount to placing an obstruction in the way of this report being taken up until a late period in the session.

Mr. RANDALL. It seems to me there is no objection to the committee reporting at any time, but the disposition of the gentlemen seems to be undue haste in this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the question to the House.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. What is the nature of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It authorizes the committee to report at the earliest practicable day.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I supposed that the language of the resolution meant that the committee might report on any day.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the committee may not be able to report under several months. The Chair thinks that very likely it would not unless this opportunity is given.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I hope there will be no objection to the committee being allowed to report at any time, as that was the intention of the resolution, and I think members so understood it.

Mr. NEGLEY. I did not so understand it. I understand the matter precisely as it has been stated by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot consent to place himself, through any misunderstanding, in the position of being an obstacle to this committee reporting. If gentlemen object to this committee reporting at any time it would necessarily force the Chair into that attitude, by announcing committees, of placing an obstacle in the way of this committee reporting. The Chair cannot take that responsibility.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Would it be in order for the committee to report to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It would not; because the committee must report under the rules, except by consent.

Mr. NEGLEY. I will not press my objection, if the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] will pledge himself not to exhibit any indecent haste in pressing this matter.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It can be done by a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. Not to-day.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The only object I had in wording the resolution as I did, was to free it from the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. NEGLEY,] so that there would be no indecent haste, and yet great speed, so far as practicable, in carrying out the wishes of the House. I understand, and I think with few exceptions members of the House understand, the resolution allowed the committee to report as soon as it could get in readiness to report.

Mr. COX. In making the suggestion which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] is willing to accept, I had no idea that that gentleman or others proposed to precipitate action in this matter. I think both sides of the House should join by unanimous consent in getting rid of this subject at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. NEGLEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] took all summer to make up his mind on this question. He should permit us a week or ten days to make up ours.

Mr. COX. What the gentleman has stated is not true.

Mr. NEGLEY. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. COX. And I can convince the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is not true.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the question.

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks gentlemen to preserve order.

The House having come to order,

Mr. NEGLEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] makes a curt reply to me that my statement is untrue, and says he desires to convince me of that. If he will address me in the language of gentlemen, I will be very readily convinced of my mistake, and be willing to stand corrected on the record.

Mr. COX. The gentleman said that I took all summer to make up my mind to place this money back into the Treasury.

Mr. NEGLEY. I judged that to be the case from the reports of the newspapers, which have been generally correct in this matter.

Mr. COX. Before making a statement of that kind the gentleman should have gone to the Treasury records; and he should have gone to the speech I made in Congress last session, when he interrupted me and said that I could not get back here because I was opposed to this bill.

Mr. NEGLEY. When I said that I did not contemplate the action of the providence of God in taking away Mr. Brooks.

Mr. COX. As soon as I got back from Florida, I returned this money into the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that gentlemen will perfectly understand the situation. The language of this resolution gives the committee the right to report the earliest practicable day; that is, as the Chair has explained, on the earliest practicable day under the rules. This being a special committee, goes necessarily to the foot of the committee list. It therefore, in regular courses, cannot be reached until all the standing committies are called, and their various business heard. This places the Chair in a very awkward position. From representations made to him from both sides of the House, with almost equal unanimity, he has no doubt that a very large majority of the House desires to act speedily upon this measure in some way. But, if he announces the standing committees, he would by that act place it in the power of one or two gentlemen to object to the committee having the privilege to report at any time. The gentlemen who object, the Chair will take the liberty to say, will not thereby postpone action, because the Chair will not feel it his duty to obstruct this committee by announcing the other committees.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry; it is whether this resolution authorizing the appointment of this special committee is comprehensive enough to embrace the proposition introduced last session by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] himself, and which, upon his motion, was inserted in the appropriation bill, whereby members of Congress who, notably by the press and other public information, were elected, though not sworn in, were enabled during the nine months last past to draw their pay?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes it would be. The Chair again submits the question: Is there objection to giving to this committee the right to report at any time?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I object for the moment in order to raise a point of order thus early in the session which I desire to have decided. It is that until a new House of Representatives has, in some form, expressly adopted the rules of the preceding House, no authority can prevent a majority of that new House giving such direction to its business as it shall choose.

The SPEAKER. That question has been often raised, and the Chair would be glad to have it passed upon. The Chair would be glad to learn from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] under what rules the House is now and has been acting.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The proposition which I wish to submit is, that unless it has been determined otherwise by the uniform usage of the House, (and if so the Chair will inform the House,) no House of Representatives can frame rules for the government of its successor, and that, until this House has in some way adopted the rules of the preceding House, it is governed by general parliamentary law, and the majority have the right to give such directions to its business as they may see fit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand where would be found any code comprehended in the phrase "general parliamentary law." There are thirty-seven States and nine Territories in the United States, and each one of them has its own parliamentary practice.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I suppose this proposition is a rule of universal parliamentary law—that the majority of any organized body has the right to control its own action unless some superior authority has constrained it otherwise; and no superior authority, as yet, has constrained the majority of this House.

The SPEAKER. Therefore, if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] is correct——

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Permit me to say that I do not raise this point for the purpose of urging this as in my opinion at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very much obliged to the gentleman from Massachusetts for raising it, for it is a point often raised conversationally on the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS. I rise to a privileged motion; I believe the motion I wish to present takes precedence of all others. I move that the House, until otherwise ordered, adopt the rules and regulations that governed the last House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. That motion, under the rules, would have to go to the Committee on Rules. The Chair will endeavor to state his understanding of how the House has proceeded since the revision of the rules in 1860. Prior to that time there was a formal motion, each time the House organized that, until further orders, the House would be under the rules of the former House. In 1860, when the honorable gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] was a member of the House, a very elaborate revision of the rules was made. In those rules was this provision, possibly overstretching the authority, but nevertheless there, "that these rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives then existing, and of each succeeding House, until otherwise ordered."

Now, the very hour the House is called to order it must be under some rules. It is idle to say that it is under general parliamentary law, because that does not even comprehend the previous question. In that case the House would be simply a mob; you could bring nothing to a vote. General parliamentary law is merely the law of the town meeting; no rule at all. Therefore, rejecting the right of the previous House to impose rules upon this, we must admit that this House meets under some parliamentary rules. What are they? The rules of the nearest analogous body. What is that? The preceding House. The Chair reaches the conclusion, therefore, that there is no necessity of speaking of general parliamentary law, that this House, until it otherwise orders, is, and must be, under the rules which its predecessors have been under, for that is the only analogous body that the Speaker of this House can recognize. And thus far, as the Chair is reminded by a gentleman upon whose opinion he often leans, the House is in its fourth day of the session, has had the previous question ordered and seconded, and up to this point everything has been done under the rules of the former House. The Chair entertains no doubt whatever that the rules of the preceding House are the rules of this House without further order, and that those rules are merely subject to such revision as this House may at any time direct to be made.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Chair is in error in one thing. I was not a member of this House in 1860.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the gentleman was.

Mr. STEPHENS. I was unapprised of the action of the House to which the Chair has alluded. I would like to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read rules 144 and 147 relating to this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

144. The rules of parliamentary practice comprised in Jefferson's Manual shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable, and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the House, and joint rules of the Senate and House of Representatives.—September 15, 1837.

* * * * * * * *

147. Those rules shall be rules of the House of Representatives of the present and succeeding Congresses unless otherwise ordered.—March 19, 1860.

The SPEAKER. As this subject is now up, and is one pertaining vitally to the organization of the House, the Chair desires to make one further remark, and he does so because he would prefer to make it now than at some subsequent time when he may be called upon to rule on the question. The Constitution of the United States gives to each House the right to "determine the rules of its proceedings." Therefore, the present occupant of the chair has always been of opinion that what are called dilatory motions cannot be interposed upon a proposition to change the rules. He has held that this constitutional right conferred upon each House cannot be taken away or embarrassed by any rule of the House, even one adopted by the existing body, much less one inherited from a former House. Therefore, upon a question of changing the rules, dilatory motions, or what is known in parliamentary phrase as "filibustering," will never be recognized by the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. RANDALL. Before we go further I would like to inquire whether anybody has objected to this committee being empowered to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood, when the question was last submitted, that there was objection; but he will submit the question again.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not understand anybody to object.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I withdraw my objection. I merely desired the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very much obliged to the gentleman for raising the point. The Chair again submits the question whether there is objection to authorizing this committee to report at any time?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS. I desire to say that the rule which has been read covers the point that I contemplated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the gentleman from Georgia would so recognize.

EXPENSES OF PRESIDENT'S HOUSEHOLD.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 14) prohibiting appropriations during this Congress for expenses of the household of the President of the United States, so as to equalize his compensation with that of other officers of the Government; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Special Committee on the Reduction of Salaries.

REPEAL OF SALARY INCREASE.

Mr. LAWRENCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 15) to repeal so much of the act of March 3, 1873, as relates to or increases salaries; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. ELDREDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 16) providing for the payment to their constituents by members of Congress of whatever salary may by law be provided for them, as a consideration for their votes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the same committee.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 17) to provide for a building for the use of the post-office, custom-house, United States circuit and district courts of the United States, and internal-revenue offices at Brooklyn, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF BANKRUPT ACT.

Mr. PARSONS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 18) to repeal an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 21, 1867, and all laws and parts of laws amendatory thereto; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

Mr. PARSONS. At the request of several gentlemen upon the floor, I desire to ask that this bill be printed. Some gentlemen who propose to offer amendments to repeal merely the involuntary clause of the bankrupt law wish to examine the provisions of this proposition.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed.

CONGRESSIONAL SALARIES.

Mr. FIELD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 19) to abolish the salaries of Senators and Representatives in Congress, and to provide that they shall serve without compensation and without mileage, [laughter;] which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Select Committee on the Reduction of Salaries.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCRARY. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the States will be called for the introduction of bills on leave, and joint resolutions for reference only, not to be brought back upon motions to reconsider.

ALMON P. GRAVES.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 20) granting a pension to Almon P. Graves; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

R. H. DUTTON.

Mr. POLAND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 21) for the relief of R. H. Dutton, postmaster at Cavendish, Vermont; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

JULIA A. NUTT.

Mr. WILLARD (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 22) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM IVERS.

Mr. WILLARD (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 23) for the relief of William Ivers, of Santa Fé, New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY O. BRIGHAM.

Mr. BUFFINTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 24) authorizing the settlement of the accounts of Henry O. Brigham, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD O'DRISCOLL.

Mr. BUFFINTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 25) to restore Edward O'Driscoll to the pension-roll; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

Mr. G. F. HOAR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 26) to establish an educational fund, and to apply the proceeds of the public lands to the education of the people; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

SAVINGS BANKS DEPOSITS.

Mr. PIERCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 27) explanatory of the ninth section of the act of July 13, 1866, concerning deposits in savings banks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF POSTAGE.

Mr. EAMES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 28) to reduce postage; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTIES.

Mr. KELLOGG introduced a bill (H. R. No. 29) for the relief of certain volunteers entitled to bounties; which he moved be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. This bill should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is for bounties to soldiers to which they are entitled under a decision of the Supreme Court.

The SPEAKER. It does not belong to the Committee on War Claims, but to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let it take that reference.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NEW HAVEN HARBOR

Mr. KELLOGG also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 30) for continuing the improvements in New Haven Harbor, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CONNECTICUT RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. KELLOGG also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 31) for continuing the improvements at the mouth of the Connecticut River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RETURN OF FEES.

Mr. STARKWEATHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 32) requiring the clerks and marshals of the United States circuit and district courts who have received fees and emoluments in excess of their legal compensation to deposit the same with the Treasurer of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. LANSING introduced a bill (H. R. No. 33) to amend the bankrupt law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

HAVANA NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. PLATT of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 34) authorizing the Second National Bank of Havana, New York, to change its name; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. DUELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 35) to provide for the equalization of bounties to soldiers and sailors who served in the war for the suppression of the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NORTHERN NEW YORK JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. DUELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 36) to fix the times and places for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LOAN OF LEGAL TENDERS.

Mr. MERRIAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 37) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to loan United States legal-tender notes upon Government bonds; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

FREE BANKING.

Mr. MERRIAM also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 38) amending the national banking act, and authorizing free banking with practical redemptions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID J. MILLARD.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 39) for the relief of David J. Millard, of Clayville, New York, for damages under a contract to furnish 10,000 cavalry sabers for the Government; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NATHANIEL M'KAY.

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. No. 40) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CUBAN BELLIGERENCY.

Mr. COX also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 3) recognizing Cuban belligerency; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CURRENCY AND INTEREST ON FUNDED DEBT.

Mr. KELLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 41) for the improvement of the currency and reduction of the interest on the funded debt of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

FREE MAIL MATTER.

Mr. ALBRIGHT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 42) relating to the free transmission by mail of newspapers and periodicals; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

SECURITY OF LIFE ON STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. NEGLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 43) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better security of life on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1871; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN CITIZENS.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 44) for the relief of certain citizens of Alleghany County, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT PITTSBURGH.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 45) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site and erect a suitable building to be used as a marine hospital, to be located in the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSIT FOR PRODUCTS OF THE WEST.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 46) for the construction of a steamboat and slack-water navigation to connect the Ohio River and the sea-board by the way of the Monongahela and Youghiogheny Rivers, the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, and the Potomac River, for the purpose of affording a cheap and commodious transit for the agricultural and mineral products of the West, and thereby promoting commerce, stimulating industry, and rendering accessible a vast region covered with marketable timber and inlaid with rich deposits of coal and iron; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 47) to authorize the erection of a building at the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for the accommodation of the post-office, United States courts, customs, revenue, pensions, and other offices of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

FOREIGN TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 48) to promote and encourage telegraphic communication between America and foreign countries; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 49) to provide for the improvement of the harbor at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF MONONGAHELA RIVER.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 50) to provide for the continued improvement of the Monongahela River, in the States of Pennsylvania and Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF OHIO RIVER.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 51) to provide for the improvement of the Ohio River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

MARY SWIFT.

Mr. RANDALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 52) granting an annuity to Mary Swift, daughter of Thomas Truxton, deceased, late a commodore in the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

DEPOSITS WITH NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. RANDALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 53) in reference to the payment of interest on deposits of money made with national banking associations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. RANDALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 54) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by the pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 55) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by the pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

CERTIFIED CHECKS.

Mr. RANDALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 56) to amend an act entitled "An act in reference to certifying checks by national banks," approved March 3, 1869; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF DISTILLERS.

Mr. RANDALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 57) for the relief of distillers of spirits by the reimbursing and repayment of moneys expended and paid by them on account of spirit-meters; which was read a first and second time, and with the accompanying memorial referred to the Committee of Ways and Means when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. BRADLEY.

Mr. TOWNSEND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 58) granting a pension to George W. Bradley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

REBECCA W. TAYLOR.

Mr. TOWNSEND also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 59) granting a pension to Rebecca W. Taylor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

JOSIAH BRINARD.

Mr. TOWNSEND also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 60) granting a pension to Josiah Brinard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN DAVIS.

Mr. TOWNSEND also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 61) to authorize the payment of half-pay to Captain John Davis, a revolutionary officer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

MORGAN E. WEST.

Mr. TOWNSEND also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 62) for the relief of Morgan E. West; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

FELL, HOOPES, AND BURNHAM.

Mr. TOWNSEND also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 63) for the relief of J. G. Fell, Edward Hoopes, and George Burnham, trustees; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

FRANCES C. ELLIOTT.

Mr. TODD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 64) restoring the pension of Frances C. Elliott, widow of Commodore Jesse D. Elliott, late of the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

SOLOMON BOOKS.

Mr. PACKER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 65) to provide for the payment of Solomon Books for services as mail-route agent; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Post-Office and Post-Roads when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SHOEMAKER, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 66) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1874; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

CLOTHING TO ENLISTED MEN IN THE NAVY.

Mr. MYERS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 67) providing for the outfit and yearly allowance of clothing to enlisted men and boys in the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PATENTS AND COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. MYERS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 68) to amend an act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights," approved July 1, 1870; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ANN HUMPHREYS.

Mr. MYERS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 69) granting a pension to Ann Humphreys, of Philadelphia, widow of Lawrence Humphreys, late a private in Company H, Ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARETTA S. MEADE.

Mr. MYERS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 70) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaretta S. Meade, widow of Major-General George G. Meade; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPT ACT.

Mr. O'BRIEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 71) to amend the fourth section of an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. O'BRIEN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 72) to amend the forty-seventh section of an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

Mr. SENER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 73) to establish an educational fund, and to apply the proceeds of the public lands for the education of the people; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF MECHANICS IN NORFOLK NAVY-YARD.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 74) to regulate the pay of laborers, artisans, and mechanics in the Norfolk navy-yard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

DR. A. G. TEBAULT.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 75) for the relief of Dr. A. G. Tebault, of Princess Anne County, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN GEORGE H. COOPER.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 76) for the relief of Captain George H. Cooper, of the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT PLATT.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 77) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to appoint Acting-Master Robert Platt a master in the Navy of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

SALEM P. ROSE.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 78) granting a pension to Salem P. Rose; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT CLARK.

Mr. PLATT, of Viriginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 79) for the relief of Robert Clark, of Petersburgh, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF JOHN HENRY.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 80) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of John Henry, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

IRON-PLATING SHOP AT NORFOLK.

Mr. PLATT, of Viriginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 81) for the construction of an iron-plating shop in the marine barracks at the Norfolk navy-yard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

TAXATION.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 82) declaratory of the meaning of section thirty-nine of the act of June 6, 1872, entitled "An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

POWDER MAGAZINE AT NORFOLK.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 83) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to remove the powder magazine from Fort Norfolk, at Norfolk, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF BLACKWATER RIVER, VIRGINIA.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 84) authorizing and directing a survey of Blackwater River in Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF DISMAL SWAMP CANAL.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 85) for the improvement of Dismal Swamp Canal in Virginia and North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

STREET RAILROAD IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 86) to incorporate the Capitol, North O street and South WashingtonR ailway Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON, CINCINNATI AND SAINT LOUIS RAILROAD.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, introduced a bill, (H. R. No. 87) authorizing the Washington, Cincinnati, and Saint Louis Railroad Company to extend their road into the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PERRY BROYLES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 88) for the relief of Perry Broyles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed

G. W. TAYLOR.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 89) for the relief of G. W. Taylor, late postmaster at Winchester, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM T. SIMMS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 90) for the relief of William T. Simms; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS BURKE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 91) for the relief of Thomas Burke; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PATENT OF JAMES M. LILLEY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 92) to authorize the extension of the patent of James M. Lilley for an improved instrument for surveying and calculating areas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

NANCY CLOUD.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 93) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Nancy Cloud, widow of William Cloud, a revolutionary pensioner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

BURKE AND KUNKEL.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 94) for the relief of Burke and Kunkel; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT FOR QUARTERMASTER'S STORES, ETC.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 95) to pay for quartermasters' and commissary stores, when purchased and receipted for, without requiring an oath of past loyalty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

POSTMASTERS' ACCOUNTS IN INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 96) to authorize the Postmaster-General to credit the postmasters in States lately in rebellion with all stamps and stamped envelopes taken from them by paramount force or lost or destroyed without the fault of said postmasters, and to refund any money since paid for the same so taken, lost, or destroyed; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM A. GRAHAM.

Mr. WHITEHEAD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 97) for the relief of the heirs of Wm. A. Graham; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

M. AND E. MYERS.

Mr. STOWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 98) for the relief of M. and E. Myers, of Petersburgh, Virginia, for Tice meters bought by order of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

RESTORATION OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LEACH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 99) to restore the franking privilege; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Special Committee on the Redaction of Salaries when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTARY CIVIL RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. CAIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 100) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to protect all citizens in their civil rights, and to furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 101) to remove all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States upon certain classes of citizens; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

MEMPHIS AND VICKSBURGH RAILROAD.

Mr. McKEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 102) granting the Memphis and Vicksburgh Railroad Company the right to build a bridge over the Yazoo River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McKEE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 103) granting the Memphis and Vicksburgh Railroad Company the right of way along the river bank at the national cemetery at Vicksburgh, Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES COATS.

Mr. McKEE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 104) for the relief of James Coats, of Jackson, Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT N. M'MILLAN.

Mr. DARRELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 105) for the relief of Robert N. McMillan, late collector of customs and superintendent of lights for the district of the Teche in the district of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CIVIL RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. MOREY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 106) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to protect all citizens of the United States in their civil rights, and to furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866; which was read a first second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISIANA DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. MOREY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 107) for the better organization of the district courts of the United States within the State of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

OATH OF OFFICE.

Mr. MOREY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 108) to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CREDIT OF RECONSTRUCTED STATES.

Mr. MOREY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 109) to strengthen the credit of the reconstructed States and to afford them financial relief, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

VICKSBURGH AND TEXAS RAILROAD.

Mr. MOREY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 110) reviving a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Vicksburgh, Mississippi, to the Texas State line; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW FREEDMEN.

Mr. MOREY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 111) for the relief of the freedmen of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Freedmen's Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISIANA AND TEXAS RAILROAD.

Mr. MOREY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 112) authorizing the Northern Louisiana and Texas Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Washita River at or near Monroe, Louisiana, and a bridge over the Red River at or near Shreveport, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN ZUMSTEIN.

Mr. SAYLOR, of Ohio, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 113) for the relief of John Zumstein; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM M'ELROY.

Mr. WOODWARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 114) to restore William McElroy to his old grade as first lieutenant in the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ALABAMA COURTS.

Mr. HAYS introduced a bill (No. H. R. 115) in relation to the United States courts in the State of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

OATH OF OFFICE.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 116) to repeal the act of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

Mr. BECK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 117) authorizing the payment of one-half of the duty on imports in legal-tender or national bank notes instead of gold; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. BECK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 118) for the removal of all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS.

Mr. ARTHUR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 119) to repeal the law fixing the compensation of members of Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Special Committee on Salaries, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. ARTHUR also introduced joint resolution (H. R. No. 74) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SOUTHERN CLAIMS-COMMISSION.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 120) to extend the time for filing claims before the claims commission until the 1st day of March, A. D. 1874; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DUTIES DUE FROM SOUTHERN RAILROADS.

Mr. MAYNARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 122) to extend the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of debts due from Southern railroads, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

M. L. MEACHAM.

Mr. MAYNARD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 123) for the relief of M. L. Meacham; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PEREZ DICKINSON.

Mr. MAYNARD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 124) for the relief of Perez Dickinson, surviving partner of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, East Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 125) to extend the provisions of the act of Congress, approved February 14, 1871, granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF SALARIES.

Mr. WHITTHORNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 126) to reduce the salaries of members of Congress and officers of the Government of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the special committee on that subject, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 127) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Pacific Railroad acts, approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 128) to amend the national currency act; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 5) proposing amendments to the Constitution; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

RICHARD H. SWIFT.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 129) for the relief of Richard H. Swift; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

EPHRAIM B. SHOWALTER.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 130) for the relief of Ephraim B. Showalter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN COLTER.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 131) for the relief of John Colter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. PILKINTON.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 132) for the relief of William H. Pilkinton, late a second lieutenant in Company G, Fifth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

SIMEON J. THOMPSON.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 133) for the relief of Simeon J. Thompson, late an acting second lieutenant in Company B, Seventy-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSMISSION OF NEWSPAPERS, ETC., BY MAIL.

Mr. TYNER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 134) to permit the publishers of newspapers and periodicals to exchange their publications, and the publishers of weekly newspapers to send within the county of their publication one copy thereof to actual subscribers free of postage; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

THE FORTY-FOUR MILLION RESERVE.

Mr. HUNTER introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 6) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to put in circulation the residue of the forty-four million reserve now remaining in the Treasury, by purchasing Government bonds therewith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PATENTS AND COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 135) to amend an act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights," approved July 8, 1872; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

RESERVE OF UNITED STATES NOTES IN TREASURY.

Mr. COBURN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 136) to provide for the reserve of United States notes in the Treasury of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

RULES OF CONGRESS.

Mr. COBURN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 137) to provide that the rules of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States of each Congress shall be the rules of succeeding Congresses until otherwise ordered by their respective Houses; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Rules when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. NIBLACK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 138) to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war for the Union; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. BURCHARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 139) to require national banking associations to retain as part of their legal reserve the coin interest received on bonds deposited as security for circulation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

FREE SCHOOLS.

Mr. BURCHARD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 140) to aid the establishment of free schools throughout the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM SWANZEY.

Mr. BURCHARD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 141) granting a pension to William Swanzey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. HURLBUT introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 7) as to claims arising from military operations in the late war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was communicated to the House by Mr. GORHAM, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill (S. No. 51) to provide for the redemption of the loan of 1858.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 142) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROADS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 143) to regulate commerce among the several States as carried on by railroads; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I move that this bill be printed and referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals when appointed.

Mr. NEGLEY. I move to amend that so as to refer it to the Committee on Commerce. As it relates to transportation, it should be referred to that committee.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 45, noes 72; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, and Mr. NEGLEY were appointed.

Mr. HURLBUT. I ask that the rules constituting these committees and prescribing their duties be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Committee on Commerce to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things touching the commerce of the United States as shall be presented, or shall or may come into question, and be referred to them by the House; and to report from time to time their opinion thereon.

It shall be the duty of the Committee on Railways and Canals to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things relating to roads and canals, and the improvement of the navigation of rivers, as shall be presented, or may come in question, and be referred to them by the House; and to report thereupon, together with such propositions relative thereto as to them shall seem expedient.

Mr. KELLOGG. Would it be in order to call for the reading of the bill at length?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. DAWES.) That would require unanimous consent.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I have no objection.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object.

Mr. KELLOGG. I thought anybody could call for the reading of a bill during the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not while the House is dividing upon the question. The gentleman is too late in his call.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 90, noes 65.

Before the result of the vote was announced—

Mr. BURCHARD called for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER, (resuming the chair.) The Chair desires to remark that this is "a bill to regulate commerce among the several States as carried on by railways." The Committee on Railways and Canals by the rules is especially organized to take charge of matters relating to railways. It is not the business of the Chair to do anything else than to call attention to the language of the rules which have been read to the House, and to suggest that there is no more embarrassing subject than to get the jurisdiction of committees in dispute. In the judgment of the Chair, this bill belongs to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. NEGLEY. I withdraw my amendment.

The motion to print the bill and refer it to the Committee on Railways and Canals when appointed was then agreed to.

SALARIES.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 144) to repeal certain provisions of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the executive, legislative, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Special Committee on Salaries when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

LAKE MICHIGAN AND MISSISSIPPI CANAL.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 145) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of Lake Michigan and of the Illinois, Mississippi, and Rock Rivers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. MARSHALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 146) to regulate the compensation of members of Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Special Committee on Salaries when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

EZRA TAYLOR.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 147) for the relief of Ezra Taylor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

FREE TRANSMISSION OF NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. FORT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 148) to provide for the free transmission by mail of newspapers in the counties where published, and their exchanges; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 149) to promote immigration to the United States and for the protection of emigrants; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCE ON RAILWAYS.

Mr. MCNULTA introduced a bill (H. R. No. 150) to regulate commerce on railways; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN TREATIES—OKLAHOMA.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 151) to carry out certain Indian treaties of 1866 and to organize the Territory of Oklahoma; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 152) to provide for the erection of a suitable public building for the use of the post-office, the revenue offices, and the United States courts at Saint Joseph, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

WAGON-ROAD ACROSS RED RIVER.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 153) to authorize the construction of a wagon-road and a foot-passenger bridge across the Red River at or near the present landing of a ferry-boat belonging to B. F. Colbert, of the Chickasaw Nation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM STODDARD.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 154) for the relief of William Stoddard, late assistant quartermaster United States volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

JENNIE W. HYDE.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 155) for the relief of Jennie W. Hyde; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

MASSACRE AT CENTRALIA, MISSOURI, IN 1864.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 156) granting pensions to the widows, children, dependent fathers and mothers, or orphan brothers and sisters of those soldiers who were murdered by guerrillas at Centralia, Missouri, in 1864; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

T. H. LOGAN AND D. T. M'COY.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 157) providing for the payment of $300 to T. H. Logan and D. T. McCoy, for the expenses of, and as a reward for, the capture of Frank A. Salters, an escaped convict; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

LANDS FOR SCHOOLS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. HYDE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 158) to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain fractional townships in the State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. WELLS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 159) authorizing the improvement of the Mississippi River between the mouths of the Missouri and Ohio Rivers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BUCKNER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 160) obviating the necessity of issuing patents for certain land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON CIGARS, TOBACCO, AND SNUFF.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 161) to abolish the tax on cigars, tobacco, and snuff, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH W. M'CLURG AND OTHERS.

Mr. CRITTENDEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of George W. McClurg and others, of Camden County, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ELIAS C. BOUDINOT.

Mr. HAVENS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 163) for the relief of Elias C. Boudinot; which was read a first and second time, and with accompanying memorial referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN TREATIES—OKLAHOMA.

Mr. HYNES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 164) to carry out certain Indian treaties, and to organize the Territory of Oklahoma; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 165) to promote immigration to the United States, and to protect immigrants on their passage; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF MICHIGAN SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. WALDRON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking Congress for an appropriation for a survey of the Michigan Ship-canal; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

MIDDLE GROUND IN SAGINAW RIVER.

Mr. BRADLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 166) to authorize the sale of the Middle Ground or island in Saginaw River, in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

NIAGARA FALLS SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. FIELD presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, asking Congress to provide for the early construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FIELD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 167) to provide for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF STAMP TAXES.

Mr. FIELD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 168) to repeal all stamp taxation on bank-checks and friction-matches; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DETROIT ARSENAL.

Mr. FIELD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 169) to grant the building and grounds known as Detroit arsenal to the State of Michigan, for the purpose of aiding the said State in establishing and maintaining thereon a free industrial university; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

INDEMNITY.

Mr. WALLS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 170) to amend an act for the relief of persons entitled to indemnity under the treaty with Spain ceding Florida, and the treaty with France ceding Louisiana to the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYÉS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. WALLS also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 8) for the relief of the employés of the Senate and House of Representatives and persons employed by authority of said Houses subsequent to the 4th day of March, 1873; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CREDITORS OF THE REPUBLIC OF TEXAS.

Mr. HERNDON introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 9) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay over to the State of Texas all balances remaining of the fund appropriated by the acts of September 9, 1850, and February 28, 1855, for the payment by the Secretary of the Treasury to the creditors of the old republic of Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS OF THE WAR OF 1812.

Mr. HERNDON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 171) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and the widows of deceased soldiers," approved February 14, 1871; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN TEXAS.

Mr. HERNDON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 172) to provide a suitable building for the United States courts, post-office, and internal revenue officers in the city of Tyler, State of Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

TEXAS WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. HERNDON also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 10) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the State of Texas $223,143.89, with legal interest since November, 1860, as compensation for troops furnished and paid for by said State from September, 1854, until November, 1860, for which the United States are liable; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

J. H. REAGAN.

Mr. HERNDON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 173) for the removal of the legal and political disabilities of John H. Reagan, of Anderson County, Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

JILES S. BOGGESS.

Mr. HERNDON also introduced bill (H. R. No. 174) for the relief of Jiles S. Boggess, of Rusk County, Texas, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. HERNDON also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 11) to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution prohibiting payment by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion, and in favor of its suppression," approved March 2, 1867; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF INDIANS.

Mr. HERNDON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 175) for the removal of the Alabama, Cooshatto, and Muscogee tribes of Indians from the States of Texas and Louisiana to the Creek Nation in the Indian Territory, and to supply them for one year; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TEXAS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. HERNDON also introduced bill (H. R. No. 176) to establish the tenth judicial circuit, and to amend the act to divide the State of Texas into two judicial districts, approved February 21, 1857; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. KASSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 177) to secure to actual settlers all public lands of the United States not otherwise appropriated or reserved, to repeal certain laws relating thereto, and to free the national domain from speculative use on and after the 4th day of July, 1876; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. KASSON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 178) to assure the transportation of the mail on the railways of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ARBITRATION.

Mr. McCRARY introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 12) concerning international arbitration; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. McCRARY also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 13) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Reform of the Civil Service when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT COURT TERMS IN IOWA.

Mr. McCRARY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 179) to change the time of holding certain terms of the district courts of the United States for the district of Iowa; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH M'GINLEY.

Mr. McCRARY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 180) granting a pension to Elizabeth McGinley, mother of William F. McGinley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCE BETWEEN THE STATES.

Mr. McCRARY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 181) to regulate commerce by railroads among the several States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ADAM HINE.

Mr. McCRARY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 182) for the relief of Adam Hine; which was read a first and second time, referred with the accompanying papers to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. COTTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 183) for the employment of letter-carriers at every place having a population of ten thousand inhabitants within the delivery of its post-office; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATION OF INDIGENT BLIND.

Mr. COTTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 184) to provide for the better education of the indigent blind in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES AND OHIO RIVERS.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 185) to complete the water highway from the tide-water of the James River to the Ohio River at the mouth of the Kanawha; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

CRIPPLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 186) to increase pensions to soldiers who have lost a leg or an eye; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

SWAMP-LAND INDEMNITY CERTIFICATES.

Mr. ORR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 187) to authorize the issue of swamp-land indemnity certificates and their location by actual settlers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

DEFENSE AND TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. DONNAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 188) to provide for the national defense and to afford cheap transportation by water from the interior to the Atlantic sea-board by way of the great lakes, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

FREE CIRCULATION OF NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. RUSK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 189) to authorize the free circulation of weekly newspapers in the county in which they are published, and the free interchange of newspapers published within the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 190) to repeal an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," and all acts amendatory thereof; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

EDMUND M. RANDOLPH.

Mr. HOUGHTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 191) to provide for the payment of legal services rendered by Edmund M. Randolph to the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CLAYTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 192) to promote immigration to the United States, and for the protection of emigrants; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ASIATIC COMMERCIAL COMPANY.

Mr. CLAYTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 193) to incorporate the Asiatic commercial company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES E. BARNES.

Mr. LUTTRELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 194) for the relief of James E. Barnes and eleven others; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

HARVEY GREEN.

Mr. DUNNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 195) granting a pension to Harvey Green; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PETER J. CRATZER.

Mr. DUNNELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 196) granting a pension to Peter J. Cratzer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. DUNNELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 197) to provide for the equalization of bounties to soldiers who served in the war for the suppression of the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN KANSAS.

Mr. LOWE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 198) to establish a southwestern land district in Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

Mr. LOWE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 199) to provide for the appointment of commissioners to investigate and audit Indian depredation claims; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS ON CHEROKEE STRIP.

Mr. LOWE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 200) for the relief of settlers on the Cherokee strip, in Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN CLAIMS.

Mr. LOWE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 201) to provide for the payment of certain Indian claims reported allowed by the Secretary of the Interior under the act of Congress of May 29, 1872; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

Mr. PHILLIPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 202) for the relief of certain persons, sufferers from Indian depredations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICTS IN KANSAS.

Mr. PHILLIPS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 203) to create two additional land districts in the State of Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS IN KANSAS.

Mr. PHILLIPS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 204) to provide for Government buildings in the cities of Topeka and Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

KANSAS CLAIMS.

Mr. PHILLIPS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 205) authorizing the appointment of a commissioner and the settlement of the claims of certain citizens of Kansas named therein; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. PENKENTON.

Mr. PHILLIPS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 206) for the relief of William H. Penkenton, late a second lieutenant in Company G, Fifth Regiment Indiana Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROADS.

Mr. KENDALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 207) to require uniform charges for transporting freight and passengers by railroad companies and other common carriers, and to prevent and punish unjust discrimination in favor of or against particular persons or places; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORIAL DELEGATES ON COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAFFEE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and referred to the Committee on the Rules:

Resolved, That the rules be amended so as to authorize the appointment of one Delegate, with the same powers and privileges that they are entitled to in the House, upon the following committees, to wit, the Committee on Mines and Mining, Indian Affairs, Public Lands, and Private Land Claims.

SETTLERS ON WESTERN PRAIRIES.

Mr. ARMSTRONG introduced a bill (H. R. No. 208) for the relief of settlers on the western prairies; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

DAKOTA WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 209) to authorize the Secretary of War to ascertain the amount of expenses incurred by the territorial authorities in Dakota for arms, equipments, military stores, supplies, and all other expenses of the volunteer force of the Indian war of 1862; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL S. MERSHON, JR.

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 210) for the relief of Daniel S. Mershon, jr.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 211) to provide for the just and equitable distribution of the award to the United States by the commisioners at Geneva under the treaty of Washington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 213) to amend the bankrupt law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS OF PRISONERS OF WAR.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 212) granting a pension to soldiers and sailors who were prisoners of war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PROMOTIONS IN ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 214) to repeal so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army," approved March 3, 1869, as prohibits promotions in the Ordnance Department of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE N. RICHARD.

Mr. SHOEMAKER, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 215) to exempt George N. Richard, of Pittston, in the State of Pennsylvania, from the payment of $900 for postage-stamps stolen from his office while postmaster; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

TIMOTHY PAIGE.

Mr. HOSKINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 216) granting a pension to Timothy Paige; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF NAVAL CONTRACTORS.

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. No. 217) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

STATE WAR CLAIMS OF 1812.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 218) for the recomputation of the accounts between the United States and the several States, out of moneys expended by said States in the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

FREE EXCHANGE OF NEWSPAPERS, ETC.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 219) to repeal so much of the act of March 3, 1873, as prohibits the free exchange of newspapers and periodicals, and the free circulation of weekly newspapers within the counties where published; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. RANDALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 220) to renew, protect, and improve the condition of the national currency of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to a privileged question. As we have no committees to direct our business, the committees not having yet been announced, I think it well that the House to-day should adjourn over; and I therefore make the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DAWES. I was about to make that motion; but before the question is taken I wish, in view of the amount of business which has been referred to the committees, to make an inquiry. If the Chair will not deem it indelicate, I wish to ask whether, if we do not adjourn, the committees will be announced to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It is the intention of the Chair to announce the committees to-morrow if the House should be in session; but he does not wish to embarrass the House in regard to adjourning over.

Mr. DAWES. I hope, then, the House will not adjourn over.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires that the House should be entirely unembarrassed in this regard.

AMENDMENTS TO THE RULES.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to be referred to the Committee on the Rules when appointed:

Resolved, That the rules be so amended as to provide that when a House bill returns to the House with Senate amendments, points of order may be made in the House against any such amendments whenever the same are not germane to the subject-matter of the bill, or when such amendment contains an appropriation not authorized by law.

Mr. POLAND, by unanimous consent, submitted the following; which was referred to the Committee on the Rules when appointed, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the rules of the House be amended by adding thereto the following, to wit:

Rule —. All resolutions calling for information from the President or from any Department to be laid before Congress, shall first be referred to some appropriate standing committee of the House for a report as to the necessity and propriety of making such call; and such committee shall report thereon without delay, and shall be authorized to report at any time.

Rule —. Whenever any resolution or proposition shall be offered by a member for an investigation by a committee of the House, relating to the conduct or action of any member thereof, or of any officer or Department of the Government, or of any person or subject within the authority of the House, such resolution or proposition shall be referred to some appropriate standing committee of the House for report whether there is reasonable and probable cause for such investigation. And the member offering such resolution or proposition shall appear before such committee and state to them all the knowledge and information upon which such resolution or proposition is offered, and all his grounds and reasons for believing such investigation ought to be made. And thereupon, without any unnecessary delay, such committee shall report to the House whether such investigation ought to be ordered. It shall be in order for such committee to report at any time; and the question of accepting or rejecting the report of such committee or amendments thereto shall be taken without being delayed by dilatory motions.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to be referred to the Committee on the Rules when appointed:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Rules (when appointed) be, and are, instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by rule as follows:

1. That no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title.

2. That the question of agreeing to the report of a committee of conference on disagreeing votes between the two Houses of Congress shall be divisible, so that such report may be agreed to in part or rejected in part.

3. That no general legislative provision shall be ingrafted on an appropriation bill by a committee of conference on disagreeing votes between the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. MOREY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to be referred to the Committee on the Reduction of Salaries when appointed:

Resolved, That a committee of seven, to be known as the "Committee on Mississippi Levees," be added to the committees of this House.

Mr. COBURN submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Rules when appointed:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Rules be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the rules that the Commiteee on Appropriations be divided into five or more committees of appropriation, and that they be consolidated with the Committees on Expenditures, investing such newly formed committees with power both to report upon appropriations and to investigate as to accounts and expenditures in the fullest manner.

CONGRESSIONAL PAY, ETC.

Mr. KELLOGG, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to be referred to the Committee on the Reduction of Salaries when appointed:

Resolved, That the Special Committee on the Reduction of Salaries be directed to inquire into the actual amounts paid to all the members of the House for salaries, mileage, allowance for stationery, and other allowances in the Forty-second Congress, before the increase of salaries of March, 1873; and to report the amounts of each, and the gross amount, to this House, with the average amount for each member in the Forty-second Congress, as the law existed before said increase.

REPEAL OF THE TEST OATH.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Rules when appointed, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Rules, when appointed, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the prescribed oath now taken by members of Congress, generally known as the "iron-clad oath," with power to report a bill repealing the same, and with the privilege to report at any time.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS submitted the following resolution; which was read, referred to the Committee on the Rules, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That Rule 130 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

At the close of the call of States and Territories for bills on leave, and resolutions, on every Monday, it shall be the duty of the Speaker to call the States and Territories in alphabetical order; and each member may once only on each call make a motion to suspend the rules; and the whole of every Monday, after the morning hour, shall be devoted to this order of business, unless the House shall, by a majority vote, direct the consideration of one of the regular appropriation bills.

ELECTION OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. BUCKNER introduced the following resolution; which was read, referred to the Committee on Elections, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for holding elections for Representatives of this House at the same time throughout all of the States of the Union, and that said elections be held after the expiration instead of during the term of service of said Representatives; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

CAPITOL TELEGRAPH.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following communication:

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 4, 1873.

In the sundry civil bill passed at the last session of Congress, an appropriation was made for connecting the Capitol by telegraph, to be used solely for public purposes, with all of the Departments of the Government, and the Government Printing Office in this city. The work has been done, with the exception of the placing of the instrument and fixtures to be used in the House wing. They have been deposited, by the person in charge, in this office, to await the designation of a person to operate them. No provision having been made by law, it will devolve on the House to indicate how and by whom this appointment is to be made.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
EDWARD McPHERSON.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DAWES. As this has been done under the authority of the Clerk thus far, I think it only proper he should be instructed to make the appointment; and I therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized to appoint a competent operator for the telegraphic instrument in the House wing of the Capitol, at a rate of compensation to be fixed by the Committee of Accounts when appointed, and to be paid out of the miscellaneous item of the contingent fund; said appointment to continue only during the sessions of Congress.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Why not allow this, as all other expenditures, to be included under the general appropriations by law?

Mr. DAWES. Each House has control of its own contingent fund, and the resolution is offered in the usual form.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON SALARIES.

The SPEAKER announced the following as the members of the Special Committee on the Subject of Salaries of Members of Congress, &c.:

Messrs. HALE, of Maine, (chairman,) MAYNARD, KASSON, SCOFIELD, HALE of New York, NIBLACK, and JEWETT.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion for adjournment over.

Mr. MAYNARD. The motion I made was that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and it was made under the belief that the Chair would not be able to announce the standing committees of the House until that time. It has been intimated to me, however, that the Chair would be able to announce the committees to-morrow, and I therefore withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the House to act without embarrassment, and will say that it is his intention to announce the committees to-morrow.

Mr. GARFIELD. As it is likely the Special Committee on Salaries will report to-morrow, I hope we will have a session.

And then, on motion of Mr. DAWES, (at two o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BARRERE: The petition of Albert Pothoff, of Peoria, Illinois, for relief, &c.

By Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts: A petition of druggists and pharmaceutists of Salem, Massachusetts, for the repeal of schedule C of the act of June 30, 1864, and July 13, 1866.

By Mr. COBURN: The petition of Andrew Wallace and other citizens of Indianapolis, Indiana, asking for the passage of a law providing for the issue of United States notes to citizens depositing bonds therefor in the Treasury of the United States.

By Mr. COMINGO: The petition of D. W. C. Tower and others, of Clay County, Missouri, asking an amendment of the postal laws so as to require the prepayment of postage on newspapers at the offices at which they may be mailed, and a change in the method of determining the salaries of postmasters, &c.

By Mr. GLOVER: The petition of William Carson, of Palmyra, Marion County, Missouri, praying a change in the homestead clause of the bounty law.

By Mr. RANDALL: The petition of William M. Cooper, of Philadelphia, asking relief in view of his services and in view of his having given the use without charge of the Cooper-shop refreshment saloon during the late war.

Also, the petition of Isaac S. Bonsell, relative to procuring a pension for his wife.

By Mr. SMITH, of Virginia: The petition of F. W. E. Lohman, Samuel Ruth, and others, for compensation for services during the late rebellion.

By Mr. WARD, of Illinois: The petition of George Schneider and 500 others, citizens of Illinois, praying for the passage of a law to promote immigration to the United States, and for the protection of immigrants.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 5, 1873.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

REPEAL OF SALARY BILLS.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I ask that by unanimous consent all of the bills referred to the Committee on Salaries be ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLOGG. And the resolutions also.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will include that in my proposition.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Salaries.

There was no objection; and the bill (H. R. No. 221) restoring the former rate of compensation of members of Congress of the United States was introduced, read a first and second time, referred to the Special Committee on Salaries, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAYNARD. In connection with this same subject I beg to say that, as a member of the Committee on Salaries, it would gratify me if we had a general understanding that any gentleman who had a bill on that subject might, by presenting it at the Clerk's desk, have it printed and referred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. WHEELER in the chair.) Does the House consent to the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD?]

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LOAN OF 1858.

Mr. DAWES. There are reasons why it is quite important that the House should act immediately upon the bill received from the Senate (S. No. 51) to provide for the redemption of the loan of 1858; and those reasons I will explain if the House will give me unanimous consent to take it up at the present time. I think there will be no difference of opinion upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read at the Clerk's desk for information; and the Chair will then ask for objections, if any.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purpose of redeeming the bonds issued under the act entitled "An act to authorize a loan not exceeding the sum of twenty millions of dollars," approved June fourteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, as amended March third, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, called the loan of eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, the Secretary of the Treasury may issue, in exchange for any of said bonds, an equal amount, at par, of five per centum bonds of the funded loan, under the act for refunding the national debt, approved July fourteenth, eighteen hundred and seventy, and the act amendatory thereof, approved January twentieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one.

SEC. 2. That it is hereby declared to be the pleasure of the United States to pay all the coupon bonds of said loan of eighteen hundred and fifty-eight on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, except such as the holders thereof may elect, within six months from said date, to exchange for five per centum bonds of the funded loan, with interest from said January first; and money in the Treasury sufficient to carry into effect the provision of this act is hereby appropriated therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to this bill being taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not wish now to object to the consideration of the bill; but I reserve my right to object till I have heard the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, in 1858 there was a law passed authorizing a loan of $20,000,000, at 5 per cent. interest, to run for fifteen years. The loan was effected by the issue of two kinds of bonds, registered and coupon. In the form of the coupon bonds was inserted, what I do not find in the statutes, a phrase like this: "Payable on the 1st day of January, 1874, at the pleasure of the Government." This was not inserted in the registered bonds, and it is doubtful whether there was any authority for inserting it at all. Therefore in the second section of this bill, as no one man is authorized to express the pleasure of the Government, there is inserted a provision that it is the pleasure of the Government of the United States to pay these bonds on the 1st day of January, 1874.

The object of the bill is to clear up any possible question about the matter. These twenty millions of bonds become due on the 1st day of January, and no provision has yet been made for their redemption. The proposition of the bill is, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange for these bonds the 5 per cent. loan of 1872; and, in case no person desires him so to do, it authorizes him to redeem them at the Treasury according to their tenor. There is no doubt, I think, Mr. Speaker, but that they will be exchanged for the 5 per cent. loan.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] if under the provisions of this bill—I have only heard it read at the desk—there would not be an opportunity for the parties to receive two interests upon their indebtedness. Supposing they do not elect to exchange for the six months from the 1st day of January, 1874, would they not draw interest on both of their indebtednesses?

Mr. DAWES. That cannot be, because there is a provision in the bill that the bonds must be exchanged at par. That, of course, will require the equalization of interest. There can be no such thing under the bill as is suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If these bonds, due on the 1st day of January, 1874, are not absolutely payable at that time, and the holder not obliged to take them, he would draw interest on them of course up to the time when he makes the exchange. Now, is there any provision for issuing the 5 per cent. bonds at any date when he shall elect to exchange the bonds, so that there may be but one interest paid?

Mr. DAWES. That is the meaning of the bill. There is no provision in the bill that renders it possible for the holder when he elects to take a 5 per cent. bond to get more than one interest. When he gets a bond for 5 per cent., that covers his bond and the interest on it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Counting the interest at the date of the exchange?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir; and it seems to me that if my friend will read the bill he will be satisfied that it will not be possible to draw two interests under it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is there any provision of law that requires these bonds to be issued on the 1st day of January, and to draw interest from that day?

Mr. DAWES. There is not.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what assurance, if any, he has that the exchange will be made of these 1858 bonds for the new 5 per cent. loan? It is important for the House to know whether we are likely to have to pay this amount of $20,000,000 out of the Treasury.

Mr. DAWES. When the Government was authorized to exchange any of the coupon bonds for registered bonds, a portion of these were already exchanged for the registered bonds of the United States, and, further than that, application has been made to the Treasury by a great many of the holders of these bonds to be permitted to exchange them for the 5 per cent. bonds, but the Treasury had no right to do this. This bill authorizes the Department to do it, and the negotiations of the Treasury Department lead them to believe that it can be done.

Mr. GARFIELD. What is the present market value of the old 5 per cent. bonds, and of the new 5 per cent. bonds?

Mr. DAWES. They are at par in gold.

Mr. BECK. One question: suppose they are not exchanged, but they are to be paid on the 1st day of January next. Are they to be paid in gold, or is there a premium to be paid on them?

Mr. DAWES. No premium could be paid for them. They would be paid in gold for their face. As long ago as 1858 nobody raised any question about the difference between paper and gold. But no premium can be paid upon the bonds due, and presented to the Treasury for payment. The Department will pay the face of the bond and the accrued interest in gold or its equivalent.

Mr. BECK. The Supreme Court had decided that the legal-tender bills were payable on all contracts, both those prior as well as those subsequent to the passage of the legal-tender act. If that is the law, then why pay gold on these bonds?

Mr. DAWES. It will be a sufficient answer to the gentleman, without going into a discussion of the decision of the Supreme Court at all, that the Government does not hold itself at liberty to loan these bonds with any such decision as that.

Mr. BECK. The money comes from the tax-payers, and they have to take legal-tender notes for debts due them.

Mr. DAWES. My friend does not wish to go to the country with the statement that he wants to pay these bonds in paper.

Mr. BECK. I want to pay them according to our obligation under the law.

Mr. DAWES. That is what I say is the intention of the Government to-day, to pay these bonds according to their tenor; that is, in the money of the world—in coined money.

Mr. RANDALL. In the kind of money that was borrowed upon them.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; the kind that was borrowed on them.

Mr. RANDALL. Some time ago, when the Geneva award money was received from Great Britain, it was invested in this kind of bonds, under these two named laws. And it was claimed, and I understood allowed—I never heard it contradicted—that a commission was due to what is known as the syndicate. Now, I want to know from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] whether the issue of these bonds would give a claim to that syndicate for a commission, as they claim the right to charge a commission against the negotiation of any bonds, no matter who negotiates them—whether there was or was not an intermediate person between the Government and the purchaser.

Mr. DAWES. The Geneva award was invested in 5 per cent. bonds, under authority of a special statute framed on the last day of the last session. Whatever claim the syndicate may have made, no commission was allowed.

Mr. RANDALL. Not in that case?

Mr. DAWES. No; and in this transaction the syndicate would have no more to do than my friend or myself. I now call the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before that is done, I wish to inquire whether this bill contemplates an increase of the issue of the 5 per cent. bonds? The gentleman will recollect that the law already provides for the issue of a certain amount of 5 per cent., 4½, and 4 per cent. bonds. Does this bill contemplate a further issue of 5 per cent. bonds?

Mr. DAWES. It does not. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to reinvest in the 5 per cents authorized by the statute of 1872, but no additional loan.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I reserved the right to object to the present consideration of this bill until we could hear some explanation of it. I think I ought to continue to object to it. As I understand it, this bill is worded no different from the act of 1871, under which two rates of interest were obtained. I think this bill should be considered by a committee.

Mr. DAWES. If my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] will hear the text of the bill read his doubts will be removed in a moment.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It is an important bill, and I think should be considered by a committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. WHEELER.) Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman allow the bill to be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not object to that.

The bill was accordingly ordered to be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means when appointed.

LOUISIANA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. SPEER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolutions; which were read, considered, and referred to the Committee on Elections:

Resolved, That Effingham Lawrence, Randall L. Gibson, and E. C. Davidson, from the first, second, and fourth congressional districts of Louisiana respectively, be permitted to serve upon J. HALE SYPHER, LIONEL A. SHELDON, and GEORGE L. SMITH, from the same districts respectively, who are sitting members in this House, notice of contest within twenty days from the passage of these resolutions; and that the said sitting members be permitted to answer the same within twenty days after the service thereof.

Resolved, That the time for taking testimony in each of the said contested-election cases is hereby extended for ninety days from the 1st day of December, 1873.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. DAWES. Before that question is put I desire to offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD.]

Mr. SCOFIELD. Pending my motion to adjourn, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let us have a session to-morrow for debate only.

Mr. KELLEY. I think we may as well do so, as a number of gentlemen desire to make speeches.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SCOFIELD, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next, the motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 144, noes 24.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I withdraw for a few moments my motion to adjourn.

SURVEY OF GRAND CALUMET RIVER, INDIANA.

Mr. PACKARD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish for the information of this House any documents or reports in his possession, not included in his annual report, relating to the survey of the Grand Calumet River, in the State of Indiana, at and near its mouth.

Mr. PACKARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF JOURNAL, ETC.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of printing the Journal of the House and the executive and legislative documents in the same size and style as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. LAWRENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. COX. I am requested to present in open House a petition signed by 3,411 mariners of the port of New York, with the designation to each signature of the ship to which they are attached, asking for the repeal of the act of June 7, 1872, to authorize the appointment of shipping commissioners by the circuit court, and to superintend the shipping and discharge of seamen. The petition contains ten reasons for the repeal. The last reason is that they desire to make their own contracts, without guardianship or fraud. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

ROOM FOR REPORTERS OF DEBATES.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to offer the following resolution, and to make a brief explanation of it before it is acted upon:

Resolved, That the room immediately adjoining that of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to the east and upon the same floor, be, and is hereby, set apart for the use of the official reporters of the debates of the House, and that it be refitted at once for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, there has been long felt a necessity that these reporters should have some room by themselves. At present, whenever they undertake to write out their notes, they are obliged to go and sit in the seats of members. They have no place even to hang their hats and coats. In the other branch of Congress the official reporters have a very comfortable room fitted up in fine style. Our reporters have been always without any such accommodation. The assignment of a room for them would be a great accommodation to members who have to communicate with them at all seasons of the day and evening, and to committees who desire to obtain information from them or to communicate papers and facts. In view of the use to which the room proposed is at present devoted, I think it will be seen at once that it will be a great deal better to appropriate it to the use of the reporters. I hope there will be no objection to this resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. The assignment of this room to the reporters will really be an accommodation to the members rather than to the reporters.

Mr. DAWES. Yes, it is as much an accommodation to the members as to the reporters. Members will find it greatly to their advantage for the reporters to have some room where members can go and be sure to find them. Unless some provision of this kind be adopted, we shall, in a few weeks, see these reporters scattered around the House in the vacant seats of members, writing out their notes, for there is at present no place to which they can go as their own. I think the House must see the propriety of the resolution.

Mr. MAYNARD. If I understand this proposition it is to appropriate to the reporters the room which is now used as a ladies' reception room. There is another proposition, the propriety of which will be at once recognized by the older members, which it might be well to couple with this proposition or to adopt hereafter as a separate measure, provided it meets the concurrence of the Presiding Officer of the House. We have now a very fine room, usually denominated the "Speaker's room," very much on the principle of lucus a non lucendo, because the Speaker is never in it and never can get into it. [Laughter.] I suggest that there would be very great propriety in setting that room apart for the use of members' families during the hours when the House is in session, so that gentlemen may there confer with their wives and daughters, as they are sometimes obliged to do, during the sittings of the House. If the "Speaker's room" were thus appropriated, the other room could be given up. I would be unwilling to make anything more than a suggestion of this kind without ascertaining the personal views of the Speaker on the subject.

Mr. DAWES. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] would probably have its weight with those who arrange the uses of the room.

The SPEAKER. Both the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] must be quite well aware that the room known as the Speaker's room now is used for the purpose named, very freely and very properly. The families of members have unrestricted use of the room at present.

Mr. DAWES. So I supposed.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair would be very glad if there were a rule which confined the room to that use. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWES. It is best to consider one proposition at a time. Let this resolution, to which I think there is no objection, be adopted now as a separate proposition; and I have no doubt we can hereafter arrange the other matter to the satisfaction of my courteous friend from Tennessee.

The resolution of Mr. DAWES was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BANKS, ETC.

Mr. BUNDY. I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be requested to report at an early day a bill to prevent, under sufficient penalties, national banks from paying interest or premium in any manner whatever on current deposits or "daily balances" to other banks, corporations, person or persons, whatsoever or whomsoever; also amending the national banking act so that any and all banks authorized in pursuance thereof, or acts amendatory thereto, may receive bonds of the Government, payable in lawful money, in sufficient sums to constitute the reserves held and to be held by such banks, respectively, the same as they are now required to hold other funds for such reserves.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be required to report at an early day a bill to amend the general bankrupt law, so that the provisions thereof for involuntary bankruptcy shall only apply in cases where it shall be made to appear that there is collusion between the creditor and debtor, giving the former an unjust preference, to the prejudice of the other creditors, or where the debtor is committing, or attempting to commit, fraud upon his creditors.

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means are hereby requested to report a bill at an early day authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out or reissue the legal tenders or United States notes, so that the gross sum shall be and not exceed $400,000,000, as originally provided for by law, and that the Government shall issue $100,000,000 of its bonds, payable on demand in lawful money, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent., said bonds to be redeemable and payable of all debts, public and private, the same as the legal tenders or United States notes now are.

Mr. DAWES. Are those resolutions of inquiry, or of instruction to the committees to which they are to be referred?

Mr. RANDALL. The resolutions can only be introduced for reference.

Mr. BUNDY. I merely desire to introduce the resolutions for reference to the appropriate committees.

Mr. RANDALL. The resolution asks the Committee on Ways and Means to inquire into certain matters in regard to the currency, which should go to the Committee on Banking and Currency and not to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the resolutions are somewhat mandatory in their nature. They will be read again for the information of the House, and will be acted upon separately.

Mr. NIBLACK. I make the point of order that the resolutions should be acted upon separately.

Mr. HOOPER. Is their introduction open to objection?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late to object to the introduction of the resolutions. They will be again read, so the House may understand precisely what it is proposed to do.

Mr. BUNDY. I merely ask that the resolutions be referred to the appropriate committees.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move an amendment to the first resolution.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the resolution be amended so that the committee will be merely directed to inquire into the expediency, &c.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions are not now offered for passage, but merely read before being referred to the appropriate committees. The action proposed to be taken is not to instruct the committees, nor even to inquire into the expediency, but the resolutions are to be referred without any further action whatever.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to offer an amendment to be referred with the resolution. I move to insert after "national," where it first occurs in the resolution, the words "and other," so it will provide that no interest shall be paid by any national or other bank. I will state my purpose a little more specifically.

The payment of interest by banks to banks on balances is a great evil. It increases the cost of money, concentrates capital in the great cities, and gives rise to wild speculation, resulting in panics like that which recently commenced and yet prevails to some extent. My object in moving the amendment is that inquiry may be made whether it is not expedient to prohibit incorporated banks (and trust companies, which are really incorporated banks,) from paying interest on deposits made by banks in other States. Of course I do not propose to interfere with private banks in the States where they are located. But I would prohibit banks and trust companies in New York and other great cities from paying interest to banks in other States. If the contemplated limitation is only applied to national banks, but a small part of the evil will be remedied. There are incorporated banks and trust companies in many of the States, though they do not have the power to issue bills for circulation as money. Congress can regulate interstate interest on money, and the remedy which is to be applied to the evil mentioned should be ample and reach all its sources.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to insert "or any individual."

Mr. LAWRENCE. It ought to apply to all banks.

Mr. SPEER. Congress has no such power.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let the committee consider the whole subject; that is all I ask. As to interest paid between banks in different States, Congress has the undoubted power to regulate it.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a question of order, that the gentleman's amendment is not in order, as the resolutions are not upon their passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the same right to offer for reference matter similar in character to the resolutions.

Mr. LAWRENCE I ask that my amendment may go to the committee with the resolutions to which it refers.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the resolutions be laid upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The first resolution was then referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, the second to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the third to the Committee on Ways and Means.

THE CREW OF THE TIGRESS.

Mr. G. F. HOAR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to communicate to this House all the facts in his possession tending to show what claims, legal or equitable, the owners, officers, and crew of the Tigress, or any other persons, may have on the United States for assistance rendered to the officers and crew of the Polaris.

Mr. G. F. HOAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON FREEDMEN'S AFFAIRS.

Mr. RAINEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and referred to the Committee on the Rules:

Whereas the reasons that governed former Congresses in the creation and organization of the Committee on Freedmen's Affairs have ceased to exist: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Freedmen's Affairs be, and the same is hereby, abolished.

UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution for action at this time:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, requested to report for the information of this House the names, if any of all officers now in the United States Marine Corps who, having been appointed to the United States Military or Naval Academies, were dropped, dismissed, or who failed to graduate at either institution before receiving their appointment in said Marine Corps; also, the names, if any, of all officers now in the United States Marine Corps who failed to pass the examination for admission into said corps, and by what authority of law said appointments, if any, were made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Let it go to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER, pro tempore, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist on his objection?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then, the resolution is not before the House.

REPEAL OF SALARIES.

Mr. STORM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 222) for the repeal of salaries, &c.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Special Committee on Salaries, and ordered to be printed.

IOWA DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. McCRARY. I ask unanimous consent to offer a bill for consideration at this time. It relates to the holding of certain United States courts in the State of Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read. It provides in its first section that instead of the time now fixed by law, the terms of the district courts of the United States for the district of Iowa to be held at the city of Keokuk and the city of Council Bluffs shall commence at Keokuk on the third Tuesday of January and the third Tuesday of June, and at Council Bluffs on the third Tuesday of March and the third Tuesday of September, in each year.

In its second section the bill provides that all causes, processes, suits, and proceedings now pending or commenced, or hereafter to be commenced, shall be continued or returned in and to said courts at the several times specified.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not rise to object, but I desire to say that in several instances, in the early parts of former sessions, we have passed bills changing the times of holding district courts in various States, and before Congress adjourned some person interested in the particular State, having an interest, perhaps, conflicting with that of the member offering the bill, has come forward and got such an act repealed.

This may not be the case in this instance, but I suggest that there be caution in passing such bills, lest other parties having a different interest should come forward afterward and ask for their repeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin object to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not object if it is a bill in regard to which there are no conflicting interests.

Mr. McCRARY. I assure the gentleman from Wisconsin that there is no difficulty about this particular bill. It is introduced in compliance with the request of the judge and the wishes of the bar.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 223) changing the time for holding certain district courts of the United States for the State of Iowa was introduced, and read a first and second time.

The question was on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to suggest to my colleague whether the language of the second section is not too broad when it says that all processes, &c., issuing from the court shall be returnable at the times specified. Would it not be better to say that all processes, &c., should be returned to the courts held at those two places? I have only heard the bill read once, but it struck me that the language was too broad to accomplish the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. McCRARY. The bill was drawn by the judge himself. I think it is well guarded, and not open to objection.

Mr. KASSON. I should like to hear the second section again read.

The Clerk again read the second section, as follows:

That all causes, processes, suits, and proceedings now pending or commenced, or hereafter to be commenced, shall be continued or returned in and to said courts at the several times herein specified.

Mr. KASSON. That is too broad, and, before the question is taken, I again call the attention of my colleague to the point whether, in his legal judgment, this does not take all the causes and processes now pending to these courts; whether he ought not to say—

In or returnable to said terms of court.

I suggest this only to guard the construction of the law against any legal difficulties.

Mr. McCRARY. If my colleague will suggest an amendment I shall probably not object to it. But I do not at present see the importance of what he suggests.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCRARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

A few minutes subsequently,

Mr. McCRARY said: I have looked at the bill passed a few moments since, and I think it safer to adopt the suggestion of my colleague, [Mr. KASSON,] and to insert in the second line of section two, after the word "commenced," the words "for said term of court," so that it will read "that all causes, processes, suits, and proceedings now pending and commenced for said term of court, or hereafter to be commenced, shall be continued," &c. I ask unanimous consent that the change I have indicated be made in the bill as ordered to be engrossed.

No objection was made, and it was ordered accordingly.

JOHN B. WEBER.

Mr. BASS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 224) for the relief of John B. Weber, late colonel Eighteenth Regiment Infantry, Corps d'Afrique; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

NORTH CAROLINA JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 225) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a western judicial district of North Carolina;" which was read a first and second time.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina. I ask that the bill be now put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information; after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I think that should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LEACH. I desire to say a single word. The act which it is proposed to amend passed last session ten minutes before the adjournment, and it has been found that it requires amendment. This is a bill which ought to pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on his objection?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I think the bill should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina. I am willing that it should be referred.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN RESERVATION IN IDAHO.

Mr. NESMITH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 226) to authorize the purchase of six hundred and forty acres of land for the Nez Percé Indian reservation in the Territory of Idaho; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

CATHERINE FERRY.

Mr. MELLISH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 227) granting a pension to Catherine Ferry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

CATHERINE H. BECK.

Mr. PLATT, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 228) for the relief of Catherine H. Beck, of Lisle, Broome County, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISA B. MATHEY.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 229) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa B. Mathey, postmaster at Potosi, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. H. ANDERSON.

Mr. HUNTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 230) granting a pension to William H. H. Anderson, late a private in Company B, First Heavy Artillery, Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE H. HARDING.

Mr. HUNTER, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of George H. Harding, of Monroe County, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF GIDEON WALKER.

Mr. HUNTER, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 232) for the relief of the heirs of Gideon Walker, deceased, late of Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON COAL.

Mr. HAMILTON. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for reference to the Committee on Ways and Means:

Resolved, That, inasmuch as coal is one of the great necessities of the people at large, is essential to the preservation of life, and ought to be brought as nearly as possible within the reach of the needy, and to that extent relieve their sufferings, it is referred to the Committee on Ways and Means to inquire into the expediency of speedily bringing in a bill to repeal all duties and taxes upon the same.

Mr. COX. I would like to make this resolution instructive to the committee; to bring in a bill to make coal cheap for the starving people.

Mr. STORM. Freezing people.

Mr. COX. Well, freezing people. Those who freeze also starve. I desire to make this instructive.

Mr. FIELD. I object to the resolution in any shape.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SHELDON. I desire the consent of the House to make a brief personal explanation.

Mr. GARFIELD. How long?

Mr. SHELDON. Two minutes.

No objection was made.

Mr. SHELDON. I had some agency, day before yesterday, in seating my colleague [Mr. SMITH] from the fourth congressional district of Louisiana, and if any wrong has been done in that matter I consider myself personally responsible. I see that the newspapers charge that his certificate was executed prior to the reception of the election returns in New Orleans and their canvass by the returning board. I am informed upon reliable authority—authority that I think cannot be questioned—that those returns had all arrived and been properly canvassed on the 28th and 29th days of November, prior to the execution of the certificate.

I wish to say, further, that this is not a physical impossibility by any means. The remotest precinct from New Orleans in my colleague's district can be reached in less than forty hours, certainly in two days, from New Orleans. A man can go from any part of that district to New Orleans in three days, and there were five days before the certificate was issued. I assure the House that the statements of the papers upon this subject are wholly untrue. I say this not only upon my own account, but to free the House from the reflection made upon it.

I wish to say another thing: It is equally a mistake to say that the district of my colleague is a democratic district. It never has been carried by a democrat, and never can be by any fair means. I think, to say the least of it, that the newspapers have been misinformed upon this subject.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY IN CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections have liberty to print any papers in contested-election cases referred to the said committee by order of the House, the printing of which shall be necessary in the judgment of the committee.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now lays before the House the standing committees of the House for the Forty-third Congress. There having been some changes made in the Committee on Elections since the announcement of that committee day before yesterday, it will be announced with the other committees.

The Clerk then read the committees, as follows:

Committee on Elections—Messrs. Smith of New York, Thomas, Hazelton of Wisconsin, Todd, Pike, Robinson of Ohio, Harrison, Hyde, Speer, Lamar, and Crossland.

Committee on Ways and Means—Messrs. Dawes, Kelley, Burchard, Ellis H. Roberts, Kasson, Waldron, Sheldon, Foster, Beck, Niblack, and Wood.

Committee on Appropriations—Messrs. Garfield, Hale of Maine, Wheeler, O'Neill, Starkweather, Loughridge, Tyner, Parker of Missouri, Marshall, Swann, and Hancock.

Committee on Banking and Currency—Messrs. Maynard, Farwell, Merriam, Hawley of Connecticut, Hunter, Phelps, Hubbell, Niles, Randall, Mitchell, and Durham.

Committee on the Pacific Railroad—Messrs. Sawyer, Sypher, Killinger, Houghton, Crocker, Williams of Michigan, Corwin, McDill of Iowa, Wells, Barnum, Standeford, Creamer, and Neal.

Committee on Claims—Messrs. Hawley of Illinois, Shoemaker' of Pennsylvania, Lansing, Dunnell, Nunn, Smith of Ohio, Burrows, Howe, W. R. Roberts, Eden, and Hamilton.

Committee on War Claims—Messrs. Lawrence, Hazelton of Wisconsin, Cobb of North Carolina, Kellogg, Woodford, Scudder of New Jersey, Smith of Pennsylvania, Wilson of Iowa, Holman, Harris of Virginia, and Morrison.

Committee on Commerce—Messrs. Wheeler, Sawyer, Conger, Hooper, Negley, Stanard, Parsons, Clayton, Holman, Bromberg, and Willie.

Committee on the Public Lands—Messrs. Townsend, Dunnell, Orr, Bundy, Morey, St. John, Phillips, Bradley, Hereford, Herndon, and Clymer.

Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads—Messrs. Packer, Stowell, Platt of New York, Williams of Massachusetts, Page, Danford, Cobb of Kansas, Cannon, Randall, Read, and Atkins.

Committee on Manufactures—Messrs. Farwell, Hathorn, Biery, Ransier, Field, Whiteley, Woodworth, Waddell, Wilson of Maryland, Bowen, and Blount.

Committee on Agriculture—Messrs. Hays, Lamport, Hazelton of New Jersey, Begole, Wilson of Iowa, Ray, Ross, Cain, Davis, Hatcher, and McLean.

Committee on Indian Affairs—Messrs. Averill, Lowe, Butler of Tennessee, Rainey, Richmond, McNulta, Lawson, Harris of Massachusetts, Adams, Comingo, and Giddings.

Committee on Military Affairs—Messrs. Coburn, Donnan, Hawley of Illinois, Hawley of Connecticut, Gunckel, Albright, McDougall, Thornburgh. Nesmith, Young of Georgia, and Hunton.

Committee on the Militia—Messrs. Butler of Tennessee, Hazelton of New Jersey, Snyder, Ross, Crounse, Elliott, Walls, Storm, Sloss, Hereford, and Cook.

Committee on the District of Columbia—Messrs. Hale of New York, Harmer, Cotton, Rice, Hendee, Clark of New Jersey, Pelham, Lofland, Eldredge, Barnum, and Leach.

Committee on the Judiciary—Messrs. Butler of Massachusetts, Wilson of Indiana, Poland, Tremain, Frye, Cessna, White, Ward of Illinois, Eldredge, Potter, and Jewett.

Committee on Public Expenditures—Messrs. Havens, Whiteley, Richmond, Pike, Wilber, Smith of North Carolina, Begole, Hynes, Clark of Missouri, Robbins, and Luttrell.

Committee on Private Land Claims—Messrs. Myers, Eames, Sessions, Barrere, Pratt, Hendee, Freeman, Bright, Sayler of Ohio, DeWitt, and Buckner.

Committee on Naval Affairs—Messrs. Scofield, Gooch, Hays, Platt of Virginia, Packard, Scudder of New York, Burleigh, Purman, Archer, Whitthorne, and Lamison.

Committee on Foreign Affairs—Messrs. Orth, Myers, Willard of Vermont, E. Rockwood Hoar, Clarke of New York, Ward of New Jersey, Albert, Williams of Wisconsin, Robinson of Illinois, Cox, and Banning.

Committee on the Territories—Messrs. McKee, Curtis, Williams of Indiana, Havens, Hoskins, Crounse, Fort, Hynes, Schumaker of New York, Brown, and Mills.

Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812—Messrs. Shoemaker of Pennsylvania, Lansing, Sprague, Williams of Michigan, Smith of Louisiana, Crutchfield, Bland, Caldwell, Vance, and Rawls.

Committee on Invalid Pensions—Messrs. Rusk, Wallace, Barry, McJunkin, Mellish, Martin, Small, Sener, Young of Kentucky, Crittenden, and O'Brien.

Committee on Railways and Canals—Messrs. McCrary, G. F. Hoar, Hurlbut, Bass, Sherwood, Lewis, Taylor, Smith of Virginia, Arthur, Wolfe, and Stone.

Committee on Mines and Mining—Messrs. Lowe, Negley, Buffinton, Rusk, Hubbell, Page, Sheats, Lynch, Kendall, Southard, and Harris.

Committee on Freedmen's Affairs—Messrs. Cobb of North Carolina, Nunn, Rainey, Townsend, Cotton, Morey, Barber, Sener, Comingo, Eden, and Adams.

Committee on Education and Labor—Messrs. Monroe, G. F. Hoar, Elliott, Darrall, Field, Crooke, McDill of Wisconsin, Rapier, Storm, Whitehead, and Glover.

Committee on Revision of the Laws of the United States—Messrs. Poland, E. Rockwood Hoar, Lawrence, Duell, Barber, Pendleton, Moore, Cason, Stephens, Kendall, and Knapp.

Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures—Messrs. Hooper, Houghton, Harmer, Barrere, Willard of Michigan, Sayler of Indiana, Strait, Mills, Berry, Bell, and Ashe.

Committee on Patents—Messrs. Conger, Eames, Smart, Clements, Crutchfield, Dobbins, Sayler of Indiana, Smith of North Carolina, Sloss, Parker of New Hampshire, and Magee.

Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—Messrs. Platt of Virginia, Sessions, Killinger, Sprague, Hersey, Pierce, Lowndes, Strait, Wells, Perry, and Milliken.

Committee on Reform in the Civil Service—Messrs. Kellogg, Willard of Vermont, Woodford, Sheats, Hurlbut, Butler of Massachusetts, Strawbridge, Willard of Michigan, Sayler of Ohio, Luttrell, and Whitehouse.

Committee on Mileage—Messrs. Bundy, Biery, Ray, Nesmith, and Parker of New Hampshire.

Committee on Accounts—Messrs. Buffinton, Sawyer, Hoskins, Wallace, and Archer.

Committee on Expenditures in the State Department—Messrs. Packard, Cobb of Kansas, St. John, Morrison, and Lamison.

Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department—Messrs. Sypher, Snyder, Phillips, Schumaker of New York, and Southard.

Committee on Expenditures in the War Department—Messrs. Williams of Indiana, Lamport, Curtis, Bright, and Giddings.

Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department—Messrs. McJunkin, Burrows, Walls, Magee, and Herndon.

Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department—Messrs. Barry, Todd, Mellish, Whitthorne, and Young of Georgia.

Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department—Messrs. Orr, Woodworth, Lynch, Robinson of Illinois, and Rawls.

Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings—Messrs. Duell, Cessna, Smith of Ohio, Pratt, and McLean.

Committee on the Rules—The Speaker, Messrs. Maynard, Garfield, Cox, and Randall.

Committee on Printing—Messrs. Donnan, Hale of New York, and Waddell.

Committee on the Library—Messrs. Frye, Monroe, and Clymer.

Committee on Enrolled Bills—Messrs. Darrall, Pendleton, and Harris of Georgia.

The SPEAKER, when the Committee on Mileage was announced, said: The Chair has appointed a Committee on Mileage for the reason that, although the compensation act passed last session abolished mileages, yet it provided for allowing to members their actual traveling expenses; and the Chair is informed by the officers of the House that there is no mode provided for anditing or allowing such accounts. The Chair has therefore appointed this committee, to which that duty may be assigned if the House shall so direct. It was at any rate the duty of the Chair to appoint the committee in the absence of any order to the contrary from the House.

MANUFACTURE OF TOBACCO, ETC.

Mr. DAVIS, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 233) to authorize manufacturers of tobacco and snuff to transfer to their factories licorice and other ingredients used in preparations of tobacco and snuff free of duty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. DAWES, (at two o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and memorials were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. ARCHER: The petition of B. T. Swart, of Maryland, for relief.

Also, the petition of A. DeCaindry and Mrs. J. L. Wamaling, of Maryland, for relief.

By Mr. BECK: The petition of C. P. Moorman & Co., W. H. Walker & Co., and a number of other distillers and dealers in Bourbon whisky in Louisville, Kentucky, praying for an extension of time for one year on whisky now in bond, by paying interest thereon.

Also, the petition of J. L. Pugh, David Gibson, and a number of distillers and dealers in Bourbon whisky in Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for an extension of time for taking whisky out of bond for an additional year, by paying interest.

Also, the petition of Buckner & Bedford, W. H. Thomas and a number of other distillers and dealers in Bourbon whisky in Bourbon County, Kentucky, praying for an extention of time on whisky in bonded warehouses from one to two years, by paying interest.

Also, the petition of T. C. Megibbon and a number of distillers and dealers in Bourbon whisky in Scott, Harrison and Nicholas Counties in Kentucky, praying for an extension from one to two years for payment of tax on whisky in bond, by paying interest.

By Mr. BUFFINTON: A memorial of druggists and pharmacists of Fall River, Massachusetts, praying that Schedule C of the acts of Congress of June 30, 1864, and July 13, 1866, be repealed.

By Mr. G. F. HOAR: The petition for relief of John W. Marsh.

By Mr. HUNTER: The petition of Rice M. Brown, of Lawrence County, Indiana, asking relief.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The memorial of W. H. Rulofson, of California, praying for relief.

Also, the memorial of James E. Barnes and 11 others, of California, for relief.

By Mr. PARSONS: The petition of William Fletcher for compensation for loss of steamer Delta, $5,000.

By Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont: The petition of Eliza A. Maxham, Northfield, Vermont, for a pension.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

The following notice of leave to introduce a bill was given under the rules:

By Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee: A bill to establish certain post-offices in Tennessee.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, December 8, 1873.

Prayer by Rev. E. D. OWEN, of Washington.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

Hon. THOMAS F. BAYARD, of Delaware, Hon. THOMAS M. NORWOOD, of Georgia, Hon. GEORGE GOLDTHWAITE, of Alabama, and Hon. SIMON B. CONOVER, of Florida, appeared in their seats to-day.

COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. HAMLIN. I notice by the reading of the Journal, as well as by the printed list of the committees laid upon our desks this morning, that there has been an error committed in the formation of the Committee on Mines and Mining. There are but six persons placed upon it; there should be seven. I therefore move that the Chair be authorized to supply the vacancy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the Chair be authorized to appoint a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter, dated the 26th ultimo, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with a form of a bill prepared under the direction of the Department, providing for the sale of the Kansas Indian lands in the State of Kansas to actual settlers, and for the disposition of the proceeds arising from such sale; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with law, his adjusted quarterly accounts of the general receipts and expenditures of the United States for the third and fourth quarters of 1871, and for the first and second quarters of 1872, being for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872; which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of W. C. Williams, of Brooklyn, New York, praying the restoration of money paid by him, as alleged improperly, for a substitute in the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, favoring the construction of the Niagara Ship-canal by the General Government; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the survey of a route for a ship-canal across the State of Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Calvin Chipman, a citizen of Michigan, asking the passage of a bill allowing him the sum of $8 per month from the 23d of November, 1812, to the 2d of April, 1850, for services rendered by him; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Anton Sontag, a citizen of the United States, asking the establishment of navigation, and a line of steamers, with subsidy of the United States, to land on the Black Sea, Dardanelles, Adriatic, and other places, and setting forth the benefits to be derived therefrom; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of Edgar P. Ensign, attorney in behalf of certain of the late employés at the United States court-house and post-office at Des Moines, Iowa, praying compensation for two hours per day extra services rendered between June 25, 1868, and July 25, 1869; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented the petition of J. C. Denny, late of Company K, Ninth Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, praying for extra pay as telegraph operator; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petitions of Charles S. Movers and Jane A. Movers, of Des Moines, Iowa, praying for a pension for services rendered in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT presented the petition of J. W. Coolbroth, of Hollidaysburgh, Blair County, Pennsylvania, praying payment for damages sustained in the destruction by the steamer Union, in 1861, of the brig B. F. Martin, containing merchandise belonging to him; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of a committee of Belgians, resident in the city of New York, praying that no treaty with Belgium may be ratified classing retroactively "bankruptcy" or "fraudulent bankruptcy," as defined by Belgian law, among the crimes for which Belgians resident here may be sought and arrested, and extradited; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of James Glover, of Pennsylvania, asking compensation for property belonging to him destroyed in Louisiana by United States troops to prevent it falling into the hands of the enemy; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALCORN presented the petition of Julia A. Nutt, administratrix of Haller Nutt, deceased, of Natchez, Adams County, Mississippi, praying payment for quartermaster's stores taken by United States forces; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COOPER presented the petition of the publishing house of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, praying to be paid the value of the property of that house, used and appropriated by the Union Army, at Nashville, Tennessee, in 1864 and 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I have a memorial to present. It comes from those largely instructed in the matters of which they speak; it is an argument in favor of an object which has my most earnest sympathy. It is the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in regard to the resumption of specie payments. The Senate is aware that this organization numbers in its membership many of the most distinguished, sagacious, and experienced bankers, business men, and financiers of the country. No word of mine can add weight to their judgment and action. I commend it to the grave attention of the Senate; and move its reference to the Committee on Finance, and that it be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will not make any objection in this case, but I think we ought not to begin printing memorials. If we do, we shall have to print all that are presented.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the suggestion of my friend from Rhode Island I think timely and proper, and I withdraw the motion to print. I think if any memorialists may safely trust their communications to the attention of the Senate without their being printed, the Chamber of Commerce of New York can do so; and it occurs to me, also, that the chamber will send, unless they have already sent, to the members of the Senate a printed copy of the memorial. This fortifies the propriety of the suggestion of my friend from Rhode Island.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to print is withdrawn; and the memorial will be referred to the Committee on Finance, if there be no objection.

Mr. WEST presented the petition of James Rainey, D. T. Boulin, M. B. Brady, and E. Gaschet de St. Isle, praying for compensation for the use of what is known as the "cotton-press," in New Orleans, by the United States, from May, 1863, to December, 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of A. J. Sypher, of Louisiana, praying compensation for lumber, dray, cart, cotton-gin, &c., taken and used by the United States at Memphis, Tennessee, in January, 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Samuel Jamison, of New Orleans, Louisiana, praying compensation for the use and occupancy by the United States of certain houses and lots in the city of New Orleans, from July, 1862, to October, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Henry Ware, of Louisiana, praying compensation for 758 bales of cotton seized at Shreveport, Louisiana, by Robert G. Curtis, assistant supervising agent of the Treasury of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Louisa H. Hasell, praying payment of rent for certain real estate in Summerville, South Carolina, taken by the United States Army and occupied as a small-pox hospital; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Edward H. Wilson, of Louisiana, praying payment to him of certain money realized on cotton and a judgment in his favor and against the Bank of Louisiana, the cotton having been seized and sold by the United States and the proceeds paid into the Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MERRIMON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, praying a modification of the internal-revenue law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, presented the petition of Elijah Fuller, Alfred Spates, and others, citizens of Alleghany County, Maryland, praying for compensation to George Hering for property taken by the Army during the late civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the petition of George L. Ruffin, James M. Trotter, and 318 other colored citizens of Boston, praying for the passage of the bill known as the supplementary civil rights bill which is now on the table. I move that this petition be received and that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT, presented the petition of Calvin Hess, of Hamilton County, Indiana, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Celia Tweed, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Edward Marshall, of Company C, Fifteenth Indiana Volunteers, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented the petition of Henry Inman, late captain in the United States Army, praying to be restored to his former rank; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the memorial of Susan Dayton Anderson, administratrix of Joseph Wheaton, deceased, asking compensation for his services as an officer of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. SARGENT presented the petition of the representative of James H. Carleton, lieutenant-colonel United States Army, praying remuneration to his children for property destroyed by United States forces at Albuquerque, New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying the establishment of a land district in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Sarah Brooks, praying compensation for injuries inflicted by Indians in the State of Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of citizens of Oregon, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the Willamette River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of James Jefferson and 81 others, citizens of Rhode Island, praying for the passage of the bill known as "Sumner's supplementary civil rights bill;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of Leonora Marshall, praying to be allowed her share of the pension due Charles Hoyt at the time of his death for his services in the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. LEWIS presented the petition of Joseph Segar, of Virginia, praying to be allowed pay as a Senator of the United States, chosen by the Legislature of Virginia to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. Lemuel J. Bowden, on the 8th of December, 1864; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MORTON presented the muster-in roll and other papers in relation to the matter of the claim of Christian Stawitz, first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, to pay as an officer; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of John W. Marsh, of Oxford, Massachusetts, praying for a reissue of a patent for improvements in sewing-machines; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. ALCORN, it was Ordered, That the memorial and testimony in the claim of Miss Susan A. Shelby, of Mississippi, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. STEVENSON, it was Ordered, That the memorial and accompanying papers of the Louisville and Bardstown Turnpike Company be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. STEVENSON, it was Ordered, That the memorial and accompanying papers of T. T. Garrard and others, of Clay County, Kentucky, praying to be compensated for the destruction of salt-wells, &c., be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Samuel Houston be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Isaac A. Morris be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Wildey Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Jefferson County, West Virginia, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Matthew Wright, claiming remuneration for Indian depredations, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Clement Wettle claiming pay for losses from Indians, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Barnard K. Knowlton, administrator of S. B. Lowry, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Dennis Sullivan be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That the petition of Lizzie M. Mitchell, praying for a pension, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Antoinette Darling, praying compensation for property destroyed by Indians, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Frank C. Darling, praying compensation for property destroyed by Indians, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. SUMNER, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Charles F. Carr be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of John S. Corlett be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers relating to the claim of Hannegan & Co. be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. SPENCER, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers in the case of Benjamin Cooley and James W. Boswell be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

On motion of Mr. SPENCER, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers in the case of E. J. Woolum be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

On motion of Mr. SCOTT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of William Wheeler Hubbell be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion of Mr. SCOTT, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the heirs of Andrew White be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Private Land-Claims.

On motion of Mr. SCOTT, it was Ordered, That the claimants in the case of the heirs of William Northedge have leave to withdraw their papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Samuel S. Potter be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Celia Tweed, of Madison County, North Carolina, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Dr. Samuel Davis, of Indiana, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of DeWitt C. Chipman be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Finance.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Henry C. Smith be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of George E. Payne be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Jules Frank be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Charles G. Berry be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Hiram Prather be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of James L. Baldwin, of Logansport, Indiana, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Andrew Johnson, of Cass County, Indiana, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Joseph Nock be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Elizabeth F. Thompson be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. DAVIS. I give notice that at no very distant day I shall ask leave to introduce a bill restoring to newspapers the privileges they enjoyed previous to the repeal of the late franking privilege.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STEVENSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 61) providing for busts in marble of the late Chief Justice Roger B. Taney, and of the late Chief Justice Salmon Portland Chase, to be placed in the Supreme Court room of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 62) to incorporate the Southern Transcontinental Railroad Company, and to grant the right of way through the public lands to the same; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public-Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWNLOW asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 63) for the relief of Perez Dickinson, surviving partner of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, East Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 64) for the relief of Christian Stawitz, late first lieutenant One hundred and forty-fourth Indiana Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 65) to authorize the President to restore George Henry Preble, now a captain in the Navy, to his original position on the Navy Register, and promote him to the rank of commodore on the active list; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 66) for the relief of Samuel S. Potter; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 67) for the relief of Charles G. Berry, of Indiana; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 68) for the relief of Hiram Prather, late lieutenant-colonel of the Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 69) for the relief of William H. Vesey; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 70) to establish a national university; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, I wish to say that I introduce this bill by request. It was handed to me by a highly respectable gentleman with the desire that I should introduce it this morning. I have not examined it, and I do not commit myself to the plan at all. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Education and Labor, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 71) to authorize the organization of national banks without circulation; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the letter of the Comptroller of the Currency accompanying the bill be printed, and that the bill and accompanying letter be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 72) to amend an act entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction for the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States;" which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill is accompanied by a memorial from the agent or commissioner appointed by the State of Ohio to present what are known as the Morgan raid claims. It is in the nature of a memorial of the State, and I move that it be printed with the bill, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the memorial come from a State?

Mr. SHERMAN. It comes from the commissioner appointed by the State of Ohio, and I think it is the act of the State, although it is signed by the commissioner.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 73) in relation to the United States courts in the State of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 74) for the relief of Henry Milward; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 75) for the relief of J. B. Cornell and others; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. AMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 76) for the relief of General J. B. Kinsman; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALCORN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 77) for the relief of Martha A. Booth; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 78) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, this bill has been prepared at the instance of a large number of business men of both the debtor and creditor class. I have not examined its provisions very fully, but, at the request of their representative, I introduce the bill; and move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 79) referring the claim of J. Snowden & Son to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 80) authorizing the administrator of Mrs. Sarah A. R. Lord, deceased, to bring suit in the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 81) for the relief of the heirs of Andrew White; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Private Land-Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 82) for the relief of Margaret E. West; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 83) granting a pension to Josiah Brinard; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FENTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 84) for the relief of the legal representatives of Christian B. Morrison, of New York; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 85) explanatory of an act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," approved March 2, 1799, and also of an act entitled "An act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, to provide for the more certain and speedy collection of claims in favor of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 86) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unaninous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 87) to facilitate the execution of and to protect certain public works of improvement at the mouth of the Mississippi River; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 88) for the better organization of the district courts of the United States within the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 89) in relation to the lines of telegraph connecting the Capitol with the various Departments of the Government; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 90) for the relief of John W. Hickey, of the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 91) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa H. Hasell; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARPENTER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 92) relating to the several courts in the Territory of Dakota; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 93) to provide for cheap transportation of persons and freight between the cities of New York and Chicago; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. LOGAN. On account of the question that may arise in reference to the power of Congress to grant charters within the States, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 94) for the relief of Isaac H. Allen; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 95) for the relief of the heirs of Colonel Francis Taylor and Dr. Charles Taylor; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that that bill, together with the papers now on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 96) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the reissue of land-warrants in certain cases, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1860; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 97) for the benefit of occupying claimants; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 98) to authorize the construction of a fire-proof building in Keokuk, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOREMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 99) for the relief of Peter Nodine, of West Virginia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 100) for the relief of Lieutenant Alonzo V. Richards; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 101) for the relief of Albert Towle, postmaster of Beatrice, Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 102) for the relief of Edward Gallaher; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LEWIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 103) to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 104) restoring to the marshal of the District of Columbia the exclusive supervision of the jail in said District; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 105) extending the time for the selection of swamp and overflowed land in Oregon under the act of Congress approved March 12, 1860; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public-Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 106) for the relief of the legal representatives of Chauncy M. Lockwood; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 107) to purchase 640 acres of land in the Territory of Idaho for the Nez Percé Indian reservation; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 108) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 109) to reorganize the clerical force of the General Land-Office; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COOPER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 110) for the relief of the East Tennessee University; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 111) for the relief of the book-agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 112) for the relief of James H. Willis, of Greenville, Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 113) for the relief of the trustees of Wildey Lodge, Independent Order of Odd-Fellows; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CROZIER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 114) to authorize the erection of a public building at Leavenworth, Kansas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 115) to incorporate the Eastern and Western Transportation Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to permit me to introduce a joint resolution, authorizing proceedings to be instituted in the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas, to determine the title to the Osage ceded lands. I ask that the resolution may lie on the table and be printed, and I give notice that on some subsequent day it will be called up, either by my colleague or by myself, and its reference moved to the Judiciary Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Kansas that this must be a bill, not a joint resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the clerk change it accordingly.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to say a word, if I can have the attention of the Senator from Kansas. I do not intend to object to printing bills and memorials; but it has not been customary to print bills on their introduction, unless there be some especial reason for it. They are printed as a matter of course when reported. By printing them at first we fill up our files. See the lot that has come from the House to-day—some fifty bills on the same subject. If the Senator from Kansas desires to have this proposition printed, I shall make no objection, but I would call the attention of the Senate to what I think is an increasing evil—printing memorials and printing bills before they have been referred. No person examines a bill until it has been reported, because it is not generally a subject of consideration until it has been reported.

Mr. INGALLS. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island, that there are special reasons why it is desirable that this resolution, or bill, as it is changed, should be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I will not object.

Leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 116) authorizing proceedings to be instituted in the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas, to determine the title to the Osage ceded lands; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask leave without previous notice to introduce a bill for the relief of Samuel Houston for the destruction of a steamboat, owned by him, by himself during the war, to prevent it falling into the hands of the enemy.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 117) for the relief of Samuel Houston; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

OFFICIAL SALARIES.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, it will be remembered that on Thursday I gave notice that this morning I should call up a bill, which I had the honor to introduce the first day of the session, on the subject of salaries, and would pray the indulgence of the Senate while I submitted some remarks upon it. Subject to the morning business, I now move that that bill be taken from the table. Of course, I will yield to any morning business, including the election of a Chaplain, as suggested by my friend from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.] It is Senate bill No. 9.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 9.

Mr. BOREMAN. As I understand, that bill is to be taken up subject to the morning business.

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be taken up when the morning business is concluded. Resolutions are now in order.

NATIONAL RAILROAD SYSTEM.

Mr. CLAYTON. I offer the following resolution:

Whereas under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States the power is vested in Congress "to regulate commerce among the several States" and "to establish post-offices and post-roads;" and

Whereas the ability to conduct commercial transactions among the several States, and the power to convey with cheapness, regularity, and dispatch the United States mails depends to a very great extent upon the means of transportation afforded by railroads; and

Whereas under existing laws lines of railroads projected in or through two or more States cannot be constructed or operated without the authority of said States, obtained either under general laws or by special enactment, thus leaving it in the power of a single State to shut out and prevent railroads from entering or passing through its territory from other States, no matter how manifestly the interests of commerce among the States may suffer thereby; and

Whereas it is believed by many persons that by reason of the exclusive privileges granted to railroad corporations by the Legislatures of some of the States, and by reason of combinations entered into by such corporations with each other for the purpose of monopolizing the carrying trade, some of the said corporations and combinations have become so powerful as to enable them to control the Legislatures of the States to the extent of preventing the organization of rival and competing corporations, whereby competition, which is the very life of commerce, is stifled and the growth of the productive interests of the country and the efficiency of the United States mail service is retarded; and

Whereas it is the duty of Congress to provide for the people cheap, frequent, and convenient mail facilities, and it is also its duty, so far as the power in it lies, not only to protect the commercial and productive interests of the country from the evil effects of monopolies, but to provide an easy and ready way by which the great carrying trade of the country conducted by the means of railroads may be thrown open to full and free competition: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Railroads be instructed to consider the expediency of reporting a bill providing for a general system of railroad incorporation, whereby persons may, by complying with the necessary requirements, become bodies corporate and politic for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating railroads for public use and for the transportation of the United States mails, said bill to contain provisions reserving to Congress the right to make such laws and regulations for the safety and comfort of passengers as may be deemed necessary from time to time.

I move that the resolution lie on the table and be printed. At some future day I will ask the consideration and action of the Senate upon it.

The motion was agreed to.

BALANCES OF UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance is directed to inquire whether the fifth, sixth, and seventh sections of the act approved July 12, 1870, regulating the disposition of balances of unexpended appropriations, has been duly observed and executed, and whether any further provisions of law are required to secure the covering into the Treasury of balances of unexpended appropriations.

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA.

Mr. GORDON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the memorial of Francis W. Sykes, claiming to be Senator-elect from the State of Alabama, with accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with power to send for persons and papers.

DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be directed to inquire into the expediency of repealing sections 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 of an act entitled "An act to appropriate the sales of the public lands and to grant pre-emption rights," approved September 4, 1841, and also section 8 of an act entitled "An act to secure homesteads to settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1862, and of providing by law that no portion of the public domain shall hereafter be alienated except to actual settlers and bona-fide residents.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) If there be no further morning business, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] is entitled to the floor on Senate bill No. 9.

Mr. ANTHONY. With the consent of the Senator from Iowa, I move that the Senate proceed to an election of Chaplain.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I nominate for Chaplain Rev. Dr. Byron Sunderland.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the rule requires the election to be by ballot, if there be no objection, I move that the rule be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No other nominations being made, the question is on the nomination made by the Senator from Rhode Island, of Rev. Dr. Sunderland.

The nomination was agreed to.

ELECTION OF EXECUTIVE CLERK.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the election of an executive clerk.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I nominate James R. Young.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No other nomination being made, the question is on the nomination made by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The nomination was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no further morning business, the bill (S. No. 9) to repeal so much of the act of March 3, 1873, as increases the salaries therein named, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole; and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask that the bill be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the act of March third, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-four," as provides for the increase of the salaries of the President, Vice-President, and all other officers therein named, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the salaries and compensation of all said officers and clerks, of every name and description, shall be and remain as fixed by the laws in force at the time of the passage of the act the provisions of which are hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to give or revive the franking privilege: And provided further, That this repeal, so far as it relates to the salary of the President, shall not take effect until the fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, on and after which date said repeal, as to the salary of said officer, shall have full force and effect, and as to all other officers, from and after the taking effect of this act.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I give notice now that when the bill shall come up for further consideration I shall move to amend the concluding part of it so as to have it take effect on all officers, except the President, on the third day of the month next after the bill shall have passed, and that for the convenience of the accounting officers.

Mr. President, at a convention of Iowa republicans, on the 26th of June last, a convention of the best and most intelligent citizens of that Commonwealth, and representing almost every county thereof, it was unanimously resolved and demanded that the provisions of the late act of Congress, by which the salaries were increased, shall be promptly and unconditionally repealed. Bowing to this mandate, I introduced, the first moment the business of the Senate would allow, this bill, and now ask its early and favorable consideration. Not less than one hundred conventions—indeed, all that were held—in our several representative and senatorial districts, of the same party, passed like resolves, and in this again I have my warrant for this measure. State, county, and district conventions held by those of every name opposed to the republican organization in Iowa, without dissent, made the same demand, in language alike unequivocal; and in this, also, I find the demand for the proposed repeal. Other States in the Northwest and elsewhere, in their conventions, of all parties, have caught up the demand, and once more I am supported in the measure before the Senate. But to avoid all chance for misconstruction, and lest any one might conclude that these demands control my action, I hasten to say that, in their letter and spirit and in all their length and scope, they have my unqualified and unconditional approval, and therefore I am prepared to stand by and indorse this repeal.

Such repeal is justified on the ground of policy, and more from the higher and, if possible, more defensible stand-point and platform of principle; and without intending to thus divide the proposition, I shall endeavor to demonstrate its truth.

Mr. President, the last national republican convention pledged the party—as all preceding ones had—to the strictest economy in the administration of public affairs. Upon this pledge, with others, the battle was fought. The victory was ours by an overwhelming majority of the honest people of this nation, and General Grant became President for a second term. The people, I am bound to conclude, believed what we said, and in view of our past record they were justified in so doing.

At the close of the war we found ourselves oppressed by a debt counted not by millions alone, but by billions. Added to this were millions more unadjusted—in the shape of bounties, claims for cotton and property destroyed, and in numberless other forms—which, since that time, have been constantly drawing upon the Treasury and adding to the public burdens. During the war taxes were necessarily heavy; the people so understood it; and, with a patriotism and self-abnegation without parallel in the history of this or any other nation, they met these exactions often, if not always, without inquiry into their justice or necessity, feeling that until the nation was saved it were next to sacrilege to possibly endanger the triumph of our arms by what under other circumstances would have been a warranted investigation into the manner of expending the revenues collected in sums so large and yet so freely given. It was felt, too, after the close of the war, as it is yet to some extent, that there were and are still heavy burdens growing out of it which must be met by the laying of taxes in some form; and these, too, the people have ever been and are now ready to meet. Every dollar of honest debt, according to its very terms—whether to bondholder at home or abroad; whether payable in gold or other form; whether to loyal men in the South or the soldier who fought for the nation's life; whether to pay the just claims of foreign citizens growing out of the war, or for opening up the great highways which tended the more certainly to make us one and a united people—I say every dollar of these and all honest debts they expect to pay, yea demand shall be paid. For (be it spoken to the high praise of our people) the man who now, even with all our burdens, would advocate or recommend repudiation would shock the popular conscience, and as certainly meet political death as though he should demand the restoration of slavery, or the payment of the rebel debt rom the national Treasury.

No, Mr. President, the people of this country love their institutions—are ready at all times to abide by and meet honest obligations, and will give freely and ungrudgingly of their means to liquidate such demands. The burden at times, as now and for years past, however, becomes heavy, and they are led to look and think more and more each year, as the tax-gatherer visits them, into the nature of such burdens, and whether in justice and of right they might not be lightened without detriment to the general welfare or injustice to any. They had faith in the great party of the nation, that, as it had been true almost without parallel to its every promise, so now, having full power in every department, it would fulfill its pledge to administer their affairs with economy. They knew and rejoiced that the taxes were being reduced, the debt was being paid, and the interest lien gradually and certainly lessened. They stood by and supported the organization which had emancipated the slave, crushed the rebellion, declared and enforced the civil and political equality of the races, given us the soundest national currency, advanced the commerce of the Republic, reformed the Indian service, increased foreign immigration, expanded our railroad system, and measurably restored property in the South. Of the history of such a party they were not ashamed; to its future they looked, seeing "not whereof to be afraid."

While the party had such a record, and had accomplished so much, they had a right to and did expect that every reasonable effort would be made to reduce the public expenditures; and at this time, when private and public burdens alike approach the maximum of their ability to carry, that there would be no increase, and especially in the direction of the enactment which I seek to repeal.

I have assumed, Mr. President, that the public and private indebtness is heavy; that the people are absolutely weighed down by them. This certainly needs no proof at my hands. It could not well be otherwise when we reflect upon the amount of revenue collected, the local taxes, the spirit of extravagance engendered during and since the war, and, following this, the almost universal indebtedness found in every household, neighborhood, and community. If you doubt this, go to the people as they assemble, whether in political conventions, or for any purpose connected with public affairs, and find from men of all parties the same cry of "hard times," and a demand that their burdens shall be lessened. Go to the granaries of the great West, and see them absolutely bursting with fullness, and yet with prices so little remunerative as to yield but a slight and poor return for the labor of the husbandman. Turn to their demand, coming up from every city, town, village, neighborhood, and hamlet; from the artisan in his shop, the farmer in his field—from all men, however engaged, or wherever located, for cheaper transportation, that their crops and wares, by the exactions of monopolies, shall not be tolled three times their value for getting them to market. Go to your records, and find there the evidence of the liens upon farms, town and city property alike, with a rate of interest eating out the very substance of the people. Turn to the publications of the day, and read there of financial failures, and see the danger threatening us in every direction of a still greater crash in monetary affairs. And these demands and complaints coming, too, from a people not disposed to find fault without cause, nor withhold the payment of taxes for just and proper purposes, but from those who feel that this is their Government, and that there are times when it behooves them to call their servants to a stricter account of their stewardship, and to take a more immediate and active interest and part in the administration of public affairs. For I affirm, Mr. President, that no one can claim with justice that the people of this nation are disposed to complain without cause. Here and there, I know, you will find those who are always dissatisfied, and would be under any circumstances. But the masses of the people are just, are discerning, judge discreetly, submit to burdens uncomplainingly, rarely if ever demanding legislation without good and sufficient cause.

And yet, Mr. President, legislating for such a people, within a twelve month of the time we had made to them this solemn pledge—within a few months after they, by their votes, had given evidence of their confidence in our pledges—and before the oath was administered to those whom they had intrusted with power, in a form as objectionable as could well be conceived, we added to their burdens, by the act at which I strike, not less than from one and a half to two millions of dollars annually; saying nothing, for the present, of its retroactive provisions, which took from the Treasury not less than two to three millions of dollars more for services already rendered, and for which every member, officer, and employé had given a full acquittance months and months before.

I may be told that this is but a small sum. Ah, Mr. President, there is the very danger at which we should take alarm. Sums which twenty, or even ten years since, would have struck the most extravagant as too great, we now vote, too often without thought, on the plea that it is not much; ours is a great and growing country, our resources immense, and this so-called pittance will make but little if any difference! Two millions of money to pay for services rendered, largely going to the members themselves—a sum almost equal to the entire expenses of my State, with its more than twelve hundred thousand people, for two years. Two millions added annually—a sum almost if not quite equal to that paid all the members of the Senate and House for the entire thirty-one years, commencing in 1789 and ending 1820! Two millions annually added to the public burdens when our interest account is enormously large, when claim after claim growing out of the war, and in many instances, honest and sacred debts due and owing our soldiers, remain unadjusted! Two millions added, when we should honestly, earnestly, and faithfully labor to decrease expenditures and taxes at the same time! This sum, too, imposed upon the people in flagrant violation of the pledges, and in utter defiance of the promises of all parties, from the platform and through the press. So much taken from the hard-earnings of a true, confiding, and patriotic people, at a time when they were demanding and expecting economy, and when they were but little able to meet what was before required of them.

But it is said that the increase is but just, and that the people, being ready at all times to pay their representatives and officers good or fair wages, will, when the matter is understood, concur in its justice and submit to the increased burden. And in this connection it is also urged that the amount allowed the members of the two Houses is no more than is necessary to secure the best talent; that on small salaries only rich men will seek these places; that the sum allowed is no more, nor as much, as is paid persons in other positions of even less responsibility, and that good salaries are essential to keep public officers from using their places for money-making by dishonorable or questionable practices.

In my judgment nothing could be more erroneous than most, if not all, the propositions thus stated. I admit that the people are and always have been ready to pay those in their service fair salaries. No man shall go in advance of me in the effort to secure such compensation. That man makes a great mistake who supposes he can commend himself to public favor by voting and working for low or starving salaries. It is the cry of the slimy, cringing demagogue—the meanest of all earthly reptiles—and never has found and never will find a response in the hearts of honest, thoughtful men anywhere. The people expect and want to pay all that is reasonably necessary to secure the most efficient and faithful public servants. I am sure I want to do this, and did I believe the act increasing salaries was essential to this end, I should have the utmost confidence that it would in due time meet the cordial approval of the people, and not all the conventions nor all the papers in the land could induce me to vote or work for a reduction.

But I do not believe this, and hence favor this repeal. It is a great and fatal mistake to suppose that as you increase salaries you secure thereby more faithful officers. The proposition gives unwarranted motive power to money or the love of it, and underrates those noble springs to human action which now and at all times bring to the fore-front men of generous and manly natures who, impelled by rivalry and ambition, have given to the world better deeds and thoughts than the influence of all the money coined in mints or held in the coffers, public or private, of the world. I should regret exceedingly to believe that men, fitted for a place in this body, were deterred from seeking the same because the salary was a few hundred, or thousand even, below what they could make as bank or railroad presidents, or superintendents of some insurance or steamship interest, or might be able to realize by speculation in stocks, lands, or otherwise. Men who thus reason would present the strongest argument of their unfitness for a place so important and dignified, and the country should and would have cause to rejoice that the salaries were kept so low as to save the people from their presence in places of official trust. The question is not what can some men make in other pursuits, nor what they earn in the professions or other vocations, but what is a fair compensation, considering the nature of the employment, the character of our Government, and the men who seek or should seek these places. There are doubtless those who, if the salaries were fixed at $15,000 or $20,000 instead of $5,000 or $7,500, would suffer pecuniarily by giving up their private business and accepting places here. Must we increase the compensation to meet such cases? Are the men who receive such large sums the most desirable for public places or the safest legislators? As a rule, where do you find those of the rarest culture—those whose sympathies and views are apt to accord with that simplicity which our fathers taught, and which needs to be cultivated rather than that shoddy sentiment which enthrones money as alone worthy man's passionate ambition? This Government was not made, nor these bodies organized, to aggrandize and make wealthy those holding places here.

We are to look to the welfare, the prosperity, and higher elevation of the people, not the enriching of their servants that they may live in "barbaric splendor," and be able to cultivate that vulgar taste for show, tinsel, and gaudy nothingness which, in officials high or low, is a reproach to our institutions and at war with the best interests of the age and the highest welfare of the nation. No, sir; the man who, seeking a place here, would decline it because the salary was $5,000 or $6,000 instead of $7,500 would most likely be unfit for it, and the country would probably lose but little by being deprived of his invaluable services. Talk to me about its being necessary to increase salaries, or rich men alone will come to this body. I say it without intending to disparage any one or underrate the value of any one's services, fully recognizing and admitting how faithfully and laboriously the great majority here, in all the public positions, work and give their time to the public service; and yet I hesitate not to say that $5,000 is more than an average of what members of either House received annually before coming to Congress. It is more than one-half of our predecessors made at home; more than half those here made. Increase the salaries and you invite rich men and deter poor men. If the salary was $20,000 not one poor man, or man of moderate means, in twenty would be found here. Put up your salaries and rich men use their means to secure the places for money's sake, and thus the inducement increases for men to buy their way into place and power. Disgraceful enough have been the scenes enacted at some of our State capitols in the election of Senators. Already we have had too many instances of money attempting to throttle and defeat brains and gallant services in field and forum, defying the popular verdict and all motives of right or principle. I beg that we shall not so legislate as to give food to this spirit. And yet we shall certainly do so if we insist that the salaries shall be so high as that the most extravagant can be supported therefrom, or the man of means encouraged thereby to still further depart from the true idea of republican economy and simplicity.

But higher salaries, it is insisted, are necessary to keep public officials above the danger of temptation, or the probability of making money by corrupt or questionable practices. If this is true, then God pity the people, their servants, and the country. But it is not true, and I here denounce it as a foul slander on the intelligence and integrity of the people and their officers, as a base avowal of the weakness of our unequaled institutions. I do not believe the increase of salaries is to either make honest men or keep them in honest paths.

A few hundreds or thousands added to his income will not make an honest man of the rogue, nor can you lead the men of integrity away from the path of rectitude by withholding like sums. It is not thus that dishonest men are restrained, nor honest ones placed in the way of temptation. You may place a rogue on all the platforms, proclaiming honesty, and have from him all the promises of fidelity to duty, and neither can make him honest or true. You may load down your official, inclined to the use of disreputable means in accomplishing his ends, with all the gold of your Treasury, and you cannot thereby anchor him to duty, nor have the faintest guarantee that he would not yield to the first temptation.

Increase your salaries, and if you do not encourage extravagance and thereby increase the chances for dishonesty, you at least will not thereby plate men with virtue nor a better panoplied integrity. The man of true moral courage, of that integrity which can stand unmoved in sunshine and storm alike, never stops to inquire, in the discharge of duty, whether his salary is above or below the proper standard, and the voice of the tempter never comes near his home or his person.

With all the talk of dishonest and corrupt practices in and about this Capitol and city, I am satisfied there is but little foundation for any of it; and I am equally certain that more men kill themselves in this way than get killed by others. They wait to be tempted, and it does not need low salaries to put them in the way.

No, no, Mr. President; adopting a sentiment somewhere found—and where I do not now remember, nor is it material—what the country wants, here and everywhere, is men; men who are not for sale, sound from center to circumference, true to the heart's core; who neither flag nor flinch, nor brag nor run; who tell the truth, and look the world and the devil right in the eye; who have courage without whistling to bring it, and joy without shouting to obtain it; in whom the current of everlasting life runs still and smooth and strong; who eat what they have earned, wear what they have paid for; who are not ashamed to do what they have promised; whose honesty courses through their veins and becomes a part of their very life and existence. With such a man high or low salaries will make but little difference. If not thus morally and mentally clothed, you had probably as well be engaged in something else as in the missionary work of giving him high salaries to keep him out of temptation. If he would pray honestly, when asking not to be led into temptation he would supplement it with the prayer that his income might not be increased, lest thereby his wants and the pitfalls and snares around him be multiplied.

Large salaries may not increase the tendency to dishonesty; they certainly will not to honesty. We have been increasing salaries for years and years and from time to time. Are our officials any better, any more honest, any more faithful? Do we have any fewer instances of frauds, peculations, embezzlements, defalcations? Is it a rarer thing now than formerly to hear of dishonesty on the part of the public officials?

These questions I do not answer. I leave you and the country to determine. The world knows, you know, all experience, the plainest principles of reason and common sense, all tell us that you cannot keep men from temptation by increasing the means and opportunity for extravgance or habits of life in conflict with the theory of our Government.

Mr. President, the measure before the Senate proposes the repeal of all the provisions of the act of March 3, 1873, (ch. 101,) which increase the salaries. It provides, as to the President's salary, that the repeal shall not take effect until the 4th of March, 1877; and this because the Constitution declares that his compensation "shall neither be increased nor diminished during the term for which he shall have been elected." In view of the burdens of the people, the nature of our institutions, and the relative rights and responsibilities of the masses and their servants, I am prepared to stand by this prospective repeal or reduction. And yet, I confess, if the matter stood alone, I should be less inclined to oppose a reasonable increase in this instance than in the case of some of the other offices named. And it may be that in several other cases the salaries ought to be increased. I am ready to deal justly and liberally in all these matters. And it may be that, under the Constitution, we cannot change the salaries provided for the Supreme Court judges. The question is, perhaps, not free from doubt. I withhold any expression of opinion on this point, both because I prefer the whole matter shall, if deemed necessary, go to the appropriate committee, where the entire subject of their salaries and others' can and will be carefully considered, and because I am inclined to give to these faithful public servants, in whose integrity, ability, and fidelity so much of the highest interests of the nation is involved, the most liberal salaries. If I err anywhere, I would here, and on the side of the most liberal compensation. All these matters, however the arrangement of the several salaries, if increase is required in any case, I would, as I have said, prefer to adjust in a bill for that single object, deeming it best now to place the whole matter, as far as we can, precisely where it stood prior to the increase.

I am not, Mr. President, wedded by any means to the language or precise terms of this bill. I care more for results than I do for terms or words. After giving the subject my best thought, however, and in view of the popular demand, it seems to me that to simply retrace our steps at the earliest practicable moment is the easiest and safest escape from what I esteem a most unfortunate, if not fatal, mistake and blunder.

To those who agree with me in the propriety of such repeal there need, under this bill, be no difference as to what disposition shall be made of the so-called "back pay" still remaining in the Treasury. Nor do I undertake to interfere with the excess over the former salary drawn thus far for the present Congress. Nor, again, do I propose to discuss whether it were more equitable to give traveling expenses than mileage. All these matters and others I deemed it more advisable to leave to after legislation, (ready, though I am, to go as far as any one in closing the doors of the Treasury against further claim, and to do in every way what is just to the people on this subject,) aiming now, by this one act, to place all such salaries as we can precisely as they stood before. This is plain.

The proposition has but two sides. Every Senator must be for or against it. Every amendment can only tend to delay the passage of the bill. I deem it the clearest policy that every friend of repeal shall so understand and so act as to prevent delay. It would, in my judgment, be a grand compliment to the sober and rightful demand of those who have a right to ask it to pass this act promptly and speedily. These salaries were increased by a method the most vicious, and, as it seems to me, the least defensible—put into an appropriation bill during the last hours of the session, when defeat involved the alternative of an extra session, or the stopping the wheels of Government—placing the President where he must approve or veto, with the absolute certainty that he could be condemned and censured whatever his action—a position so unjust as to call, I doubt not, for his anomalous recommendation in his recent message that the Executive should be given the power to veto a bill in part, and to approve other parts. I say thus increased, if for no other reason, we should wipe all out, and that as promptly and with as little show of unwillingness as possible. This done, we can carefully, and after examining the whole field, in a bill directed to that single purpose, do what may seem right and proper on this subject. All the salaries, I doubt not, need revising. Scores of men, here and elsewhere, in my judgment, are in office who have next to nothing to do—those who do not work a month in a year, and yet are paid full salaries. So, too, there are in many instances gross irregularities which should and must be corrected. In due time, and speedily too, the knife must be applied unsparingly and a needed reform brought about in the whole civil list. For the present, however, let us take the one step of repealing this law, and then as promptly to the other good work.

But this repeal, and the propriety of looking well and with the utmost care to the lessening of the public burdens, and the adjustment of salaries upon a scale in consonance with the theory of our Government, the real wants of the people, and their demands, in addition to what I have already said, I now finally urge because of what I regard as the vital principle involved in our action.

Mr. President, it is said that individuals die of old age; nations never, but always from disease. The history of the world attests the truth of this aphorism. The true and faithful public servant will look well and with anxious care to threatened diseases or dangers. He is unmindful of duty if he forgets that this is a republican Government—the people's government; that he should labor for their welfare; should seek their highest interest and prosperity, not his own advancement or aggrandizement. In this country every man is a component part of the Government, taking by his voice, vote, and influence a part in its administration. The peace, quiet, and safety of the nation depend very largely, if not entirely, upon the people and their confidence in and respect for those making and executing the laws, and the laws themselves. The true and real life of a nation is the political idea or ideas upon which it is based.

Our recent struggle was a war, not of races or men, but of ideas. In this view it was brought to every man's fireside. In the shock of battle, while names, more or less, might be struck from the more than thirty-million roll, and while households and the nation mourned the loss, the greater danger was that, in the conflict and battle of ideas, as with mildew, the nation might be blasted with all its millions. Hence I say it was brought to the fireside of all, and the contest was waged for the mastery of every heart. Those thus influenced were a constituent part of the nation, and the nation lived or died in the decision of every one. As then, so now, and so it will be for all time. If the moral and affectional life of the people is led in the right direction; if they are imbued strongly and honestly with the central idea of truth, justice, and right; if they love their country, all will be well; the nation shall live. If this life is borne out in the opposite direction; if the people lose confidence in those administering their affairs; if they shall believe that we seek our own personal ends, and not their welfare, then comes gradually, but certainly, moral, political death unto the hearts of all, and this is but the precursor of physical national death. The nation lives or dies, I repeat, in the feelings, sentiments, or ideas of the people. Presidents, cabinets, armies, navies, legislators, become their servants, and they speak with a power before which the nations stand in awe.

Along the centuries there cometh the history that in the ruder ages many German rulers and potentates had a friendly conference, touching the interests of all; and, among other things, recounted the elements of the strength and power of each. One pointed proudly to his large military force; another to his populous cities; another to the great wealth of his people; until finally an aged ruler said, "I have none of all these; but wherever I may chance in all my dominions, whether in mountain or vale, among those the most refined or uncultured, in castle or in hut, I can recline in sleep with perfect assurance that no one would harm, and that all would give their lives for my protection." The conference then, with one accord, agreed that his was the strongest government, for he had the assured love and affection of his subjects.

This we must have in this free land, Mr. President, if we would have strength—that to which the nation can turn with confidence in time of peril or danger. Do nothing, then, to forfeit this confidence. I am no alarmist; far from it; but the next great contest, in my judgment, in this country is to be between capital and labor. Unless the servants of the people act wisely, it may be precipitated. It behooves us to do nothing which shall hasten the threatened danger. When I see, as I have, not once but scores of times, from five to twenty thousand persons within the last year, those of the quiet, thoughtful, intelligent, laboring classes—farmers and mechanics—in patient council, carrying numberless banners, demanding that "Capital and labor must be equalized;" that "The workingmen who support our Government shall be respected;" that "The laborer must have his rights;" "Our motto is peaceful reformation;" "The Government and its institutions for the people, not the people for them;" "Farmers to the front, politicians take back seats;" and like inscriptions, I am led to ask, Why all this, if there is no just ground of complaint upon the part of the people? And I also am forced to inquire whether it is not incumbent upon us to seek for the cause of this feeling and the remedy for its removal.

Many things may have led to it. Prominent among them is the conviction that capital, so largely concentrated in the hands of individuals and large corporations, is being used to oppress labor and control, too often, legislation—if, indeed, it is not defiant of legislation. But equally, if not more prominent—and with this I have alone to do at present—is the feeling that those in power use their places too much for their own emolument and aggrandizement, rather than the well-being and prosperity of the people.

No act of the Government, since 1800, has been so universally and bitterly condemned as that increasing salaries. All men of all parties, almost without exception where I have met them, join in the cry of disapproval. And it is well said, that as by the Constitution we can fix our own salaries, if we can give one, two, or three thousand "back pay," so we may double these amounts; and if seven thousand five hundred for the future, so we may double that sum or more, and that there is hence no remedy save in the hands of the people. When the masses of our people labor through winter's cold and summer's heat with brain and muscle, faithfully, honestly, and soberly, and esteem themselves fortunate if they receive as much in the twelve months as the President does in four days or a week—as a Cabinet officer does in twenty days, or we for one month—it is not strange if, in this republican Government, they should ask if this is right or according to the fitness of things. As I have said, they will most cheerfully pay fair and good salaries; but when you make the difference so great you widen the breach, and no argument or statistics can satisfy them that such legislation is just or demanded. They cannot and will not have that love for the Government, that respect for its laws, nor that confidence in those making them, which the welfare of the nation demands, when they find that, while they are oppressed with debt, while the Government is groaning under its burdens, while all parties have pledged economy, salaries are increased beyond precedent, and the difference between the remuneration of the man of labor and his ever so faithful representative is made greater and still greater.

And so I say, therefore, aside from any ground of mere party or other policy, as a matter of principle, and for the welfare and quiet of the country, breaking away from the argument of the effect of such legislation upon the Treasury, and that we may inspire the people with confidence in the integrity of our motives and a desire to so legislate as to give them good laws and draw them closer and still closer to their Government and its institutions—I say, for these higher reasons we ought to retrace our steps, and place the salaries substantially where they were before the increase.

I say nothing of the so-called "back pay." I have nothing to do with the motives of any one. I acceed to all equal honesty, and a like desire to serve the public. With reference to it I have pursued my own course, whatever others might or would do. My conscience in this and like matters is my own guide, not a lash to scourge others to duty, nor a weapon to stimulate them to what I may esteem correct action. I determined never to touch such "back pay," and this resolve I have kept and shall keep. It never occurred to me, I confess, that in so acting I was violating the Constitution, nor that I was thereby reflecting upon the conduct of others. They take their course, as I hope and believe, honestly. I take mine, as I trust, influenced by motives equally honest. This "back pay" I cannot reach, and therefore I say nothing about it. If I could reach it I would. I propose to act for the future. In doing so I call upon those speaking for the great republican party of this nation to be true to their pledges; to give heed to the popular demand; to retrace their steps; to correct this great mistake promptly and speedily, and thus once more satisfy the people that we are true to our professions and can be intrusted with the grave responsibilities devolving upon the representatives of a people so devoted to right and so tenacious of principle.

We must not, my friends, be indifferent to passing events. The country and the world may be justly congratulated that we have accomplished so much for humanity and free government. No party is so prosperous—has made so grand a record. Let us not allow it to remain marred now by this one hasty and inconsiderate act. We can well and consistently retrace our steps. And though the responsibility for this increase of salaries rests as largely, if not more, with our opponents than with us, let it be ours, the opportunity being presented, to meet the popular demand and hasten to do right.

Doing thus, let us also open up the avenues of trade by giving as speedily and securely as possible cheaper transportation for the numerous products of the grand and growing West. Let us not treat this demand for cheaper transportation as a mere unmeaning clamor, (as I fear too many are ready to do,) but one backed by the enlightened judgment and absolute and patent necessities and wants of a people as true, patriotic, and law-abiding as any found in all this good land. Let us not, from a morbid anxiety, fed and encouraged by bondholders and stock speculators, to return to specie payments, fail to give the people a homogeneous currency, and enough for their wants in view of the increase of our wealth, population, and trade; but rather let us, furnishing, as we have undertaken to do, the people a currency, give them what their necessities demand, placing it upon such an elastic basis as will secure us against the failure of corporations or the machinations of gamblers in stocks, whatever their name or object. I say let us look to these things and promptly meet the demand, furnishing the needed remedy, and then the cloud threatening the grand party of peace, progress, and reform shall pass away, and we shall have and deserve the confidence of the thinking and reliable people of this nation in the future as we have had in the past. And let all men of all parties remember that not our own personal interests are to be consulted, but the welfare and happiness, the glory and prosperity of the country, and that we should so act as to deserve the confidence of the people and best secure their love for the laws and our institutions. In proportion as we do this we shall strengthen the cords of the Union, hold the people to their fealty to the Government, and if decay shall come, let it be that of grand and unexampled old age, and not of festering, corroding, and corrupting disease.

Asking the pardon of the Senate for talking so long, expressing my humble thanks for attention so unexpected and undeserved, I now move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That reference will be made if there be no objection.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORTON. If there is no other business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at two o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 8, 1873.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing. The morning hour begins at nine minutes after twelve o'clock.

RICHARD T. MORSELL.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 234) for the relief of Richard T. Morsell, of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REUEL B. FULLER.

Mr. FRYE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 235) for the relief of Reuel B. Fuller, of Wilton, Maine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTIES.

Mr. FRYE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 236) in relation to bounties to nine-months volunteers and their heirs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

D. B. ALLEN & CO.

Mr. FRYE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 237) to provide for the payment of D. B. Allen & Co. for services in carrying the United States mails; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM WEBSTER.

Mr. FRYE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 238) for the relief of William Webster; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 239) for the relief of William Webster; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN C. FARNAM.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 240) granting a pension to John C. Farnam; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. POLAND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 241) to provide for the distribution of the money received under the Geneva award; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. POLAND also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 242) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," passed March 2, 1867; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS BY THE BOSTON FIRE.

Mr. PIERCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 243) to remit the duties upon certain goods destroyed by fire at the late conflagration in the city of Boston; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DEPOSITS IN SAVINGS-BANKS.

Mr. EAMES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 244) to repeal the tax imposed upon deposits in savings-banks and institutions for saving; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

PATENTS AND COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. KELLOGG introduced a bill (H. R. No. 245) explanatory of section 25 of an act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

BREAKWATER AT MILFORD, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. KELLOGG also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 246) providing for a breakwater at Milford, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF HOUSATONIC RIVER, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. KELLOGG also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 247) for continuing the improvement of the Housatonic River, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RAILROAD.

Mr. STARKWEATHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 248) granting the approval and sanction of Congress to the termini and route of the Anacostia and Potomac Railroad Company, and to regulate its construction and operation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

G. L. MAYNARD AND E. B. GRISWOLD.

Mr. DUELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 249) for the relief of George L. Maynard and Edward B. Griswold; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. DUELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 250) to repeal an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," and all acts amendatory thereof; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSMISSION OF NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS.

Mr. DUELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 251) to provide for the free transmission by mail of newspapers and periodicals; which was a read first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SYRACUES, NEW YORK.

Mr. DUELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 252) to authorize the erection of a Government building in the city of Syracuse, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS HILLHOUSE.

Mr. MERRIAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 253) for the relief of Thomas Hillhouse, assistant treasurer of the United States in New York City; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. BASS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 254) relative to bounties of New York volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN BURNS.

Mr. BASS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of John Burns; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EDGAR L. SPENCER.

Mr. BASS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Edgar L. Spencer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

H. D. HASKINS.

Mr. LANSING introduced a bill (H. R. No. 257) for the relief of H. D. Haskins, late lieutenant Company G, One hundred and tenth Regiment New York Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JERUSHA A. GOODRICH.

Mr. McDOUGALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 258) granting a pension to Jerusha A. Goodrich; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. GLOVER.

Mr. WILBER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 259) for the relief of James W. Glover, postmaster at Oxford, in the State of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. No. 260) for the resumption of specie payments; which was read a first and second time, and, with a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York on the same subject, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ALONZO SNYDER.

Mr. LAMPORT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 261) for the relief of Alonzo Snyder, of Livingston County, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

STAMP DUTY ON MATCHES.

Mr. MYERS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 262) to repeal the stamp duty or tax on matches; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

FRENCH SPOLIATIONS.

Mr. MYERS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 263) to provide for the adjustment and satisfaction of claims of American citizens for spoliations by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD YOUNG.

Mr. MYERS also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 14) giving the consent of Congress to the acceptance by Edward Young of a present from the Emperor of Russia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. STORM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 264) amendatory of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812," approved February 14, 1871; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

TWELFTH STREET RAILWAY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEGLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 265) to incorporate the Twelfth Street and South Washington Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MARTHA A. BOOTH.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 266) for the relief of Martha A. Booth; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

J. B. CORNELL AND OTHERS.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 267) for the relief of J. B. Cornell and others; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY MILLWARD.

Mr. NEGLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 268) for the relief of Henry Millward; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BIERY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 269) to amend an act entitled "An act to abolish the franking privilege," approved January 31, 1873, so as to allow the free transmission by mail of newspapers and periodicals, and bills and receipts for the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ISRAEL YOUNT.

Mr. CESSNA introduced a bill (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of Israel Yount; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANKS AND CURRENCY.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 271) to strengthen the national banks and to give elasticity to the currency; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

Mr. ALBRIGHT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 272) relating to new appointments and promotions in certain departments of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUSAN B. LEIDY.

Mr. ALBRIGHT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 273) granting a pension to Susan B. Leidy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON AND POINT LOOKOUT RAILROAD.

Mr. ALBERT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 274) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize the Washington and Point Lookout Railroad Company to extend a railroad within the District of Columbia," approved January 22, 1873; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

Mr. O'BRIEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 275) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LYNCHBURGH, VIRGINIA.

Mr. WHITEHEAD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 276) to provide for a building for the use of the post-office, United States district court, and internal-revenue offices at Lynchburgh, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 277) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint superintendents, keepers, and surfmen for the life-saving stations upon the coasts of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Virginia, and North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTIONS.

Mr. WADDELL presented resolutions of the North Carolina Legislature in regard to the mode of collecting internal revenue by United States officers; which were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES GREEN.

Mr. HUNTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 278) for the relief of James Green, of Alexandria, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING AT GREENVILLE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. WALLACE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 279) authorizing the erection of a Government building at Greenville, South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ANN CRANE.

Mr. WALLACE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 280) granting a pension to Ann Crane; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CURRENCY.

Mr. RANSIER presented a concurrent resolution of the State of South Carolina, asking for the passage of an act by Congress authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to issue to national banks circulating notes or currency equal to 90 per cent. of the current market value of the United States bonds transferred and delivered by such national banks; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN M. WALKER, ETC.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 281) for the relief of John M. Walker, F. W. Robert, and Joseph Elsas, of the State of Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL AMNESTY.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 282) providing for general amnesty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REPAIRS OF CITADEL IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. ELLIOTT presented a resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina, asking an appropriation for repairs of citadel occupied by United States troops; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL CONTRACTORS' CLAIMS.

Mr. BLOUNT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 283) to pay the claims of certain mail contractors in Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

Mr. FREEMAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 284) to repeal an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867, and all acts amendatory thereof; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

Mr. FREEMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 285) to provide for the erection of suitable buildings for the use of the United States courts, post-office, custom-house, and internal-revenue offices at Atlanta, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

REFUNDING OF PROCEEDS OF COTTON.

Mr. HAYS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 286) to refund the owners the proceeds of cotton unlawfully seized after the termination of the late war between the States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. SLOSS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 287) making appropriations for the improvement of the Tennessee River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH D. M'CLUSKEY.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 288) for the relief of Joseph D. McCluskey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF HENRY FULENWIDER.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 289) for the relief of the heirs of Henry Fulenwider; which was read a first and second time referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM E. HOKE & CO.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of William E. Hoke & Co., of Athens, Limestone County, Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MALE ACADEMY OF ATHENS, ALABAMA.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 291) for the relief of the trustees of the male academy of Athens, Limestone County, in the State of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CYPRUS LODGE OF FLORENCE, ALABAMA.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 292) for the relief of Cyprus Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, at Florence, Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF DECATUR, ALABAMA.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 293) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal church at Decatur, Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOAB BAGLEY.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 294) for the relief of Joab Bagley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CENSUS TAKERS OF 1860.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 295) to authorize the payment of the census takers of 1860; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARY HORTON.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 296) granting a pension to Mary Horton, of Franklin County, Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSALS FOR CARRYING UNITED STATES MAILS.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 297) to provide for the publication of advertisements for proposals to carry United States mails in the newspaper published in the congressional district where the routes are located having the largest circulation in the district; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

COLUMBUS, FAYETTE AND DECATUR RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 298) authorizing the Columbus, Fayette and Decatur Railroad Company of Alabama and Mississippi to enter public lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ALABAMA AND GEORGIA RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 299) granting public lands in the States of Alabama and Georgia to the Alabama and Georgia Railroad Company, to aid in building a railroad from Decatur, Alabama, to Rome, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA.

Mr. RAPIER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 300) to authorize the erection of public buildings at Montgomery, in the State of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

WIDOW AND CHILDREN OF M. Y. JONES.

Mr. RAPIER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 301) for the relief of the widow and children of M. Y. Jones, late collector of customs for the port of Wilmington, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO TERRITORY.

Mr. McKEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 302) to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORY OF UTAH.

Mr. McKEE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 303) concerning the execution of the laws in the Territory of Utah; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

SHIP-CANAL IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. SYPHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 304) to provide for the construction of a ship-canal near port Saint Philip, in the State of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL-STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Mr. SYPHER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 305) authorizing mail-steamship service in the Gulf of Mexico between the port of New Orleans, Louisiana, and certain ports in the Republic of Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES MORGAN.

Mr. SYPHER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 306) for the relief of Charles Morgan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RAPHAEL M. MILLER.

Mr. SHELDON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 307) for the relief of Raphael M. Miller; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES CLINTON.

Mr. MOREY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 308) for the relief of Charles Clinton, late assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FREE COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. MOREY also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, asking the Congress of the United States to pass an act appropriating the proceeds of the public lands hereafter sold for the support of free common schools; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

FORT SAINT PHILIP CANAL.

Mr. MOREY also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, requesting the Representatives in Congress from that State to use their influence to secure an appropriation to construct the Fort Saint Philip Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

G. W. M'CLUNG.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 309) for the relief of G. W. McClung, of Butler County, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM E. CHILDS.

Mr. FOSTER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 310) for the relief of William E. Childs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM G. M'INTYRE.

Mr. FOSTER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 311) for the relief of William G. McIntyre; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL NATIONAL BANK NOTES.

Mr. MONROE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 312) to provide $25,000,000 of additional bank notes for circulation in those States and Territories which have less than their proper proportion under existing laws; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

MORGAN RAID IN OHIO.

Mr. BUNDY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 313) to provide for the payment to the State of Ohio of $552,590.02, to pay claims for property taken, used, or destroyed during the Morgan raid through said State in July, 1863; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

B. F. WEST & CO.

Mr. DANFORD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 314) to reimburse B. F. West & Co., of Martin's Valley, Ohio, for internal-revenue stamps stolen from the post-office at Cambridge, Ohio, on the night of May 4, 1871; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TICE METERS.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 315) for the relief of distillers of spirits, by the repayment of moneys expended or deposited by them for Tice meters with United States internal revenue officers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS AND AGENTS.

Mr. BECK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 316) to regulate the arrears and compensation of agents and attorneys prosecuting claims or demands before Congress or the Executive Departments of the Government, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC CREDIT.

Mr. BECK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 317) to repeal an act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March, 1869; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN S. WADSWORTH AND OTHERS.

Mr. ARTHUR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 318) to refund to John S. Wadsworth and others, of Pendleton County, Kentucky, $300 each, with interest thereon from the 30th day of July, 1864, on account of the same having been illegally collected from them under color of commutation money, &c.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

COVINGTON, KENTUCKY.

Mr. ARTHUR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 319) to establish a port of entry and delivery at the city of Covington, in the sixth congressional district in the State of Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF STAMP ACTS.

Mr. ARTHUR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 320) for the repeal of all acts creating and imposing stamp duties or tax upon bank checks, drafts, or orders for the payment of money; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

Mr. ARTHUR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 321) for the repeal of an act entitled "An act to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this Union, and for other purposes," approved May 31, 1870; also an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved May 31, 1870, entitled 'An act to enforce the rights of the citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this country, and for other purposes,'" approved February 28, 1871; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. ARTHUR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 322) for the repeal of the first, second, third, fifth, and sixth sections of an act entitled "An act to enforce the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1871; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF ROBERT ISHERWOOD.

Mr. MILLIKEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 323) for the relief of the heirs of Robert Isherwood, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF THE TAX ON LEAF-TOBACCO.

Mr. CROSSLAND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 324) to repeal all laws imposing a tax on retail dealers in leaf-tobacco; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

C. R. COFFEY.

Mr. DURHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 325) making an appropriation to C. R. Coffey, of Russell County, Kentucky, for goods taken from him by Union soldiers in 1862; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL SUDDOUTH.

Mr. DURHAM also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 326) granting a pension to Daniel Suddouth, of Adair County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF SMITH SHOALS, CUMBERLAND RIVER.

Mr. DURHAM also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 327) making an appropriation for the improvement of Smith Shoals, Cumberland River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LEAF-TOBACCO.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 328) to exempt $50 worth of leaf-tobacco in the hands of all producers without taking out a license therefor or paying a tax; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS HORD.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 329) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Hord, deceased, of Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. PENELOPE C. BROWN.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 330) granting a pension to Mrs. Penelope C. Brown, of Tennessee, widow of Stephen C. Brown, late a private in Company C, Eighth Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. NANCY BROOKS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 331) granting a pension to Nancy Brooks, of Tennessee, widow of Stephen P. Brooks, late a private in Company F, Fourth Tennessee Infantry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TAXES ON DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 332) to repeal all taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to provide for the deficiency in the revenue occasioned thereby; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON TOBACCO.

Mr. WHITTHORNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 333) to modify the tax upon tobacco; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY CONTRACTORS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. WHITTHORNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 334) to pay the claims of certain military contractors in Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARTHA L. BRIXEY.

Mr. CRUTCHFIELD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 335) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha L. Brixey, of Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

J. GEORGE HARRIS.

Mr. MAYNARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 336) for the relief of J. George Harris; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. MAYNARD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 337) for the relief of the State of Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LIQUOR SALOON ON CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. PACKARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 338) for the suppression of the liquor saloon on the public grounds at the southeast corner of the Capitol, and the removal of the building now used as such saloon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ABEL M. LEWIS.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 339) for the relief of Abel M. Lewis, of the State of Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTIES TO VOLUNTEERS OF 1861.

Mr. NIBLACK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 340) in relation to bounties to certain soldiers who volunteered in 1861; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION BETWEEN NEW YORK AND CHICAGO.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 341) to provide for permanent and cheap transportation of persons and freight between the cities of New York and Chicago; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT F. WINSLOW.

Mr. FORT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 342) for the relief of Robert F. Winslow; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ANDREW DILLMAN.

Mr. CORWIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 343) for the relief of Andrew Dillman, of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, QUINCY, ILLINOIS.

Mr. KNAPP introduced a bill (H. R. No. 344) to authorize the construction of a public building at Quincy, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF FROM THE CHARGE OF MUTINY.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 345) to relieve certain persons therein named, late members of Company K, Fifty-eighth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from the charge of mutiny; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 346) to amend section 6 of an act approved March 3, 1869, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1870, and for other purposes, and to provide for appointments and promotions in the Ordnance Department;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ILLINOIS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. CLEMENTS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 347) to divide the State of Illinois into three judicial districts, and to provide for holding courts therein; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

VICTOR MYLIUS.

Mr. MORRISON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 348) for the relief of Victor Mylius, of Macoupin County, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. MORRISON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 349) for the improvement of the Mississippi River and harbors between the mouth of the Missouri and Illinois Rivers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ABNER Y. ELLIS.

Mr. MORRISON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 350) for the relief of Abner Y. Ellis, of Madison County, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ILLINOIS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. BURCHARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 351) to divide the State of Illinois into three judicial districts, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

COLONEL E. M'CARTY.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 352) for the relief of Colonel E. McCarty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF THE CITIZENS OF MISSOURI.

Mr. COMINGO introduced a bill (H. R. No. 353) for the relief of certain citizens of the counties of Jackson, Cass, Bates, and Vernon, in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Mr. COMINGO also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 354) providing for the construction of a custom-house, post-office, and other Government offices at Kansas City, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS OF LOYAL CITIZENS OF MISSOURI.

Mr. COMINGO also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 355) referring certain claims of loyal citizens of the State of Missouri to the Court of Claims of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land-Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LAND TITLES IN MISSOURI.

Mr. HATCH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 356) to confirm certain land titles in the State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS B. WALLACE.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 357) for the relief of Thomas B. Wallace, of Lexington, in the State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTIES.

Mr. STONE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 358) in relation to bounties; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WAR OF 1812.

Mr. GLOVER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 359) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and to the widows of deceased soldiers," approved February 14, 1871; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

OLIVER C. DENSLOW.

Mr. HYDE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 360) granting a pension to Oliver C. Denslow; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LOUIS BENECKE.

Mr. HYDE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 361) for the relief of Louis Benecke; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING AT JEFFERSON, MISSOURI.

Mr. CRITTENDEN intr duced a bill (H. R. No. 362) making an appropriation for a Government building to be used for a court-house and post-office at the city of Jefferson, in the State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

LUCIUS A. ROUNTREE.

Mr. HAVENS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 363) for the relief of Lucius A. Rountree; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES A. M'CULLAH.

Mr. HAVENS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 364) for the relief of James A. McCullah, late collector of the fifth district of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT SUITS.

Mr. HAVENS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 365) to amend an act entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to allow the United States to prosecute appeals and writs of error without giving security,' and for other purposes," approved July 27, 1868; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

HUGH WALLACE.

Mr. HAVENS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 366) granting a pension to Hugh Wallace; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ENTRIES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HAVENS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 367) to legalize entries of public lands under the homestead laws in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES LONG.

Mr. HAVENS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 368) for the relief of James Long; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES F. DRUMWRIGHT.

Mr. HAVENS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 369) granting a pension to Charles F. Drumwright; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SWAMP LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 370) granting certain swamp lands in Holt County, Missouri, to said Holt County for school purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

EXTRA PAY.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 371) granting officers of the Missouri State militia three months' extra pay, which has been given all other commissioned officers of the United States volunteer army by the act approved March 3, 1865; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARKANSAS RIVER.

Mr. SNYDER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 372) giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across the Arkansas River, at Pine Bluff, Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NIAGARA FALLS SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. HUBBELL presented a joint resolution of the State of Michigan, asking Congress to provide for the early construction of the Niagara Falls Ship-Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

MICAIAH WALKER.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 373) for the relief of Micaiah Walker, of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. KEYES.

Mr. WILLARD, of Michigan, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 374) for the relief of George W. Keyes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. SALLY OATLEY.

Mr. BEGOLE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 375) granting a pension to Mrs. Sally Oatley, of Lansing, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TIMOTHY BAKER.

Mr. BEGOLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 376) for the relief of Timothy Baker, of Saint John's, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. FIELD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 377) to authorize the issue of national currency and 3-65 Government bonds, to provide for their interchangeability and stability, and to lessen the interest of the public debt; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

THE SEMINOLE WAR.

Mr. WALLS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 378) for the relief of enlisted men who served for thirty days in the war against Seminole Indians, in the State of Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LAND GRANTS TO FLORIDA.

Mr. WALLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 379) extending the limitation of the grants of land made to the State of Florida in aid of certain lines of railroad; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

TRUSTEES OF BROWN'S INSTITUTE.

Mr. WALLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 380) granting one million acres of the public lands to the trustees of Brown's Institute, in the State of Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA.

Mr. WALLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 381) for the erection of a public building at Jacksonville, in the State of Florida, to be used as a custom-house, post-office, and other Federal offices; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURT-HOUSE AT SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA.

Mr. WALLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 382) donating the building formerly used as United States court-house, at Saint Augustine, Florida, to the State of Florida, for educational purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF APALACHICOLA RIVER.

Mr. WALLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 383) making an appropriation for the improvement of the Apalachicola River, and Moccasin Slough of said river, in the State of Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PENSACOLA HARBOR, FLORIDA.

Mr. WALLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 384) making appropriations for the improvement of the harbor of Pensacola, in the State of Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAINT JOHN'S RIVER, FLORIDA.

Mr. WALLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 385) making an appropriation for the improvement of the Saint John,s River, in the State of Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SUSAN L. GALLOWAY.

Mr. WALLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 386) for the relief of Susan L. Galloway; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TALLAHASSEE.

Mr. PURMAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 387) for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States at Tallahassee, Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSONVILLE.

Mr. PURMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 388) to provide for the erection of a public building at Jacksonville, Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GALVESTON.

Mr. WILLIE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 389) for the construction of a custom-house, bonded warehouse, and internal-revenue offices at Galveston, Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN C. PAINE.

Mr. ORR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 390) granting a pension to Benjamin C. Paine, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

HORSE-RAILROAD AT ROCK ISLAND.

Mr. COTTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 391) to empower the Secretary of War to establish, under certain conditions, a horse-railway upon and over the island of Rock Island, and the bridges erected by the United States connecting the cities of Davenport and Rock Island therewith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTY TO FOURTH IOWA INFANTRY VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. DONNAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 392) to provide for the payment of bounty to the Fourth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed

ROSANNA QUINN.

Mr. DONNAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 393) granting a pension to Rosanna Quinn; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT COLES.

Mr. KASSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 394) for the relief of Robert Coles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR AT PORT WASHINGTON.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 395) for continuing the improvement of the harbor at Port Washington, in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR AT MILWAUKEE.

Mr. MITCHELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 396) for continuing the improvement of the harbor of Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

KENOSHA HARBOR.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 397) to appropriate a sum of money for the improvement of Kenosha Harbor, on Lake Michigan, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RACINE HARBOR.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 398) to appropriate a sum of money for the improvement of the harbor at Racine, on Lake Michigan, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 399) to repeal section 6 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1870, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUSAN SCOFIELD.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 400) for the relief of Susan Scofield, widow of Alfred Scofield, late a first lieutenant in the Third Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM D. WEST.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 401) for the relief of William D. West, late United States consul at Dublin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF AND TAXES.

Mr. CLAYTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 402) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes' and for other purposes," approved March 5, 1873; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF GENERAL JAMES H. CARLETON.

Mr. HOUGHTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 403) granting relief to Eva, Ada, Henry, and Guy Carleton, heirs of General James H. Carleton, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PROOFS IN PRE-EMPTION CASES.

Mr. PAGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 404) relating to proofs in pre-emption cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEADS AND PRE-EMPTIONS.

Mr. PAGE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 405) relating to the entry of homesteads and pre-emptions in California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

DEVELOPMENT OF MINING RESOURCES.

Mr. PAGE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 406) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF GENERAL JAMES H. CARLETON.

Mr. PAGE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 407) for the relief of Eva, Ada, Henry, and Guy Carleton, heirs of General James H. Carleton, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

AGED AND INFIRM PRE-EMPTION SETTLERS.

Mr. PAGE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 408) for the relief of aged or infirm pre-emption settlers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC AGRICULTURAL LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PAGE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 409) to dedicate the public agricultural lands in the State of California to homestead and pre-emption purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. PAGE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 410) for the sale of timber lands in the States of California and Oregon, and Washington Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

GRAZING LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PAGE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 411) relating to grazing lands in the State of California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

GRAIN-SACKS OR BAGGING.

Mr. LUTTRELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 412) repealing the duty on grain-sacks or bagging used for grain, cotton, or wool, and on burlaps and gunny-cloth; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SACRAMENTO AND FEATHER RIVERS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LUTTRELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 413) to appropriate money for the improvement of the navigation of the Sacramento and Feather Rivers, in California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEADS FOR ACTUAL SETTLERS.

Mr. DUNNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 414) to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

FREE POSTAGE ON NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. DUNNELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 415) to exempt from postage newspapers within the county where printed and published; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD SAVAGE.

Mr. DUNNELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 416) to permit Edward Savage, of Minnesota, to enter one quarter-section of the public lands, or any legal subdivision of the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CONSOLIDATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. AVERILL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 417) to authorize the consolidation of the Merchants' National Bank at Hastings with the Merchants' National Bank at Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SAINT ANTHONY, MINNESOTA.

Mr. AVERILL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 418) to authorize the First National Bank of Saint Anthony, Minnesota, to change its location and name; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS B. DE COSTA.

Mr. AVERILL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 419) for the relief of Francis B. DeCosta; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

UPPER AND LOWER SIOUX.

Mr. AVERILL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 420) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to discharge certain obligations of the United States to the creditors of the upper and lower bands of Sioux Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD P. JOHNSON.

Mr. AVERILL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 421) for the relief of Edward P. Johnson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TIMBER ON WESTERN PRAIRIES.

Mr. PHILLIPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 422) to amend an act to encourage the growth of timber on the western prairies, approved March 3, 1873; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF GREAT KANAWHA RIVER.

Mr. HEREFORD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 423) to provide for the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. HEREFORD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 424) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charleston, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

WILDEY LODGE OF ODD-FELLOWS.

Mr. HEREFORD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 425) for the relief of the trustees of Wildey Lodge, Independent Order of Odd-Fellows; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

H. H. M'COLLEY.

Mr. KENDALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 426) for the relief of H. H. McColley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

H. B. DENMAN.

Mr. CROUNSE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 427) for the relief of H. B. Denman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS ON FORT SUMNER MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 428) for the relief of settlers on the abandoned Fort Sumner military reservation in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LAND DISTRICT IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. ELKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 429) creating an additional land district in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. McFADDEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 430) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct a public building at Olympia, in Washington Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

WAGON-ROAD IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. McFADDEN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 431) to provide for the construction of a certain military wagon-road in the Territory of Washington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. McFADDEN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 432) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building in Port Townsend, Washington Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. McFADDEN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 433) to provide for the surveys and estimated cost of removing obstructions to the navigation of the Skagit, Shohomish, and Chehalis Rivers in the Territory of Washington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE EXPENSES OF COLORADO TERRITORY.

Mr. CHAFFEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 434) making an appropriation for the legislative expenses of Colorado Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO.

Mr. CHAFFEE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 435) to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

COURTS IN DAKOTA.

Mr. ARMSTRONG introduced a bill (H. R. No. 436) relating to the several courts in the Territory of Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER BIG SIOUX RIVER.

Mr. ARMSTRONG also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 437) to appropriate money for repairing the Government bridge over the Big Sioux River, between the State of Iowa and the Territory of Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LAND TITLES IN TUCSON, ARIZONA TERRITORY.

Mr. McCORMICK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 438) to quiet the title to land in the city of Tucson, Arizona Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

AFFAIRS IN IDAHO TERRITORY.

Mr. HAILEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 439) to authorize the Secretary of War to construct and operate a telegraph line from Fort Hall, in the Territory of Idaho, to Fort Walla-Walla, in the Territory of Washington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAILEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 440) to amend an act entitled "An act transferring the control of certain territorial penitentiaries to the several Territories in which the same are located," approved January 24, 1873; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAILEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 441) to authorize the Secretary of War to construct a military wagon-road, from Fort Boise to Fort Lapwai, in the Territory of Idaho; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAILEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 442) authorizing the Secretary of War to have a survey and estimate made of the cost of removing obstructions to navigation from Snake River, in the Territory of Idaho; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF STONINGTON HARBOR.

Mr. STARKWEATHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 443) for continuing the improvement of the harbor of Stonington, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF POSTAGE.

Mr. STARKWEATHER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 444) to reduce postage; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, AUBURN, NEW YORK.

Mr. McDOUGALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 445) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Auburn, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN HENRY INMAN.

Mr. BURLEIGH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 446) for the relief and reappointment of Captain Henry Inman, assistant quartermaster of the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LAKE MICHIGAN SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 447) extending the time for the completion of the Green Bay, Sturgeon Bay, and Lake Michigan Ship-Canal, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

FREE NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. SHOEMAKER, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 448) to provide for a free national banking law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SMALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 449) in relation to the franking privilege and free mail matter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

WAR OF 1812.

Mr. KELLOGG introduced a bill (H. R. No. 450) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and to widows of deceased soldiers;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

ROLLIN WHITE.

Mr. E. R. HOAR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 451) for the relief of Rollin White; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF THE BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. SPEER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 452) to repeal an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867, and all supplements thereto; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

M. S. WALL & CO.

Mr. KILLINGER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 453) for the relief of M. S. Wall & Co.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LIEUTENANT PETER A. LANTZ.

Mr. KILLINGER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 454) for the relief of Lieutenant Peter A. Lantz; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES L. HENRY.

Mr. ARCHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 455) for the relief of James L. Henry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL GEORGE E. PICKETT.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 456) to remove the political disabilities of General George E. Pickett, of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 457) to provide for the payment of claims arising in States declared in insurrection; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO THE BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. POTTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 458) to amend section 13 of an act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

EX-PARTE INJUNCTIONS.

Mr. POTTER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 459) to repeal the law authorizing ex-parte injunctions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF IMPORT DUTIES AND INTERNAL TAXES.

Mr. DURHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 460) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1872; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD GALLAHER.

Mr. BELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 461) for the relief of Edward Gallaher; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WILMINGTON, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. WADDELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 462) to provide for a building for the use of the post-office and United States district court at Wilmington, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CHAUNCY M. LOCKWOOD.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 463) for the relief of the heirs of Chauncy M. Lockwood; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS OF LOYAL CITIZENS.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 464) for ascertaining the compensation justly due to loyal citizens of States not declared in insurrection, for private property taken in time of war for public use; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MASSACHUSETTS WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 465) to reimburse the State of Massachusetts for certain expenditures, during the war of the rebellion, for sea-coast defense; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SUFFERERS BY BOSTON FIRE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 466) for the relief of the sufferers by the fire in Boston; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SOUTHERN MARYLAND RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 467) to authorize the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 468) in amendment to an act entitled "An act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts," approved July 27, 1868, and acts in addition to and amendatory thereof, approved March 2, 1867, and July 27, 1868; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RESTORATION TO PENSION-ROLL.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 469) to restore pensioners of the war of 1812, the Mexican war, and other wars, who forfeited their pensions by participation in the late rebellion, to the pension-roll; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to give a notice to the House, to which he asks gentlemen to give attention. As the Chair announced last Congress, there is the amplest opportunity given on every Monday for the reference of all bills. Unless a gentleman can show some very special exigency, the Chair will not feel at liberty to recognize him for the mere reference of a bill at any other time. Asking unanimous consent at other times obstructs the business; and unless some exigency arises which warrants it, the Chair will think that he is not promoting the business of the House by recognizing gentlemen for that purpose. He hopes, also, that gentlemen will be disposed to conform to the rules, and have their bills on Monday and no other day. There are already nearly five hundred bills which have been referred this session.

LIMITATION OF STEAM PRESSURE.

Mr. NEGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to introduce, for consideration at this time, a bill relating to the limitation of steam pressure of vessels used exclusively for towing and carrying freight on the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for information, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read. It proposes to modify the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the better security of life on vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam," &c., approved February 28, 1871, so far as they relate to the limitation of steam pressure of steamboats used exclusively for towing and carrying freight on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, as to substitute for such boats 150 pounds of steam pressure in place of 110 pounds, as provided in said act for the standard pressure upon standard boilers of 42 inches in diameter, and of plates of one-quarter of an inch in thickness; and permits such boats, on the written permit of the supervising inspector of the district in which such boats shall carry on their business, to carry steam above the standard pressure of 110 pounds but not exceeding the standard pressure of 150 pounds to the square inch.

Mr. NEGLEY. I hope there will be no objection to this bill; but I will make a brief statement in explanation. The bill is simply a re-enactment of a law now upon the statute-book.

Mr. McCRARY. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] proposes to make an explanation by unanimous consent. The right to object is reserved.

Mr. NEGLEY. As I was stating, the bill now offered is simply the re-enactment of a law now upon the statute-book, forming provision 9 of the act providing for the construction of bridges over the Mississippi River and its tributaries. There are no objections found in its operation. It meets the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Supervising Inspector-General of Steamboats; and the reason why there was a limitation placed on the bill last year was because there was then pending a similar provision in the act relating to the security of life and property on steamboats, then in a committee of conference in the Senate. That having failed, it was found necessary in the last hours of the session to provide for a removal of the restriction in the act which has just been read. If you do not re-enact this act it will expire by limitation in a few days, and put a stop to the present mode of carrying freight and of towing on the Ohio River, which would be a great disaster to the commerce of that river.

I will state that it is impossible to regulate the steam pressure in the craft now running on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, engaged in towing and carrying freight, in the same manner as upon other vessels propelled by steam. The craft are constructed very lightly, and their machinery is consequently made light, and they are compelled, at certain times, when passing obstructions, and in towing large fleets and when they have to turn up to the shore during the night or during fogs, to put on a higher rate of pressure than is put on by vessels carrying passengers. There has been no casualty to vessels of this class since the passage of this bill that should be any objection to its passage now.

Mr. McCRARY. I understand the gentleman to say that the bill does not change the law as it has been administered during the past year.

Mr. NEGLEY. No, sir; if the gentleman will permit me I will have read a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject.

Mr. McCRARY. I do not care about it; I only wish to inquire what is the necessity of this bill if it does not change the existing law.

Mr. NEGLEY. The law was limited to a certain time, I think the 17th of December.

Mr. POTTER. I understand from the gentleman that the bill he introduces applies only to freight and tow vessels, and not to passenger vessels.

Mr. NEGLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. POTTER. And allows them to carry a pressure of 150 pounds instead of 120.

Mr. NEGLEY. Instead of 110 pounds.

Mr. POTTER. Does it have the approval of the Supervising Inspector-General of Steamboats?

Mr. NEGLEY. It does; and a few moments ago he handed me a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury approving of it.

Mr. POTTER. And he also approves of it himself?

Mr. NEGLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. POTTER. Then I have no objection to make.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] if this is the same provision of law that has been passed at the beginning of each session for the last two years, or whether it is modified?

Mr. NEGLEY. It is not modified in spirit or in letter.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 470) received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. NEGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GENERAL AMNESTY.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am instructed by the Committee on the Rules, acting upon a resolution submitted to them the other day, to report the bill which I send to the desk. It has met the unanimous approval of the committee, and when it has been read, I will, unless some gentleman wishes to ask questions or to make opposition to it, move the previous question.

The bill granting general amnesty and prescribing an oath of office was then read. The first section removes all disabilities imposed and remaining upon any person by virtue of section 3 of article 14 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The second section repeals the act of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," and provides that hereafter any person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States, either in the civil, military, or naval departments of the public service, shall, before entering upon the duties of such office and being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe the oath prescribed by the act of July 11, 1868, entitled "An act prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed."

Mr. MAYNARD. I move the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Would not that admit Jeff. Davis to a seat on this floor?

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then I object to it.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I will inquire of the Speaker whether, under the rule applied by him in the last Congress to the Committee on Printing, the Committee on Rules are authorized to report general legislation at any time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks they are authorized to report merely on the rules at any time; and the Chair doubts very much whether this report would be in order except under a call of the committee. This is legislation, and does not pertain to the rules. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] desires to make the point of order, now is the time to make it.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire simply to have the point of order decided, and then I will waive objection to the consideration of the bill; but I make the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I must insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MAYNARD. Then I move to suspend the rules, so as to allow the committee to report this bill and to pass it. And in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] I tell him frankly that this bill will, if enacted, admit the president of the southern confederacy just as the vice-president has been already admitted, to a seat in either House of Congress, provided the people where he lives shall think proper to send him here. It is general amnesty as recommended by the President; and it also repeals what is called the test oath, substituting for it the modified oath that we have all heard so often.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not object to the bill if it has been considered and reported by a committee.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is reported by the Committee on Rules unanimously.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. All right.

The SPEAKER. The bill would require a two-third vote to pass it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

Mr. COX. Is there any objection to passing it unanimously? The President recommends amnesty; and let us unanimously wind up this foolish business of taking the test oath.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] objects, and that is sufficient.

The question was taken on Mr. MAYNARD'S motion; and on a division there were—ayes 141, noes 29.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill (H. R. No. 472) was passed.

COST OF REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. WOOD. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House, at the earliest practicable period, the cost of refunding the national debt thus far into the 5 per cent. bonds authorized by the acts of Congress approved July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, with a detailed statement of amounts paid on that account, to whom paid, when and where paid, including traveling and other expenses of any person or persons attached to the Treasury Department; and, further, to report whether, in the adjustment of differences of interest between the 6 per cent. bonds redeemed and the 5 per cent. bonds issued in lieu thereof, the Government has received its proper allowance; with a detailed statement of the interest account, giving amounts, dates, and names of parties with and through whom negotiations were made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object, unless the resolution be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WOOD. Then I move to suspend the rules. The resolution simply calls upon the Secretary of the Treasury to report to the House the precise cost of refunding the debt.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think I understand it, but I desire that it shall go to the committee of which the gentleman is a member; and if that committee will report it I will not object to it.

Mr. WOOD. There can be no possible objection to this resolution.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There are not only possible objections, but, in my judgment, very grave objections. If any man's name is to be put into a report to Congress, then it is a question of great importance to the country. If the gentleman can convince his committee that it is right, he can convince me.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is too old a member of this House not to know that a reference of resolutions of this character to committees defeats them entirely in many cases. This is public information which we require, for we have other questions of a similar character before us, and it is important to know the precise cost already incurred by the refunding of the public debt, so far as this $300,000,000 is concerned. If the gentleman insists upon his objection, I shall have to move a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I shall insist upon my objection. We have already before the Committee on Rules a proposition that all such resolutions of inquiry shall be first referred to their appropriate committees, and as this resolution comes directly within the scope of the committee of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] is so able a member, let it be referred to that committee, and if he can convince his committee he will have convinced me, I am certain.

Mr. WOOD. I would have no objection to that, if the gentleman knows of any reason why this information should not be received.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that if the resolution is referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, it should be coupled with the right to report it at any time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WOOD. As that committee meets to-morrow, I will consent to the reference.

No objection being made, the resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, with leave to report upon it at any time.

COMMITTEE ON MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on the Rules, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That a special committee of seven be appointed to take into consideration the subject of repairing the Mississippi levees.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LAWRENCE submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law that it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture annually to ascertain, as early and as nearly as practicable, the probable amount of every agricultural product, including wool and the supplies of animal food in the United States and in each State and Territory separately; the probable demand for each in this and other countries; the cost of shipping the same to market; the prices realized from consumers; the probable profits of dealers between producers and consumers, and the prices in the counties where produced; and that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall furnish so much of such information as may be practicable to the proper officers of State boards of agriculture, and all persons interested, in such form as may be practicable, so as to enable sellers as well as buyers to determine on reasonable prices.

CUBAN BELLIGERENCY.

Mr. COX. I propose to submit a joint resolution for action at this time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the inhabitants of a portion of the republic of Spain, to wit, the island of Cuba, have been waging war against Spain for a period of more than five years, the existence of which war has been and is acknowledged by Spain in sundry public acts and documents; and

Whereas during this war Spain has been allowed to supply her armies and navy from the factories, dock-yards, and arsenals of this country, with every material requisite of warfare, while the Cubans, in direct opposition to a fair spirit of neutrality, have been denied similar advantages to vessels freighted with arms and ammunition destined for the Cubans, in accordance with the legal rights of American citizens to trade in arms with peoples and powers who are at war, in the exercise of what has been declared by the Executive and a Federal court to be a legitimate voyage, which vessels have, in violation of law and equity, been detained and subjected to delays by a perversion of justice, to the detriment of the interests of American citizens; and

Whereas measures should be adopted to protect the rights and interests of American citizens engaged in legitimate commerce, and to prevent the recurrence of losses which may arise from the fact that this Government has not yet acknowledged the existence of the republic of Cuba; and

Whereas a majority of the republics of this hemisphere have recognized the belligerence of Cuba, which acts have been tacitly admitted by Spain to be not incompatible with a spirit of amity toward Spain; that Spain herself, by acknowledging the independence of sundry republics on this continent, once her colonies, has acknowledged the rights they had to wage war for their independence, as Cuba is to-day fighting for hers; and that by the principles of international law an inherent right is vested in the sovereignty of every independent nation to declare, when convenient, the existence of belligerence between any other nations, or between the inhabitants of any integral portion of such nation; and that the rendering of assistance to all peoples struggling in this hemisphere for the rights of self-government by all just means, not in contravention of international law, is a thorough American policy, consonant with the principles on which our own independence is based; and

Whereas the recent atrocities in connection with the steamer Virginius have given added significance to the action which the United States Government should take in the premises: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a state of war is hereby recognized between the republic of Spain and the so-called republic of Cuba, and we hereby declare both parties entitled to the rights conceded to belligerents by international law.

Mr. COX. I propose to withdraw the preamble, so that the question may be put to the House on the resolution simply. I can conceive there may be objection to some parts of the preamble.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. COX. I have not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. No one really has the floor. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX] will state his motion.

Mr. COX. I withdraw the preamble, and ask that the resolution be now put on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not really before the House, except by unanimous consent or a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I object to the reception of the resolution.

Mr. MAYNARD. It appears to me that such a resolution should have a preamble, and that preamble should be considered by somebody somewhere.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I rise to a question of order. Is the resolution before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not; but the Chair recognized the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who has the right to make the only motion which can bring the resolution before the House.

Mr. COX. I move to suspend the rules and put the resolution on its passage.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I understood that I had been recognized by the Chair, and that the late motions had been entertained while I was holding the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not conscious of having recognized the gentleman.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I had the impression that I had been recognized, and I know the gentlemen about me had the same impression.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is the most correct judge concerning that subject. [Laughter.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] moves that the rules be suspended and that this resolution be passed.

Mr. ORTH. I desire to say that, if the rules be not suspended, I shall make a motion that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. That motion has already been indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS.]

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 41, noes 153.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. How comes the resolution before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is really not before the House.

Mr. COX. What has become of the motion to refer the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not submit the motion, because the resolution is not before the House.

Mr. COX. I make the motion to refer.

The SPEAKER. But the resolution is not before the House.

Mr. COX. Then I will ask that the resolution be referred by unanimous consent.

Several members objected.

EXTRAORDINARY EXPENSES IN NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, asking for an appropriation to meet extraordinary expenses in his Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF INCREASED CONGRESSIONAL PAY.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The special committee appointed to consider the salary question have considered the different bills and resolutions on the subject referred to them, and are prepared to report a bill regulating certain salaries, and a joint resolution proposing an additional article of amendment to the Constitution.

The bill (H. R. No. 471) to repeal the increase of certain salaries and to regulate the same, and to cover undrawn and unreturned balances into the Treasury, was read. It provides in the first section that so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, as prescribes and fixes the rate of compensation of the Vice-President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, be repealed.

The second section provides that all acts or parts of acts providing for or relating to the pay and allowances of the Vice-President, and of the Speaker of the House, and of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, which were repealed or superseded by the act recited in the first section, be revived and declared to be in full force; provided that the Speaker, Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall receive no mileage for coming to or returning from the present session of Congress, except actual individual traveling expenses from their respective homes to the seat of Government, and return, by the most direct route of usual travel.

The third section requires the Secretary of the Treasury to cover into the Treasury all sums that may remain undrawn or which have been received as increased compensation under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1873, and which shall have or may come into his possession by the return thereof.

Mr. KASSON. I have been directed by a minority of the committee to make a report, which I wish to present, to be considered in connection with this general question.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am not on the floor for the purpose of explaining the provisions of the bill, because that opens it to general discussion, but for the purpose of taking the direction of the House—acting for the committee as to the general conduct of the bill—as to the time the discussion shall take; whether the House prefers acting upon the bill at once, or prefers delay; or at what time it shall come up in order, and for how long a time it shall be left open for general debate; and then in what manner it shall be considered for amendments. If the House is anxious, as many members have indicated to me they are, it can be acted upon at once. That can be settled here at this time. If that is not the wish of the House, I desire one thing settled now—and such is the feeling of the committee, I think—and that is as to the manner it shall be considered, and the length of time we are to take up with this matter.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether this is not the proper time to submit the views of the minority of the special committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand what the gentleman from Maine means, or how it is that he proposes to get the sense of the House.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I was desirous of inviting suggestions from any gentleman interested in the matter.

The SPEAKER. The position of the bill is this: it has been read a first and second time, and the question now is, "Shall it be engrossed and read a third time?" which is the amendable stage of the bill.

Mr. KASSON. I wish the question to be settled whether the minority report may be received and laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Iowa to have the views of the minority of the committee submitted?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. This is the first time I have heard the minority desired to submit any report; but I have no objection to the gentleman's submitting the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. It will be in the nature of a substitute, the Chair supposes.

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir; for the pending bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not yield to allow it to come in as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MAYNARD I did not have an opportunity during the sessions of the specia. committee to submit the proposition I desired, and which I would like to submit at some stage as an amendment; and I would suggest to the chairman of the committee and to the House the propriety of referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to be considered at some definite time, say to-morrow; and in the mean time the bill may be ordered to be printed, so that any gentleman may have the opportunity to propose amendments and have them printed, and to have the whole subject before the House. Then we may take it up for discussion, as some gentlemen around me say, on Wednesday next. I have no objection to that, but I am for having it taken up for fair discussion at an early day. After general discussion the majority can cut off the debate at any time. After what seems to be fair discussion, if it be the wish of the majority of the House, we can continue it under what is called the five-minute rule; and if that debate should extend beyond what the judgment of the House thinks is necessary, the majority can then cut off all debate whatever, and bring the House promptly to a vote on any amendment which may be offered, and, finally, on the bill itself.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. There is no objection, as I have already said, to a course of that kind being adopted. I see none myself. I have no desire to cut off amendments or discussion if there be no desire on the part of the House at this time, and I do not see any, to second the demand for the previous question and take a vote upon the bill at once. I will enter now the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That of itself cuts off amendments.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not propose, unless in a certain emergency or contingency, where the will of the House will be very clear, to have the bill without amendments, and only saving that chance, I enter the motion to recommit. I propose further that the bill be set apart for to-morrow morning after the morning hour, to be taken up and considered as in Committee of the Whole, the general debate to continue either in Committee of the Whole or in the House for such a time as may be satisfactory to the House; and that when general debate is closed it shall be considered as in Committee of the Whole and under the five-minute rule.

Mr. KASSON. Either in the House or in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am not particular which, whether in the House as in Committee of the Whole, or in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Let me make a suggestion. It seems to me it is not desirable the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole. As I understood the proposition of my colleague on the committee, it seems that under it the full opportunity can be given for debate, and at the close of the debate the House can then determine whether they will give any consideration to amendments or not, under the motion which my colleague himself makes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It is for that purpose I enter the motion to recommit.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Not to have it considered in the Committee of the Whole, but in the House.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman from Maine will make the motion to have all these amendments printed, not only the report of the majority but the minority report, and all amendments which may be proposed. I do not see any advantage to be gained by considering this matter in the Committee of the Whole. We have oftentimes acted upon these matters in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not make the proposition to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I have no preference for one way over the other. One is as satisfactory to me as the other. I only wish to know what is the will of the House.

Mr. NIBLACK. I thought the understanding was that we should debate the subject in the House as in Committee of the Whole. If the gentleman declines to make that proposition I will make it myself.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am willing to make that proposition.

Mr. NIBLACK. That it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that after general debate the bill be open for amendments, to be debated under the five-minute rule?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Why not proceed with the discussion now?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I suggested that the debate proceed to-morrow morning, which, I think, will be more acceptable than proceeding with it now, for this reason: that many members have amendments, and if the bill is set for to-morrow morning, after the morning hour, the bill itself, which has not been printed, and not seen by many members, can be printed, and all amendments that are submitted can be printed, so that to-morrow morning, after the morning hour, we can proceed with the discussion, knowing what is before the House on the divers motions for amendment. I make that proposition.

Mr. SPEER. Does the proposition cut off all amendments except those which may be offered to-day? A large majority of the House have not seen the bill—have simply heard it read at the Clerk's desk; and we want to see both the bill and the views of the minority of the committee printed so that we may know in an intelligible way what amendments, if any, are to be offered.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Gentlemen will see, if the order I propose is carried out and the debate is carried on under the five-minute rule in the House as in Committee of the Whole, that the bill will then be open for any additional amendments. There are many amendments, as I now learn, which gentlemen are desirous of putting in and having printed, so that they may be before the House to-morrow morning.

Mr. KASSON. I ask, on behalf of the minority of the committee, that their views may be submitted to the House, by the reading of their report.

The SPEAKER. The report of the minority of the committee is a report accompanied by a bill. Is there objection to its being read?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned, members of the select committee to consider the repeal of the salary bill, being unable to agree to the action of the majority of said committee, beg leave to make the following report, expressing their views of the insufficiency of the action proposed by the majority of the committee, and their reasons therefor:

1. The emphatic and continued expression of the great majority of the American people, in all the forms which should influence our judgment, against the increase of salaries effected by the act approved March 3, 1873, should, in our opinion, take the question of its repeal out of the field of debate. It ought to be repealed in terms as general as those in which it was enacted, subject only to constitutional restraints. These restraints relate only to the salaries of the President of the United States during his present term of office, and to the justices of the Supreme Court.

2. The depressed financial condition of the country, requiring of the people the practice of habits of economy, requires also of their Representatives a recognition of the like economy in their disbursements from the public Treasury, and especially in respect to those of which they are themselves the beneficiaries. No public act will go further than this to establish the confidence of the people in their chosen representative government.

The present diminished receipts of revenue, the necessity of increased appropriations to the Navy, and perhaps elsewhere, warn us that it may be necessary to increase our sources of revenue, in addition to all practicable economies. For these reasons, also, the undersigned deem it necessary to enlarge the scope of the bill, and also to make the reductions for this Congress effective from the 4th of March last.

3. It may be true that the popular dissatisfaction is chiefly directed toward the law-making authority which employs its power over the Treasury to appropriate the public money to increase its own emoluments.

The President, however, is a part of this national legislative authority, and to that office is assigned by the bill in question much the largest increase of salary. It cannot lawfully be diminished during the current term. It can be reduced from the close thereof, leaving it in the power of the present or succeeding Congress to revise the whole question deliberately, unembarrassed by legislative interests connected therewith. And this reduction, in the opinion of the undersigned, ought to be effected by the bill upon which the House is about to act. It is also deemed proper, in view of the necessary continuance of the increased salary during the present term, to reduce the incidental allowances of the presidential office as far as compatible with the care and safety of the public property.

4. The undersigned also recommend that all the compensations increased by said act be re-established at their former rates respectively, subject to the constitutional exceptions above named, and excepting also the franking privilege. Congress can accomplish this so far as its own former pay and allowances are concerned, either by restoring them in kind, or by adding the value of the mileage and other allowances to their pay, and equalize it, abolishing all allowances.

5. This report is accompanied by a bill designed to give effect to the views expressed herein.

The undersigned concur in the proposed constitutional amendment.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN A. KASSON,
H. J. JEWETT,
Members of Select Committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will also read the bill which accompanies the report just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, as provides for the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in the Forty-second Congress, and in subsequent Congresses, at the rate of $7,500 per annum, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. That so much of said act approved March 3, 1873, as provides an increased compensation for any clerks, reporters, and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, and for the other employés named in said act in connection therewith, is hereby repealed. And the compensation of said clerks, reporters, and employés is hereby re-established at the respective rates last fixed by law prior to the passage of said act approved March 3, 1873.

SEC. 3. That from and after the close of the present term of office of the President of the United States, the compensation of the President shall be $25,000 per annum, to be paid in monthly installments: Provided, That during the present official term of the President no allowance or payment shall be made from the public Treasury for any compensation to the civil officers, attendants, or employés at the Executive Mansion and grounds, except only for the secretaries, clerks, steward, and the employés in charge of and at work upon the grounds attached to said Mansion; and all provisions of law inconsistent with the terms of this section are repealed.

SEC. 4. That all provisions of said act approved March 3, 1873, increasing the compensation or salary of any officer or employé of the Government, except so far as the same applies to the President of the United States during his present term, and to the judges of the Supreme Court, are hereby repealed. And the salaries and compensation of said officers and employés are hereby respectively established at the rate last fixed by law prior to the passage of said act approved March 3, 1873, unless otherwise herein provided.

SEC. 5. That the salaries and allowances (excluding the franking privilege) of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in the Forty-third Congress and for the succeeding Congresses, shall be the same which were last established by law prior to the passage of the said act approved March 3, 1873: Provided, That Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in the Forty-third Congress who shall have received their compensation since the 4th of March, 1873, in accordance with the act last aforesaid, shall hereafter be paid only such equal monthly installments as shall in the aggregate make their compensation severally, from the 4th of March, 1873, to the close of the present Congress, equal to the amount of salary and allowances herein provided.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury is required to cover into the Treasury all sums which may remain undrawn, or which have been received as increased compensation, under the provisions of said act, approved March 3, 1873, and which shall have or may come into his possession by the return thereof.

Mr. MAYNARD. As a member of the committee, I would like to give notice of an amendment, which I will offer at such time as I may have an opportunity, to the effect that that part of the act referred to in the bill which relates to compensation, instead of being repealed, be suspended during the Forty-third Congress and left to operate upon our successors.

Mr. POLAND. I design to offer a substitute for the bill of the committee, which, I think, will meet the popular demand. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will yield to allow it to be read.

The Clerk read Mr. POLAND'S substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the act passed March 3, 1873, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," as makes any change in the pay, mileage, and allowances of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, is hereby repealed, and the pay, mileage, and allowances of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, shall be and remain as fixed by law immediately prior to the passage of said act of March 3, 1873, and as if said act had not been passed.

SEC. 2. That all moneys paid to Senators, Representatives, or Delegates of the Forty-third Congress, under the provisions of said act of March 3, 1873, whether paid as salary for the Forty-second or Forty-third Congress, shall be charged and reckoned as part payment of their compensation as members of the Forty-third Congress.

SEC. 3. That within ten days after the passage of this act the Treasurer of the United States shall forward by mail to each member of the Forty-second Congress (who is not a member of the Forty-third Congress) who received additional compensation under said act of March 3, 1873, a written or printed notice, informing him of the repeal of so much of said act as gave such increased pay, and also stating the sum thus paid to such member, and requesting such member to repay the same to the Treasury; and within ninety days thereafter said Treasurer shall report to each House of Congress the names of all such members, the sum paid to each, the names of those who have repaid, and all replies received to such notices.

SEC. 4. That all sums that have been or may be returned to the Treasurer, of money received under the aforesaid provision of the act of March 3, 1873, and also, any sum which any person may be entitled to thereunder, which has not been drawn, are hereby directed to be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. ARCHER. I would ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] why not make a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill as reported by his committee?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That is not necessary. If the House wants the previous question on this matter it can be ordered on the bill itself.

Mr. ARCHER. Then move the previous question.

Mr. COX. Why not pass the amendment reported by the minority also?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have no objection to testing the feeling of the House by calling the previous question.

Mr. ARCHER. We are going in for economy, and I think we will save a great deal by cutting off debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is waiting until some order of business is suggested.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Many members have asked me why I do not move to suspend the rules and pass the bill, or move the previous question; and in order to test the sense of the House, I will move the previous question on the bill as reported. Before doing so, however, I yield for one moment to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK.]

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to say, before further action is taken in the matter, that I agree to very much of the bill submitted by two of my colleagues on the committee. There are two or three points, however, on which I do not agree with them, and, therefore, I did not sign the minority report. I will, at the proper time, if the bill passes to discussion, indicate the points of difference between them and me, and also between me and the majority of the committee. I think the bill reported by the committee is, on the whole, the best of the two.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. The minority bill being in, and having been read, I want to know whether any motion is necessary to secure its consideration in view of the motion of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE?]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is an old parliamentarian, and knows there is really no such thing as a minority report. It is merely an amendment, which the gentleman can move. Of course the courtesy is usually extended to two or more members of a committee, who differ with the majority, to make a report, but it is always done ex gratia, and is no parliamentary right.

Mr. KASSON. I ask whether it is necessary to make an additional motion that it shall be offered as a substitute?

The SPEAKER. It is not in; it was merely read. The state of the case is simply this: that the committee have made a report. All that has been done since then has been informal, and has tended, as the Chair supposed, toward coming to some sort of agreement as to how the actual business should be transacted, but nothing has been actually done but to make the report of the bill.

Mr. SPEER. I would ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] if both the bills do not restore the mileage abuse—twenty cents a mile.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The bill reported by the committee repeals, so far as Congress is concerned, all the increase of the last session, all the legislation affecting them, and, in addition to that, restoring the old law as it stood before the much complained of act of last Congress. If I was to talk and explain the bill for an hour I could not tell the story more clearly than that. It repeals the increase so far as it was applicable to Congress and restores the old law, but not, of course, the franking privilege.

Mr. SPEER. It re-enacts the mileage, twenty cents a mile, to and from California, for instance, every session.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. What is the proposition of the gentleman?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to make a proposition to the House in order that this matter may be fully discussed. I hope the gentleman will yield to a motion to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole, where it can be fairly discussed under the five-minute rule. It is a matter of great importance to each individual member; it is a matter where each man may desire to explain his vote, to explain to his constituents and to the country the reasons that operate upon him in giving his vote. That will give a fair opportunity to everybody to express his views on this subject, and bring the House to a substantial agreement on some bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The gentleman must have been out and not heard the proposition I submitted to the House ten minutes ago, which covers exactly the propostion he now makes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I was out.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Except that the consideration of the bill was to be had in the House as in Committee of the Whole, according to the suggestion of some members.

Mr. WOODFORD. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WOODFORD. A motion had been made for the previous question, and debate therefore is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to have moved the previous question; if he had, the point of order would have been well taken.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] that if he will review the history of the legislation of 1817, on the same subject now before us, he will find out that when the stage we are now at in the discussion of this bill was reached at that time it was determined to open the bill for general debate; and that debate extended through to almost the last week of the session to the exclusion of a large amount of public business that ought to have been done. That debate was, perhaps, as fruitless and valueless as any debate recorded in the annals of Congress. I therefore suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill, if he wishes to bring the House of Representatives to a decisive and immediate issue upon it, that he demand the previous question and put his bill upon its passage. As I understand it, his bill simply repeals the increase of congressional salaries, and places the law where it was before the 3d of March last.

What we do should be done without passion—without discord—and promptly, so that we may go to work on the very important public duties that this session has in store for us.

Mr. ARCHER. A motion to suspend the rules——

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary. This committee had the right to report this bill at any time, and a majority of the House can pass it.

Mr. KELLEY. I was in a remote part of the Hall and did not hear this bill distinctly when it was read. Does this bill reported by the committee pursue what I understand to be the unbroken line of precedence, and make the change date from the first day of this Congress?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It does not.

Mr. DAWES. I object to debate unless we can have this subject open for general discussion. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] indulges in a discussion of the bill; and unless other gentlemen can have the same opportunity I must object.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. This bill takes effect from its passage.

Mr. KELLEY. The adoption of a bill that does not go back to the first day of this Congress, (and I am heartily in favor of that proposition,) I may say is a departure from the unbroken line of precedents, and will put gentlemen who favor the bill in a worse position before the American people, in my judgment, than any legislation that has yet been had.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] will so control his bill as to trust the House with a reasonable discussion of it. The idea of bringing in a bill, referring it, and every other bill of like character, to a special committee, then bringing in a report of that committee and calling the previous question upon it, without a word of discussion except such as my friend from Maine can eke out here in these few minutes, is not in my judgment a proper way of treating this subject. Nor is it the proper way to send this bill floating through all time to come. The gentleman from Maine can name some reasonable hour at which he can call for a vote on this question; and in the mean time we can have such fair, candid, and reasonable discussion as the gravity in this case and not as the clamor of the case, demands.

Mr. LAMISON. Amen. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The House will bear me out in this statement, that I have not attempted a discussion on the merits of the bill, but have carefully excluded that; I have no desire to do it. I started by proposing that some time in the near future should be fixed when this bill should be taken up and debated at length; and afterward, when the general debate thereon was exhausted, it could be considered in Committee of the Whole. I found but little response to that proposition; many members sought to modify it. Then, without any action of mine—and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] must know that, for he was sitting here at my right during all the time—member after member persisted that I should call the previous question. There is no action of the committee that calls for that. The committee did not decide upon that, or upon crowding the bill down the throat of the House. But if the House is ready for the question as presented by the committee, either to accept the bill or not to sustain the previous question, then, for one, I am ready that the House should act upon it. But what right can be taken away from the House of Representatives, after these suggestions have been made, if it is allowed to vote on the previous question?

Mr. DAWES. If my friend will allow me, I will say that I assume that he acts under the instruction of his committee; and that must have been one or the other of two things; either to call the previous question upon his bill——

Mr. HALE, of Maine. No, sir.

Mr. DAWES. Or to submit it to to some sort of debate and amendment.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. No, sir.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to know which it is.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I may say, from the conversations I have had with members of the committee, that my instructions were to see what evidently was the feeling of the House; neither to decide the matter one way nor the other; neither to open a torrent of debate which may run for weeks and weeks to no good, nor to decide that the measure shall be pressed upon the House for immediate action. In other words, I was instructed, as I understand, to observe the indication of the feeling of members and then take the sense of the House.

Mr. DAWES. Now, if my friend from Maine has been instructed by his committee to merely feel his way through the House, I suggest to him to act on his own judgment and responsibility and fix a reasonable time for debate, after which a vote shall be taken on the bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have made my proposition in as clear terms as I was capable of doing. First, I entered a motion to recommit, so as to control the question finally, if the House should be willing. Then I asked that to-morrow morning after the morning hour be fixed for the consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the general debate to run such time as may please the House, and discussion after that to be conducted under the five-minute rule.

Mr. DAWES. I hope that course will be adopted.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. In the mean time I would suggest that the bill be printed; and I will also ask that the joint resolution, though not now strictly in order, be also printed and any amendments that may be offered now; not that those amendments shall be considered as pending, but merely that they be printed for information.

Mr. DAWES. That is a fair proposal.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman from Maine enters a motion to recommit, will not the whole subject go over to such time as he may choose to call up the motion; and can he not call it up at any time when he may be able to get the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state what course the bill must necessarily take, unless by unanimous consent or a suspension of the rules the regular course of proceeding under the rules should be varied.

The bill has been reported from a committee under the authority to report at any time. It is now before the House. It has been twice read—once when it was referred, and once since it was reported. The question is now on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, pending which the gentleman from Maine enters a motion to recommit. While the motion to recommit is pending no amendment can be offered. But the House must come to some agreement, or else this bill may be before it from now until the end of the session, to the exclusion of the morning hour and everything else. But the gentleman from Maine now proposes, as the Chair understands, that the bill shall be printed, together with all amendments which gentlemen may desire to offer; that the House shall resume the consideration of the subject to-morrow after the morning hour, and that the bill shall be left open to general debate until the House, by unanimous consent, shall agree to limit discussion to five-minute speeches.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman from Maine will fix a time when he will call the previous question, or when the previous question shall, by agreement, be considered as binding. If we do not fix some time at which this debate shall terminate, I clearly foresee that there will be no legislation on this subject.

Mr. DAWES. Does not the consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole, under the five-minute rule, open it to debate?

The SPEAKER. But that requires unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Then I will not incumber my motion by any reference to the five-minute rule, because the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] must already see that there is going to be difficulty in getting any proposition through here. I hope the gentleman begins to see that by this time. The Chair having stated the position of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that its consideration be fixed for to-morrow, after the morning hour, to be then open to general debate; and when the debate has run to such time that the House has evidently had enough of it, I will call up the motion to recommit and see what action the House will then take. I have no desire, no shadow of a desire, to control this matter; but I will take the sense of the House at any time when there is an indication that the debate has run long enough.

Mr. DAWES. I think it would be better if the gentleman would make now an indication at what time he will try the sense of the House upon that question.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The debate would run under the hour rule, I take it.

The SPEAKER. Necessarily, unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. LEACH. I ask that the bill which I introduced on Monday last, to restore the franking privilege, be printed as an amendment, so that it shall go before the committee of which the gentleman from Maine is chairman.

The SPEAKER. That bill is no longer before the committee. The bill is already printed, as the Chair thinks, and it can be offered as an amendment to this bill whenever amendments shall be in order. The only way it can come in is as an amendment.

Mr. LEACH. I give notice that I desire to offer that as an amendment to this bill

Mr. HALE, of Maine. My idea is that it is safe enough to let the debate run a couple of days before fixing a time for its close. I only make the suggestion that speeches, instead of being made under the hour rule, shall be limited to half an hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Objection was made.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will say, then, that the debate shall be limited to twenty-minute speeches.

Many MEMBERS. Say fifteen minutes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I prefer to make it twenty minutes.

Mr. BURCHARD. Does this cut off the right to offer amendments?

The SPEAKER. So long as a motion to recommit is pending no amendment can be received. The Chair will now submit the question to the House. Is there any objection to limit speeches to twenty minutes each?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPEER. I understood amendments were to be in order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. My understanding was that any amendments which the gentlemen desire to offer would be received and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman desiring to offer amendments can do so, and they will be printed, but they will lie upon the table to be offered when the bill is open to amendment.

Mr. SPEER. I desire at the proper time to offer an amendment that the mileage previously allowed by law shall not be restored, but instead thereof the actual traveling expenses shall be paid.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I will call the attention of the House, and of the special committee having this subject in charge, to a proposition I desire to submit for their instruction. It is this: that this subject shall be disposed of by three distinct and separate bills. First, a bill to repeal the salary clause of the act of March 3, 1873; second, a bill to fix the salary and reform the inequality in the old mileage system, by allowance only for traveling expenses; and, third, a bill to provide that the future salaries shall be so adjusted for members of this Congress that the salary already paid shall be estimated and the aggregate salary for the year be equal only to the salary fixed. The object in asking for these separate bills is, that each one may be voted upon its own merits, so that no member shall be led to oppose any proposition because it may contain a provision objectionable to him.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise objection to the gentleman from Ohio debating the proposition at this time.

The SPEAKER. The objection is well taken. The gentlemen are recognized now only for the purpose of offering amendments to be printed, and not for the purpose of debating.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I merely wished to state the action I desire the House to take, and I have accomplished my purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regards the point taken by the gentleman from Iowa upon the gentleman from Ohio as a good one, as he has not the floor for debate.

Mr. KASSON. I now present the bill which was presented by the minority of the committee, which I ask to be printed, and which I give notice I will offer at the proper time as a substitute for the bill of the majority.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that has already been printed.

Mr. KASSON. Neither of the bills has been printed.

The SPEAKER. It will be ordered to be printed.

Mr. LEACH. I desire to offer an amendment restoring the franking privilege.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I submit two amendments.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I submit a substitute for the majority bill.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will present their amendments at the Clerk's desk, with their names legibly written upon them; and they will be numbered and ordered to be printed under the order of the House. There is no necessity for delaying the House at this time by having them all read.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to offer another amendment, so that it may be ordered to be printed, and I ask it to be read.

The SPEAKER. It will take one-half the afternoon to read the amendments which have been already presented at the Clerk's desk. The Chair will state the understanding at which the House has arrived. It is this: that this bill shall be considered immediately after the morning hour, under the rule which limits speeches to twenty minutes each, and that the debate shall continue under the twenty-minute rule until otherwise ordered by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Not by unanimous consent, but by the majority of the House.

The SPEAKER. Then that the debate under the twenty-minute rule shall continue until the majority of the House shall see fit to limit the debate to five minutes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Leaving the whole matter under the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Of course the motion to recommit is pending.

Mr. CONGER. If the motion to recommit be pending then no action can be had upon the bill.

Mr. BURCHARD. Would not the motion to recommit if withdrawn, and the previous question be called and sustained, have the effect of cutting off all amendments to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair apprehends the motion to recommit is made for the very reason of cutting off amendments.

Mr. BURCHARD. And when the motion to recommit is withdrawn and the call for the previous question is sustained, then no amendment will be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the precise process. It will not take the power from the majority of the House to amend the bill if the majority desires to amend it. If the gentleman who has charge of the bill desires to test the sense of the House whether amendments shall be offered to the pending bill he will withdraw the motion to recommit and demand the previous question, and if the House shall refuse to sustain the demand for the previous question the bill will be open to amendment. So that the House itself has the right to control whether it will amend the bill or not. The majority cannot, by any use of the rule, be deprived of that right. They have the right to amend the bill if they so desire.

Mr. WOODFORD. Will the gentleman yield the floor long enough to allow me to move the previous question? I will state the reason briefly why I desire to make that motion.

Mr. DAWES. I object, unless the debate is thrown open to other gentlemen.

Mr. WOODFORD. I am sorry the gentleman from Massachusetts will not allow me one moment to explain.

Mr. DAWES. I would have been delighted to hear the gentleman, and would have been delighted to hear other gentlemen. It is because I desire to hear the sentiments of the gentleman, and those of others, that I wish a reasonable time to be allowed for that purpose.

Mr. WOODFORD. The sentiment of the gentleman, and of others, is that it would be better for the country to set this morning for the discussion, and wind it up at once. I ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to yield to me long enough to enable me to move the previous question.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will yield to the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. WOODFORD. Then I move the previous question on the bill.

Mr. MCKEE. Is not that against the general agreement?

Several MEMBERS. It can be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the understanding of the House is otherwise. But, while it is only the majority that can second the previous question, the Chair does not feel at liberty to deprive the majority of the opportunity of doing as they please. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOODFORD] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] will act as tellers.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. I desire to inquire of the Chair if anything has been agreed to by unanimous consent in regard to this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed there had been, but this would negative it.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Then, I desire to know of the Chair whether it is in order to bring in anything inconsistent with that understanding except by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The course of proceeding to be adopted by the House had not been really agreed upon. But what the Chair desires to carry out is that the majority of the House shall control the business of the House. The Chair understands his duties to be to carry out the will of the majority.

Mr. COX. If the previous question is seconded would that cut off all these amendments?

The SPEAKER. Of course it would.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I ask that the bill which the House is about to vote on be again read.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOODFORD] will not insist upon his motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be again reported.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to ask the Chair whether these amendments which have been read are not pending.

The SPEAKER. Of course not. How can they be when a motion to recommit is pending?

Mr. SPEER. I supposed the motion to recommit must be withdrawn to enable the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOODFORD] to make his motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question, on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOODFORD,] is sustained, to what does it bring the House?

The SPEAKER. To a direct vote on this bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. On the bill itself?

The SPEAKER. First, on the motion to recommit. If the House refuses to recommit, the vote will then be upon the merits of the bill. The previous question will not be exhausted until the passage of the bill. The seconding of the previous question will be decided by the count of the tellers. The tellers will please take their places.

Mr. SPEER. I will act as a teller, not because I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from New York, but because I wish to carry out the understanding of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to be an accurate counter and therefore names him. The Chair knows nothing about sides in this matter—who is for or against the bill.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 132.

So the previous question was not seconded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now state the proposition for the conduct of the bill: that the House will resume its consideration to the exclusion of all other orders to-morrow after the morning hour, under a rule limiting each speech to twenty minutes; and that the House by a majority vote at any time may limit the speeches to five minutes each; the gentleman's motion to recommit being all the time pending. Is there objection to this order being made?

Mr. SCOFIELD. Could the bill not be set down for one o'clock? The morning hour may run all day.

The SPEAKER. Under this order the morning hour could only run sixty minutes.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Might not the bill come up in the morning hour and run all day?

The SPEAKER. A bill coming up in the morning hour might run for more than sixty minutes, if no order came in having superior privilege; but this order would limit the morning hour to sixty minutes. Is there any objection to the arrangment which has been stated?

There was no objection, and the order was made.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution reported by the committee, proposing an amendment to the Constitution in reference to this subject, be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

INDIANA ELECTION, NINTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I rise to report from the Committee on Elections the following resolution:

Resolved, That John P. C. Shanks is entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the ninth congressional district of Indiana.

I desire to say to the House that there never has been any serious question between the claimants to this seat, except upon the prima-facie case. The resolution of the House referred the case upon the merits, and the case upon the merits seems clear to the committee. The committee has recommended, by a unanimous vote, the passage of the resolution which I have offered. Without consuming any time, unless some gentleman desires explanation, I will call for the previous question upon the passage of the resolution.

Mr. CROSSLAND. The chairman of the committee having stated that this resolution is unanimously reported, I desire to say, as a member of the committee, that I had no notice of the meeting of the committee when this subject was acted upon, and did not join in any action upon the matter. I know nothing of the merits of this case whatever. Having no notice of the meeting of the committee, I could not be present.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I should have said, Mr. Speaker, that the report was agreed to by the unanimous vote of the members of the committee who were present. It seems that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CROSSLAND] was added to the committee only a day or two since; that he was not upon the committee as originally appointed; and our clerk was not aware that the gentlemen had not notice of the meeting when this resolution was acted upon. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

In accordance with the resolution just adopted, Mr. JOHN P. C. SHANKS presented himself, and was duly sworn in as a Representative from the ninth district of Indiana by taking the oath prescribed in the act of July 2, 1862.

LOUISIANA CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. SPEER. I am directed by the Committee on Elections to report the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Effingham Lawrence and E. C. Davidson, from the first and fourth congressional districts of Louisiana, respectively, be permitted to serve upon J. Hale Sypher and George L. Smith, who are sitting members of the same districts, respectively, notices of contest within twenty days from the passage of this resolution, and that the said sitting members be permitted to answer the same within twenty days after the service thereof.

Resolved, That the time for the taking of testimony in each of said contested-election cases is hereby extended for ninety days from the time the answer is allowed to be filed to the notice of contest.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] that he add to his resolution this clause: "And that in all things else the contest be conducted in conformity to existing laws."

Mr. SPEER. The committee did not think that clause necessary, because we do not propose to change the manner of taking testimony as prescribed by law, but simply to extend the time. That matter was considered by the committee.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPEER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

Mr. MOREY, I move to suspend the rules to enable me to introduce, and the House to pass, the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. No. 473) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to protect all citizens of the United States in their civil rights, and to furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866, was read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That no citizen of the United States shall, by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, be excepted or excluded from the full and equal enjoyment of any accommodation, advantage, facility, or privilege furnished by inn-keepers; by common carriers whether on land or water; by licensed owners, managers, or lessees of theaters or other places of public amusement; by trustees, commissioners, superintendents, teachers, and other officers of common schools and other public institutions of learning, the same being supported by moneys derived from general taxation, or authorized by law; by trustees and officers of cemetery associations and benevolent institutions incorporated by national or State authority. But private schools, cemeteries, and institutions of learning established exclusively for white or colored persons, and maintained respectively by voluntary contributions, shall remain according to the terms of the original establishment.

SEC. 2. That any person violating any of the provisions of the foregoing section, or aiding in their violation, or inciting thereto, shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered in an action on the case, with full costs, and shall also, for every such offense, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or shall be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one year: Provided, That the party aggrieved shall not recover more than one penalty; and when the offense is a refusal of burial, the penalty may be recovered by the heirs at law of the person whose body has been refused burial.

SEC. 3. That the same jurisdiction and powers are hereby conferred and the same duties enjoined upon the courts and officers of the United States in the execution of this act as are conferred and enjoined upon such courts and officers in sections 3, 4, 5, 7, and 10 of an act entitled "An act to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights, and to furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866, and these sections are hereby made a part of this act; and any of the aforesaid officers failing to institute and prosecute such proceedings herein required shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered by an action on the case, with full costs, and shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000.

SEC. 4. That no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as juror in any court, national or State, by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other persons charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the reason above named shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not less than $1,000, nor more than $5,000.

SEC. 5. That every discrimination against any citizen on account of color by the use of the word "white," in any law, statute, ordinance, or regulation, is hereby repealed and annulled.

Mr. BECK. I move that the House now adjourn. We cannot understand that bill from its hasty reading at the desk.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BECK, there were—ayes 94, noes 81.

Mr. MOREY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 106, nays 145, not voting 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Barrere, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, Cannon, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crocker, Crossland, Crutchfield, Davis, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, John B. Hawley, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Houghton, Hunton, Jewett, Kendall, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Luttrell, Magee, Marshall, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Mitchell, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, Niles, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packard, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Phelps, Potter, Randall, Rawls, Read, Robbins, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Sloss, Small, Southard, Speer, Stanard, Standeford, Stone, Storm, Todd, Vance, Waddell, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, William B. Williams, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—106.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Barber, Bass, Begole, Biery, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Cotton, Crounse, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, Donnan, Dunnell, Eames, Elliott, Farwell, Field, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hyde, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McDougall, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Melish, Merriam, Monroe, Morey, Myers, Negley, Nunn, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Smart, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Starkweather, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Wheeler, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodford—145.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Banning, Barnum, Barry, Bradley, Freeman Clark, Corwin, Crooke, De Witt, Dobbins, Duell, Harmer, Havens, George W. Hazelton, Hurlbut, Kasson, Killinger, Leach, Loughridge, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, Moore, Ray, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Henry J. Scudder, Stephens, St. John, Swann, Thomas, Waldron, Wilber, and Woodworth—34.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Is it in order to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is not. Pending a motion to suspend the rules, but one motion, a motion to adjourn, is in order. That being negatived, the question recurs, "Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. MOREY?"]

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana to allow this bill to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I am ready to go as far within constitutional limits as other gentlemen in this House for the recognition of the civil rights of all persons in the United States, but I am not prepared to vote for a bill which I have had no opportunity of reading. The Committee on the Judiciary has at its head the honorable member from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who has been as vigilant and active as any gentleman on the floor in securing the rights of the colored people, and I think the gentleman would serve his own purpose better if he would allow the bill to be referred to that committee.

Mr. WALLS. I hope the gentleman from Louisiana will not yield to have the bill referred to a committee. It is a bill which has been before Congress, or this House, for the last two years, and every member of the House, and especially the gentleman who has just taken his seat, is very well acquainted with it; and I hope it will not be referred. We did not ask that the amnesty bill should be referred to a committee, and all we ask is that the same justice shall be done to us.

Mr. SPEER. Is discussion in order on a motion to suspend the rules? If not, I object.

Mr. MOREY. I am perfectly willing that the bill should be referred to the Judiciary Committee, provided the House will consent that they shall have leave to report it back at any time.

Mr. BECK. I object to that. I do not object to the reference, but I object to the leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The House can, by a suspension of the rules, give to the committee the right to report at any time. Does the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOREY] modify his motion so as to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to report it at any time?

Mr. MOREY. Yes, sir; I put my motion in that form.

The question was put on Mr. MOREY's motion as modified, and on a division there were—ayes 161, noes 70.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the motion agreed to.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. DAWES. I desire the indulgence of the House for a few moments to distribute the President's message. It ought to be done this afternoon, as the salary bill will come up to-morrow, and I do not think it will take more than fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. It will be necessary to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir; and I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. RANDALL in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the President's annual message.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session, together with the accompanying documents, as relates to finance and taxation, to the receipts into the Treasury, to deficiencies in the revenue, the revision of the tariff and internal revenue laws, to the establishing of mints, to the public debt and public credit, and to the ways and means of supporting and meeting the liabilities of the Government, be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the necessary appropriation for carrying on the Government in its several departments, to deficiencies in appropriations, to postal telegraphy, to special appropriation for meeting the award to Great Britain against the United States, to special appropriation to the government of the Territory of the District of Columbia, and to special appropriation for ocean steam service, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to banks and banking and currency, be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to commerce and navigation be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the settling of colonies of immigrants on the public lands, to the survey and preservation of Government reservations, including the park of the Yellowstone, and to the public domain, be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Post-Office Department, to land, coast, postal depositories, and ocean mail service, be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to courts and the judiciary, to additional amendments to the Constitution, to the repeal or modification of the bankrupt act, to "civil rights," to conflict of authority in the courts in Utah, to the Geneva award, and to the Department of Justice, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the public expenditures be referred to the Committee on Public Expenditures.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to agriculture and the Department of Agriculture be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Army of the United States, the armament for sea-coast defenses, and to promotions in the staff corps of the Army, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Navy of the United States be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents, and the accompanying correspondence, as relates to foreign affairs, to treaties with foreign governments, and to the seizure of the Virginius and all questions growing out of the same, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the management of Indian affairs be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Pacific Railroads be referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to claims against the Government, not including claims growing out of any war in which the United States has been engaged, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to manufactures be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to private land-claims be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to mines and mining be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to coinage, weights, and measures be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to public buildings and grounds be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the expenditures on the public buildings be referred to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Territories of the United States be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to pensions, to the Pension Bureau, and to frauds against the Pension Bureau be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to patents and the Patent-Office be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to expenditures in connection with the Treasury Department be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to expenditures in connection with the State Department be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the expenditures in connection with the War Department be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the expenditures in connection with the Navy Department be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to expenditures in connection with the Post-Office Department be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to expenditures in connection with the Department of the Interior be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the militia be referred to the Committee on the Militia.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Territory of the District of Columbia be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to education and labor, to a national university in the District of Columbia, and to the Bureau of Education, be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to civil-service reform be referred to the Select Committee on the Reorganization of the Civil Service of the United States.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to railways and canals, and all questions growing out of the subject of "cheap transportation," be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to claims growing out of any war in which the United States has been engaged, be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the proposed centennial celebration, to a national census in 1875, and to the late Vienna Exposition, be referred to a select committee of thirteen members, to be appointed by the Speaker.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts why so much of the President's message as relates to the postal telegraph is referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. DAWES. That was the reference last year and the year before.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Then I wish to suggest that it would be more appropriate to refer matters relating to the public park and the Yellowstone region to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, than to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. DAWES. The postal telegraph was referred in the last Congress, and two years before, to the Committee on Appropriations, after very full discussion, by a vote of the House, and the Committee on Ways and Means regarded that as an instruction. As to the Yellowstone Park, I think the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is hardly the appropriate committee, that committee being somewhat local in its jurisdiction, and the question having reference to the system of land laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that he would entertain a motion to amend the resolution.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Then I move that so much of the message as relates to the Yellowstone Park be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

I desire to say a word or two only, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts. I desire to call his attention and that of the committee to the present rule of the House, which is the law of the House. I call attention to the fact that the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was very much extended by an amendment of the rules adopted during the last Congress, and embraces now not only public buildings and grounds in this District, but all the public buildings and grounds in the United States; and I respectfully submit that when a portion of those public grounds are to be taken to be made into a pleasure park, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is the proper one to consider it.

Mr. DAWES. I have no knowledge about the matter; it is new matter, and the House can send it to any committee it pleases. There may be force in what the gentleman from Virginia has said, but it strikes me that the subject has much to do with the general land system, and ought to go to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The consideration of all the questions relating to the National Park has always been submitted to the Committee on the Public Lands. It is a part of the land system of the United States. All the rules and regulations heretofore passed with relation to it have been referred to that committee, and I suggest that if the theory of the gentleman from Virginia were carried to its full extent, it would leave all the public lands of the United States to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I therefore think that the park should still remain in the hands of the committee which has heretofore had charge of it, and should not be taken away from that committee and given to a committee whose duties are entirely local and not national.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. One word in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I desire to say that the Yellowstone park is no longer a part of the public lands of the country; and for the information of the House, in order that it may be seen that I am only asking that a matter shall be referred to my committee which properly belongs to it, I ask to have read the rule governing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and defining its duties.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule referred to will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to consider all subjects relating to the public edifices and grounds within the city of Washington, and all the public buildings constructed by the United States which may be referred to them, and report their opinion thereon, together with such propositions relating thereto as may seem to them expedient.

Mr. DAWES. It will be seen from the reading of the rules that the public grounds within the District are all the grounds referred to this committee. I think it should go to the Committee on Public Lands.

The question was then taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. PLATT, of Virginia; which was not agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to further amend the resolutions now pending to the effect that that part of the President's message and accompanying documents which pertains to the establishment of postal savings-banks shall be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, for that subject is eminently germane to the subjects considered by that committee. It is a matter of banking, and not a matter relating at all to the post-office.

Mr. DAWES. I would just like to state to the committee that postal savings-banks have no connection whatever with anything like currency; but they are so intimately connected with the whole machinery of the post-office, in all its workings, that it does seem to me there can be no propriety in referring the subject to the Committee on Banking and Currency rather than to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. If this postal banking system shall be adopted it will certainly go far to modify all the postal laws of the country. I trust this subject will be allowed to go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not know that the gentleman need take any particular interest in this matter any way, as he is not on either of the committees referred to, and has nothing to do with the subject. These postal savings-banks may not, perhaps, pertain to the currency of the country, but they do pertain to banking, and will be a very important element in the banking interest of the country. If they are as successful as the Postmaster-General and others seem to suppose, they will make a great difference in the whole system of banking. The subject ought, therefore, to be considered in connection with the monetary questions of the country, for this is a monetary question, and has no connection with the transmission of the correspondence of the country.

The question was then taken up on the amendment moved by Mr. MAYNARD; and upon a division there were—ayes 78, noes 59.

The amendment was adopted.

The resolutions, as amended, were then adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the committee now rise and report the resolutions to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RANDALL reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the annual message of the President of the United States, had adopted sundry resolutions in relation to referring the same with the accompanying documents to the various committees of the House, and had directed him to report the same to the House.

Mr. DAWES. I move the previous question on the resolutions reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolutions were adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-ROUTE IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time a bill to establish a post-route from the village of L'Ance, in the county of Houghton, in the State of Michigan, to Huron Bay, in the same county and State. It is necessary that the bill shall be passed at once.

No objection was made; and accordingly the bill (H. R. No. 474) was introduced, read three times, and passed.

Mr. HUBBELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT HARRISONBURGH, VIRGINIA.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 475) to erect a court-house and post-office at Harrisonburgh, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

BERWICK BAY SHIP-CHANNEL.

Mr. SYPHER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to have an examination made by a competent engineer of the channel in Berwick Bay, at the mouth of the Atchafalaya River, in the State of Louisiana, and to report to the House of Representatives as soon as expedient the practicability of the same for naval and commercial purposes, with the cost thereof.

INTEREST PAID ON GOVERNMENT OBLIGATIONS.

Mr. FIELD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to prepare and report to this House the amount paid by the Treasury for interest on the following named obligations issued by the Government since 1861, to wit: The compound interest notes; the Treasury notes of 1861; the 7-30 bonds; the temporary loan certificates; the certificates of indebtedness of 1862 and 1863; the one-year Treasury notes of 1863; the two-year Treasury notes of 1863, and the 3 per cent. certificates of 1867.

POSTAL EXPENSES OF THE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. MYERS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the several Executive Departments of the Government be, and they are hereby, directed to report to this House, at as early a day as practicable, a statement of the expenses incurred by the said Departments, respectively, since the 1st day of July, 1873, consequent upon the abolition of the franking privilege; and that the Postmaster General be, and is hereby, also directed to furnish to this House a statement of the receipts of his Department from all sources in consequence of the said abolition of the franking privilege.

CONDITION OF PENSACOLA NAVY-YARD.

Mr. PURMAN. I ask consent to submit for consideration and adoption at this time a resolution of inquiry in relation to the present condition of the Pensacola navy-yard.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, requested to report to this House, at the earliest practicable day, the condition of the Pensacola navy-yard, in the State of Florida, and what further repairs and facilities, if any, with estimates of the expenditures for the same, are necessary to place the said yard in a proper condition for the benefit of the Navy, in view of threatened exigencies that may arise at any day with a neighboring foreign power.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object to the adoption of this resolution. Let it be referred to a committee. We do not want these facts made public just now, to let the Spanish authorities learn the condition of our navy-yard there.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House now adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn—

RICE BONDED WAREHOUSE.

Mr. POTTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 476) to establish a bonded warehouse for the storing and cleansing of rice intended for exportation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS, ETC.

Mr. NEGLEY asked and obtained consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the cases of N. J. Bigley, Mrs. N. G. Miller, Captain William H. Deniston, Mrs. Belinda Craig, and Messrs. Tomilson, Hartupee & Co.

Mr. FRYE asked and obtained consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the cases of Oliver Moses and others, John Bulfinch, and B. C. Bailey.

Mr. POTTER asked and obtained consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of William H. Newman & Co., for reference to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. TOWNSEND asked and obtained consent for the printing of the papers accompanying House bill No. 63.

Mr. GARFIELD asked and obtained consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Robert M. Douglas and Stephen A. Douglas, for reference to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, asked and obtained consent for the withdrawal, for the purpose of reference, from the files of the House of the papers in relation to certain swamp-lands in Holt County, Missouri, and the papers in the case of William Stoddard, late assistant-quartermaster of United States volunteers.

Mr. CONGER asked and obtained consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Micah Walker, for reference to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAWES asked and obtained consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the claim of the American Board of Missions for losses in the Cherokee Nation during the late war, for the use of the Interior Department.

Mr. WALLACE asked and obtained consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of the heirs of Colonel David Hopkins, late of Chester District, South Carolina, and in the case of the heirs of Josiah Chamberlain, late of Ontario County, New York, for reference to the Committee on War-Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Chair notices that in the case of several of these applications for the withdrawal of papers, it is stated that they are to be referred to committees of this House. In such cases it is not necessary to make this formal application to the House. When the papers are to be referred to committees, remaining in the possession of the House, all that is necessary, under the rule, is to make application at the desk of the Clerk.

Mr. RANDALL. It is usual to accompany these applications with the stipulation that copies of the papers withdrawn are to be left on file.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman being a member of the Committee on Rules is aware that that committee is now preparing a rule on that subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that; but until such a rule is prepared and adopted, I wish to have that order made in these cases.

Mr. SPEAKER. The order will be made.

PAY OF CONGRESSMEN.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask consent to submit for adoption at this time the resolution I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee on the Reduction of Salaries be directed to inquire into the actual amount paid to all the members of the House in the Thirty-ninth Congress for salaries, mileage, allowances for stationery, and all other allowances during said Congress; and to report the amounts of each and the gross amounts to this House, with the average amount for each member of this House in the Thirty-ninth Congress; also the gross amount and the average amount for each member of the House in the Forty-second Congress, as the law existed before the increase of March 3, 1873.

Mr. RANDALL. You ought to include the Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have all that.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I object to the resolution.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then I move to suspend the rules for the purpose I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have the floor for that purpose. There is a motion to adjourn pending, which the Chair has been fighting off for some time for the benefit of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] and other gentlemen.

Mr. KELLOGG. I hope the motion to adjourn will be voted down.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 108, noes 59.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KELLOGG. O, no; it is not worth while now, it is so late.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being only five in the affirmative; not one-fifth of the last vote.

The motion to adjourn was accordingly agreed to; and (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BUFFINTON: The petition of Ambrose N. Doane and 305 others, captains and owners, of vessels in Barnstable County, Massachusetts, praying Congress to place a light-ship on "Kill Pond Bar," so called.

Also, the petition of Alfred S. Kelley and 40 others, vessel-owners and seamen of Barnstable County, Massachusetts, for the same object.

Also, the petition of James O. Thompson, from Vineyard Haven, Massachusetts, late captain Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteers, (who was dismissed the service of the United States on the 23d of February, 1864,) praying Congress to grant him a reversal of said sentence of dismissal, and an honorable discharge from the service of the United States.

By Mr. BUNDY: Petition and evidence of John A. Fisher, of Portsmouth, Ohio, for relief as a wounded and disabled soldier during the late rebellion.

Also, petition of William S. Massie, to be placed on the rolls of Company H, Ninth Regiment West Virginia Infantry.

Also, the petition of Sarah Coles, widow of Samuel Coles, late of Company K, One hundred and ninety-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for a pension.

Also, the petition of D. Mackley, publisher of the Jackson Standard, and 128 citizens of Jackson County, Ohio, for amendment to postal laws requiring prepayment of postage on newspapers and printed matter, fixing rates by weight.

Also, the petition of the postmasters of Hocking County, Ohio, for prepayment of postage on newspapers and printed matter.

By Mr. BURCHARD: The petition of John S. Miller, for relief, and authority to Commissioner of Internal Revenue to cancel his bond.

By Mr. CALDWELL: The memorial of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church of Huntsville, Alabama, asking compensation for building destroyed by United States troops during the late war.

By Mr. CANNON, of Utah: The petition of Leonard J. Smith, of Utah Territory, for indemnity for depredations upon his property by the Shoshone Indians in 1864.

By Mr. CESSNA: The petition of J. M. Coolbrote of Hollidaysburgh, Blair County, Pennsylvania, for damages sustained by the destruction of the brig B. F. Martin, by the Steamer Union, in 1861, containing merchandise belonging to him.

Also, the petition of citizens of Somerset County, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law requiring prepayment of postage on all papers and documents sent by mail.

Also, the petition and papers of Israel Yount, of Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania, praying for relief for injuries done his property by the United States Army.

By Mr. CLARK, of Missouri: The petition of Martha F. Collins, widow of William T. Collins, who was a private in company L, Fourteenth Regiment Kansas Cavalry Volunteers, for pension.

By Mr. COBB, of Kansas: A memorial of the Legislature of Kansas, praying the establishment of a post-route with tri-weekly service between Topeka, Shawnee County, and Alma, Wabanusee County, Kansas.

By Mr. COX: The petition of Martin Kalbfleisch's son, asking compensation for acids furnished the assay office, in the city of New York, in 1869-'70.

By Mr. DANFORD: The petition of Cephas Lindsey and others, of Enoch, Ohio, asking for change in the postal laws, so as to require the prepayment of postage on newspapers and other printed matter.

Also the petition of O. K. Black and others, of Freeport, Ohio, with the same prayer.

Also, the petition of P. J. Goodrich and others, of Sharon, Ohio, with the same prayer.

By Mr. DUNNELL: The petition of B. S. Langdon and 80 others, citizens of Minnesota, asking for amendment to the "tree-culture act."

Also, the petition of certain Mennonites, asking for certain privileges in entering the public lands.

By Mr. EAMES: The petition of John C. Scott and 51 others, citizens of Rhode Island, praying for protection of civil rights.

By Mr. ELKINS: A petition of settlers on the abandoned military reservation known as "Fort Sumner," in New Mexico, asking to be allowed to obtain title to said lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws, the same as other settlers of the public lands.

By Mr. FRYE: The petition of Lieutenant James J. Chase, of Turner, Maine, for an increase of pension.

Also, the petition of Joseph Penney, of Maine, for bounty land.

Also, the petition of Mary J. Blood, of Lewiston, Maine, for a pension.

By Mr. HAYS: The petition of citizens of Autauga County, Alabama, praying for the passage of the civil-rights bill.

By Mr. HOSKINS: The petition of Timothy Paige, of Lockport, New York, for a pension.

By Mr. LOWE: The petition of Amos Herr and others, Mennonites, for certain privileges in acquiring public lands.

By Mr. MCCRARY: The petition of David Alexander, private Company D, First Regiment Nebraska Cavalry Volunteers, for a pension.

By Mr. MITCHELL: The petition of George K. Gregory, Rev. S. P. Lalumiere, and 213 others, asking for the passage of a bill to promote immigration to the United States, and for the protection of immigrants.

By Mr. MONROE: The petitions of the representatives of the Mennonites of South Russia and Prussia, in regard to the purchase of public lands of the United States for a colony.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of Mrs. Ann Humphreys, of Philadelphia, widow of Lawrence Humphreys, late a private in Company H, Ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, for a pension.

By Mr. NEAL: The petition of sundry citizens of Brown County, Ohio, praying a repeal of the stamp act so far as druggists are concerned.

By Mr. PACKARD: The petition of M. G. Bliss and H. P. Swarz, druggists, of Crown Point, Indiana, for the repeal of the stamp tax as applied to druggists.

By Mr. PARKER, of Missouri: The petition and evidence in the case of Mrs. Louisa B. Mallory, postmaster at Potosi, Missouri.

By Mr. PENDLETON: The petition of the Rhode Island State executive committee, praying in the name of the colored people of the State for protection of their civil rights.

By Mr. PIERCE: The petition of the druggists and pharmacists of Boston and vicinity for the repeal of schedule C of the act of Congress of June 30, 1864, and July 13, 1866, taxing drugs and medicines.

By Mr. RANDALL: The petition of James McGarrigle, asking the refunding of money improperly paid to the United States Government.

Also, the petition of Edward Hanly, musician in Company H, Ninth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, asking for a pension.

Also, the petition of R. L. Law, commander United States Navy, asking a restoration of rank.

By Mr. RANSIER: The petition of Mary Ann Slawson, widow of Hamilton Slawson, sr., for a pension.

Also, the petition of George Daniels, sr., of Beaufort County, South Carolina, for a pension for services in the war of 1812.

By Mr. SHOEMAKER, of Pennsylvania: The petition of the Board of Trade of Scranton, Pennsylvania, in favor of a free national banking law.

By Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania: The petition of the representatives of the Mennonites of South Russia and Prussia, praying that they may be allowed to take up and secure sections of Government land lying adjacent, either by purchase or under the homestead laws, and to reserve the same until 1881.

By Mr. SWANN: The petition of George W. Andrews, J. F. Moore, W. Silver Thompson, G. W. German, F. W. Blaney, and 170 others, chemists and druggists of the city of Baltimore and State of Maryland, in reference to the late decisions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, particularly those relating to the stamping of officinal medicines, &c.

Also, resolutions signed by J. F. Wancock, president, Joseph Roberts, Richard Sappington, second vice-president, J. Brown Bayley, treasurer, and the board of examiners of the Maryland College of Pharmacy, praying for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines.

By Mr. TREMAIN: The petition of Daniel Wormer for relief.

By Mr. WALLACE: Joint resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina, asking Congress to grant relief for the present financial embarrassment by authorizing the issue of an additional amount of currency.

Also, joint resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina, asking from Congress an appropriation to rebuild a wing of the Government building in the city of Charleston, called the "Citadel," and which was consumed by fire while in possession of the Army of the United States.

Also, joint resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina, requesting Congress to grant to the militia of that State the use of Government buildings in the city of Charleston, known as the "Citadel."

By Mr. WALLS: A petition of 176 citizens of Nassau County, Florida, petitioning Congress for the passage of the Sumner civil rights bill.

By Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont: Claim of Mrs. Mary Storrs, of Montpellier, Vermont, for a pension.

Also, petition of Rufus Mead, consul at San Juan del Sur, asking compensation for performing extra duties.

By Mr. WILLIE: Memorial of R. G. Crozier, for payment for goods taken by United States soldiers in the Mexican war.

Also, memorial of the mayor and board of aldermen of the city of Galveston to the Congress of the United States, asking the improvement of the harbor of Galveston.

By Mr. WILSON, of Iowa: The petition of Sarah H. Crosby, praying for a pension.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

The following notices of leave to introduce bills was given under the rules:

By Mr. BUNDY: A bill to provide for the payment to the State of Ohio $552,590.52, to reimburse claimants for property destroyed during the Morgan raid through said State in July, 1863.

POST-ROUTE BILLS.

Bills to establish post-routes were, under the rules, introduced, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, as follows:

By Mr. CROSSLAND: A bill to establish a post-route from Mayfield, Kentucky, to Viola, via Pottsville, Lowe's, and Kansas.

By Mr. HENDEE: A bill establishing certain post-roads in Vermont.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: A bill to establish a post-route from Yreka to Oak Bar, in California.

Also, a bill to establish a post-road from Petaluma to Trinidad, California.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 9, 1873.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, under the order made yesterday, appointed Mr. ALCORN a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to the resolution of the Senate of the 2d of December, instant, relating to the Louisville and Portland Canal; which, on motion of Mr. CONKLING, was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented resolutions of a mass-meeting of the workingmen of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on the subject of the finances of the country; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Frederick Francis Baury, a citizen of the city and State of New York, praying to be commissioned a lieutenant in the United States Navy, and placed on the retired list, in consequence of wounds received in the line of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have received, and been requested to present, the petition of Hannah W. Vreeland, of Jersey City, New Jersey, who asks for a pension upon the grounds and for the reasons set forth in her petition. I move that it be referred, together with sundry papers which I present, to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the petition of a large number of colored citizens of Hyde Park, Massachusetts, setting forth the indignities and grievances to which they are exposed in travel, at schools, and in various other ways, on account of color, and asking the prompt passage of the supplementary civil rights bill.

I also present a similar petition of citizens of West Virginia.

As that bill is still on the calendar, I move that these petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of James H. Caustin, son and sole heir of Isaac Caustin, deceased, praying to be indemnified for spoliations committed by the French prior to the year 1801; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of Miriam Ward, of Johnson County, Iowa, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of A. J. Smith, of Dallas County, Iowa, praying for compensation as surgeon in the years 1864-'65; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of John Pilmer, late of Company H, Ninth Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, praying to have the charge of desertion removed and be restored to pay; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of soldiers of Van Buren, Iowa, in favor of granting to soldiers and sailors who served ninety days in the war of the rebellion, and were honorably discharged, 160 acres of public land; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SCOTT presented a memorial of citizens of Greensburgh, Pennsylvania, and vicinity, recommending an increase of the pension of Samuel B. Lauffer to $55 per month; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, presented the petition of Silas Hurd, Seth Hurd, Ezra C. Blackman, and James C. Blackman, of Huntington, Fairfield County, Connecticut, praying compensation for damages to their "fishing place" by persons in the employ of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Commander R. F. R. Lewis, of the United States Navy, praying to be restored to his original position on the Navy list; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Amelia Ferguson, of Washington, District of Columbia, praying that a pension be granted to herself and daughter for the long, faithful, and arduous services of her late husband, Professor James Ferguson, of the Naval Observatory, whose life was sacrificed to his zeal in his profession, constant duty, and nightly exposure for a period of over twenty years; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a petition of citizens of Minnesota, praying for such changes in the postal laws as will require the prepayment of postage on all mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of Captain George W. Jackson, of Lewis County, West Virginia, praying for a pension for services rendered in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAYTON presented the petition of Angelina Logan, of Van Buren, Arkansas, praying for compensation for services rendered in a Government hospital; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONOVER presented the petition of Commodore Edward Middleton, praying for compensation for property taken by United States troops in South Carolina during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KELLY presented the petition of John Farrel, Edward Boyle, and 190 others, soldiers in the late war, now residents in Oregon, praying Congress to so amend the homestead law that discharged soldiers can acquire homesteads without residing thereon, and locate the same by agents; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COOPER presented the memorial of the Pharmaceutical Association of Tennessee, asking relief from internal-revenue taxation, as now construed by the Commissioner; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOREMAN presented a petition of citizens of Grant and Pendleton Counties, West Virginia, praying the establishment of a post-route in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM presented the memorial of A. G. Batchelder and Alice F. Thompson, of Lowell, Massachusetts, praying for an extension of a patent for an improvement on railroad car brakes; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying that the postal law may be so amended as to require the prepayment of postage on all matter transmitted through the mails; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. THURMAN presented the memorial of Dr. William Trevitt, former United States consul at Valparaiso, Chili, asking payment of salary and clerk hire; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ROBERTSON presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, in favor of so amending the act of June 3, 1864, providing for a national currency, as to authorize the Comptroller of the Currency to issue to national banks organized under that act an amount of circulating notes or currency which shall be equal to 90 per cent. of the current market value of the United States bonds transferred and delivered by such banks respectively to the Treasurer, without limitation as to the par value of such United States bonds; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, in favor of granting for the use of the militia of that State the citadel in the city of Charleston, now in possession of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina, in favor of an appropriation for rebuilding a wing of the citadel in Charleston, burned while occupied by United States troops; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CARPENTER presented two petitions of citizens of Bent County, Territory of Colorado, representing that a large number of patents to lands lying in that county have been illegally issued to the injury of actual settlers thereon, and under circumstances indicating the criminal misconduct of officers of the Government intrusted with the disposal of those lands, and praying that such fraudulent patents be set aside; that Congress investigate the matters complained of, and that the guilty officials, if any there be, be publicly disclosed; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of Daniel Ivens, M. D., late hospital steward Thirty-sixth Regiment Iowa Infantry, praying compensation for services rendered as assistant surgeon between October 4, 1862, and August 26, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. AMES presented the petition of Dr. William M. Compton, J. M. Stone, and W. C. McAlexander, praying for the passage of an act by Congress relieving them from all liability as sureties on the bond of B. B. Emory, late collector of internal revenue for the third colection district of Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Charles Lanman be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on the Library.

On motion of Mr. BROWNLOW, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Alexander Kennedy be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Sallie E. Herrick, heir-at-law of Percival Everett, a soldier of the Revolution, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Hiram W. Love, praying compensation for cotton destroyed by United States troops during the late war, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. SPENCER, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Annie D. Brooks, widow of the late General W. T. H. Brooks, praying for a pension, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Robert M. Douglas and Stephen A. Douglas be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of the heirs of Nathaniel Heard, an officer in the Army during the revolutionary war, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. THURMAN, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Benjamin D. Lakin be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Charles J. Hansen be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Thomas M. Redd be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Samuel Capron be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. SARGENT, it was Ordered, That Madame A. Don Bernard have leave to withdraw her petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. BOGY, it was Ordered, That Thomas B. Wallace, of Lexington, Missouri, have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. BOGY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Antonio Pelletier be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion of Mr. BOGY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Edward Gallaher be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. BOGY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Chauncy M. Lockwood be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

On motion of Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Charles Pratt, of New Haven, and others be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of W. W. Elliott be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. McCREERY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of William R. Boice, of Kentucky, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Warren & Moore, of Nashville, Tennessee, praying for compensation for the destruction of a building, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Robert Young, of Nashville, Tennessee, praying for compensation for the destruction of a building belonging to him, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of the pastor and members of the Catholic church of Chattanooga, Tennessee, praying for compensation for the use and appropriation of their church building by the forces of the United States, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SCOTT. I inquire of the Senator from Tennessee, as he has asked for several orders withdrawing papers, whether there have been adverse reports in any of those cases?

Mr. COOPER. None; the reports have all been favorable, so far as the cases have been reported upon at all.

Mr. SCOTT. I take this occasion to call the attention of members of the Senate to the forty-ninth rule of the Senate, which prohibits the withdrawal of papers and a reference of them again where there has been an adverse report. It will save the time both of Senators and of committees if that rule is observed, so that the committees will not be called upon to examine the merits of claims when they come within that rule.

Mr. COOPER. So far as these cases were reported upon, the reports were favorable. One or two were not reported upon at all.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 118) explanatory of the ninth section of the act of July 13, 1866, concerning deposits in savings-banks; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 119) for the better security of property in patterns for metal castings; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCHURZ asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 120) to confirm certain land titles in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Private Land-Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 121) granting a pension to Catharine Ferry; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 122) for the relief of Rollin White; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 123) to provide for the transmission of correspondence by telegraph; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 124) providing for the resumption of specie payments and for free banking; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 125) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site and construct thereon a building, to be used as a court-house, post-office, and revenue office, at Austin, Texas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 126) to provide for the payment of bounty to the Fourth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. AMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 127) for the relief of J. M. Stone, William M. Compton, and W. C. McAlexander; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with the accompanying papers, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 128) for the relief of T. C.

Callicot, late special Treasury agent at Charleston, South Carolina, George W. Clark and Alexander McLeod, of South Carolina; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 129) concerning and authorizing the Washington and Saint Louis Railroad Company to extend and construct their railroad into the District of Columbia, and through the States of West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois to the city of Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri, and a branch road from any point they may elect on the main line of their road in the State of Indiana, to the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 130) to remove the disabilities of Thomas S. Bocock, E. J. Harvie, and Daniel Trigg, all of Virginia, and John H. Reagan, of Texas; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not mean to make any objection to two of those names especially, as to which I have heard something; but there are two included in the bill, of which I have heard nothing, although I supposed I had been informed about it. I suggest to Senators that if this bill is not to be referred to a committee, they had better let it be printed and lie over a single day in order that we may see these names and know what they are and have an opportunity to make inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have no objection. I move that the bill be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 131) for the relief of John P. Kelsey; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALCORN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 132) to provide for the construction of levees on the Mississippi River; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORWOOD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 133) for the relief of Thomas Hardeman, jr., of Georgia; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 134) for the relief of Daniel S. Mershon, jr.; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 135) relating to certain public lands bordering on Lake Pontchartrain, in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 136) to repeal the second section of an act entitled "An act to amend an act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789, approved February 5, 1867;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 137) relating to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

M. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 138) making provision for arming and equipping the whole body of the militia of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 139) for the relief of James DeLong, late United States consul at Aux Cayes, Hayti; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committe on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

THE JUDICIARY ACT.

Mr. CARPENTER. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary act, so called, of 1789, is repealed by section 2 of chapter 28 of the laws of 1867; and, if so, whether any and what legislation is required upon the subject; and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to inquire what that refers to.

Mr. CARPENTER. The second section of the act of 1867 is regarded by some as repealing the twenty-fifth section of the act of 1789.

Mr. SUMNER. What does the twenty-fifth section refer to?

Mr. CARPENTER. The twenty-fifth section is in regard to writs of error to State courts. It is thought by some that the act of 1867 has repealed that section.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CUSTOMS FINES, PENALTIES, AND FORFEITURES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate a statement of the several amounts paid to collectors, naval officers, and surveyors of customs, and detectives engaged in that service, on account of distributive shares of fines, penalties, and forfeitures for ten years ending June 30, 1872.

TIMBER ON WESTERN PLAINS.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be directed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act of March 3, 1873, "to encourage the growth of timber on Western prairies," as to require, first, the applicant for the benefits of the act to break and cultivate the requisite number of acres by the end of the first year, and to have the same planted in trees under proper cultivation at the expiration of three years from the day of entry; and, second, to permit any legal subdivisions of the public domain less than a quarter section to be entered under the provisions of said act; and, third, to extend the provisions of the act to tracts of 160 acres composed of legal subdivisions, if contiguous, though taken from different sections, defined by the survey and plats.

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will give notice that after to-morrow he will be absent for several weeks. The notice is given for the purpose of affording the Senate an opportunity to elect a President pro tempore.

THE CURRENCY—SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. If we are through with the morning business, I ask that Senate bill No. 30 be taken up for the purpose of moving its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from Connecticut moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 30) to provide for free banking, to secure an elastic currency, to appreciate national obligations, and to reach specie payments without commercial embarrassment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The bill is very brief, and I should like to have it read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, is hereby declared to be open and free for banking, and any and all persons are at liberty to organize banking associations at such places and with such capital as they shall think proper, in accordance with the provisions of that and other acts relating to national banking.

SEC. 2. That hereafter each and every national banking association may determine for itself the amount of lawful money of the United States that it will keep on hand; but every association shall, on demand, redeem its circulating notes at such localities as are now or may hereafter be designated by law, either in coin, or in United States legal-tender notes, or in United States interest-bearing bonds at par, as such association shall elect.

SEC. 3. That United States legal-tender notes, in sums of $1,000, and its multiple, shall, on demand by the holder thereof, be redeemed by the Treasurer of the United States, either with coin or with United States bonds at par, as he shall elect. The principal of such bonds shall be payable in coin in ——— years from the 1st day of January in the year in which they may be issued, and shall bear interest, payable semi-annually in coin, at the rate of 5 per cent., and shall be free from State and municipal taxation.

SEC. 4. That the principal of any United States bonds bearing interest in coin at a rate not less than 5 per cent. per annum, whether due or not, shall, on demand by the holder thereof, be paid by the Treasurer of the United States in legal-tender notes, and the accrued interest in coin.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds as herein described in denominations not less than $100 and legal-tender notes in denominations not less than $5, and to make all rules and regulations necessary to furnish proof of the lawful issue of such bonds and notes, and for the full execution of all the provisions of this act.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Mr. President, I said a few days since that whenever I should make this motion to refer I would occupy not more than two minutes in making some statements relating to the bill. But I find that it will take me ten or twelve minutes to say as much as many Senators would say in two. I therefore ask a little indulgence.

I will not go into a diagnosis of the financial disease which now affects the interests of the country, but proceed at once to offer a specific. I will not urge it upon the patient by an extended argument, but content myself by stating what I hope may be accomplished if the bill shall become a law.

The bill varies but little from one which I introduced at the last session of Congress. It provides for free banking—a desirable measure, but not without embarrassment and danger Free banking under our present practice of non-redemption would be merely inflation without contraction, or a system without elasticity. It would undoubtedly enhance the prices of nearly every product, make a wider margin between the price of coin and currency than now exists, and would bring more extended commercial embarrassment than we have yet experienced before specie payments could be reached.

In order to guard against such danger there should be a positive redemption of bank-note circulation. That redemption must be more than an exchange of equal values, more than a Government note for a bank note. It must be in that which a note-holder will value more highly than he values the note. It should be in coin or its equivalent. If this can be secured, I see no objection to free banking.

I have, therefore, provided in the bill that banks shall, on demand, redeem their circulation either in coin or in United States bonds bearing interest, or in legal-tender notes, which, by another provision in the bill, can be converted either into coin or bonds.

The bill does not limit the amount of circulation. A limit is not in harmony with, but is incompatible with, elasticity. Currency is used to pay small bills of daily necessity and to settle balances of a more extended business throughout the country. Unless you can determine the amount of those bills and of those balances you cannot determine the amount of currency required. Currency is the instrument by which you move the wheat crop from the West and the cotton crop from the South. To limit the power of this instrument to transfer these crops to market would be as unwise as it would be to limit their production.

The bill also provides that each bank may determine for itself the amount of reserve that it will keep on hand for the purpose of meeting its indebtedness. The merchant, the manufacturer, and the member of Congress determines each for himself how much money he will keep in his hands, or in the bank, in order to meet claims that may be brought against him. Whether he requires as a reserve 5 or 50 per cent. of his indebtedness, he is to judge. No law restrains him. But if he shall misjudge and not keep enough, his credit will suffer, and eventually he may become bankrupt. So, if a bank does not keep a reserve sufficient to meet claims brought against it, its credit will suffer, and the Comptroller of the Currency should adjudge it bankrupt and wind up its business.

The bill also provides for an interchange of legal-tender notes and United States bonds bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.[es] When I introduced a similar bill at the last session of Congress I was of the opinion that interest at the rate of $3\frac{65}{100}$ per cent. would be sufficient. My mind was then resting upon the convenience with which that rate of interest could be calculated, but reflection satisfies me that there is great doubt whether that rate of interest would be sufficient to attract as large an amount of currency as should be retired at particular seasons of the year or at a time of business stagnation. With this plan of interchangeability there would be no increase of the principal of the debt of the Government. There could be no issue of bonds until there should be a decrease of the currency, and no increase of currency until there should be a corresponding reduction of bonds. This interchangeability would give elasticity to the currency such as we have never known. Those who are in favor of expansion can support this bill. It will expand the currency. Those who advocate contraction can approve this bill. It will contract the currency. It is a ship sharp both at prow and stern, and can be propelled either way by the demands of internal commerce. It will also encourage and stimulate domestic industry so as to increase our productions and send them to a foreign market. This would lead us on in the direct road to a specie basis.

But we cannot maintain specie payments by any power of the will or by direct legislation. The laws of trade are stronger than the will of Senators or the statutes of Congress. Coin, being the recognized standard of value throughout the civilized world will flow into the coffers of the creditor nation. It is required only to pay balances, and when the national clearing house adjusts the debits and credits the balance will go in coin to the creditor nation. We are to-day the debtor nation, and cannot maintain specie payment, unless we are able to buy coin at the market price. Ability is requisite to the maintenance of specie payments. How, then, shall we change our relations with the commercial world so as to become a creditor nation?

All that legislation can do is to adopt some national policy which will enable us to produce and send abroad more products in value than we import.

The bill insists that both the Government and the national banks shall redeem their notes in coin if they can and will, but if they cannot or will not, that they shall redeem them in that which is worth more than their notes—that is, in United States interest-bearing bonds. This ready convertibility would give a value to currency, which would be determined by the value of the bonds. Their value is now much higher than that of currency, and will appreciate by the passage of this bill.

They will be in demand by banks, both to secure and to redeem circulation, for temporary and permanent investments, and as a reserve for savings-banks to save them from an unexpected run.

With such a demand they must appreciate to within a fraction of par in coin, and the holder of notes, instead of paying a premium of 10 per cent. for coin, would by this means secure it for a fraction of 1 per cent.

This bill will not interfere with any other measures which Congress may adopt to increase our foreign commerce, or with those natural laws of trade which may eventually cause specie to flow from other countries into the hands of our own citizens; on the contrary, when that time shall come our bonds will be worth a premium in coin, and we shall be able to negotiate others at par bearing a lower rate of interest.

I commend the bill to the favorable consideration of the Finance Committee and of the Senate. Should it become a law, I shall anticipate the realization of the objects named in its title, such as free banking, an elastic currency, an appreciation of national obligations, and a near approach to specie payments without commercial embarrassment.

The honorable Secretary of the Treasury, during the recent panic, gave his testimony to the importance of one of the main provisions of the bill in attempting to break the force of the storm by exchanging legal-tender notes for bonds. But as his power to issue was limited to the fourteen millions of legal-tender notes which he had on hand, he failed to give the needed relief. Had the power to issue been as unlimited as the demand, he could have broken the force of the gale. But the events of the last ninety days have shown the necessity of these measures, and furnish a much stronger argument in favor of the passage of the bill than any that I can present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What disposition does the Senator ask shall be made of the bill?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I understand another Senator proposes to address the Senate upon it, and I therefore withdraw my motion to refer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table for the present.

TRADE WITH CANADA.

Mr. MORTON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to the Senate the amount of imports from the provinces composing the Dominion of Canada to the United States for the years 1871 and 1872, and the amount of the exports to the same provinces from the United States for the same years, and the amount of exports and imports between the United States and the same provinces for the two years preceding the termination of the reciprocity treaty.

I ask to have the resolution lie on the table with a view at some future time of submitting some remarks upon it in regard to the relations existing between the Dominion of Canada and the United States and the Dominion of Canada and England.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CONKLING. Unless some Senator has something to present to the Senate of special moment, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at one o'clock and four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 9, 1873.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Journal of Monday, which embraces the introduction of numerous bills by members merely for reference, will be read only so far as the mention of the name of the member who introduced the bill, omitting the titles of bills and other merely formal proceedings relating thereto; otherwise the reading of the Journal will take up most of the time of Tuesday's session.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Journal of yesterday was read as it was agreed it should be, and approved.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

Mr. G. F. HOAR, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported a bill (H. R. No. 477) to establish an educational fund, and to apply the proceeds of the public lands to the education of the people; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. G. F. HOAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLERKS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BUFFINTON, from the Committee on Accounts, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That authority is hereby given for the appointment of clerks, by such committees as were authorized to employ clerks in the last Congress, at the compensation paid for that service, such compensation not to apply to any of the recesses of Congress: Provided, That the Committees on Agriculture and Manufactures shall have a clerk jointly; and the Committee on War Claims shall have authority to employ a clerk on the same conditions, at the usual rate of compensation.

Mr. DAWES. Will my colleague state how many committees were authorized to employ clerks at the last session of Congress?

Mr. BUFFINTON. This resolution authorizes the committees to employ clerks which were allowed to employ clerks during the Forty-second Congress.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BUFFINTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at fifteen minutes past twelve o'clock, and reports from committees are in order, beginning with the Committee on Elections. But the Committee on Elections are not expected to report during the morning hour privileged business which, under the rules, they can report at any time.

THE LOAN OF 1858.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 478) to provide for the redemption of the loan of 1858; which was read a first and second time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purpose of redeeming the bonds issued under the act entitled "An act to authorize a loan not exceeding the sum of twenty millions of dollars," approved June 14, 1858, as amended March 3, 1859, called the loan of 1858, it is hereby declared to be the pleasure of the United States to pay all of the coupon bonds of said loan of 1858, as well as the registered bonds of said issue, on the 1st day of January, 1874, at which date all interest thereon shall cease; and money in the Treasury sufficient to carry into effect the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated therefor.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury may issue an equal amount at par, of principal and interest, of the 5 per cent. bonds of the funded loan under the act to fund the national debt, approved July 14, 1870, and the act amendatory thereof, approved June 20, 1871, for such of said bonds of the loan of 1858 as the holders thereof may, on or before February 1, 1874, elect to exchange for 5 per cent. bonds of the funded loan, with interest from said January 1, provided no commission or allowance whatever shall be paid for the exchange of bonds hereby authorized.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask my colleague, the chairman of the committee, to permit me to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill of the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I will yield for that purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it is hereby declared to be the pleasure of the United States to pay the outstanding bonds issued under the act to authorize a loan not exceeding the sum of $20,000,000, approved June 14, 1858, as amended March 3, 1859, on the 1st day of January, 1874; and money in the Treasury sufficient to carry this intention into effect, to pay said bonds is, hereby appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to my colleague to put instead of the word "money" the word "gold."

Mr. KELLEY. I prefer to let it stand as it is. But I have no objection to the word "coin" being inserted.

Mr. RANDALL. It was negotiated to be paid in coin, and for the credit of the country should be paid in coin.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, a few days since I asked the House to pass a bill of similar import, which came from the other branch. That bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and upon careful consideration the committee has applied itself to guard assiduously the prerogative of Congress.

And while in reference to such bills as these there has not been a uniformity of precedents, the House will remember that in the last Congress there was some trouble, because the other branch sought to put out of sight the whole distinction between the House of Representatives and the Senate in the matter of money bills, and a considerable discussion arose between the two Houses upon their respective powers under the Constitution. It was thought, in order to avoid all that discussion, and not to establish any precedent or yield any right of the House, that it was best to report to the House an original bill.

The bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means differs from the one which was before the House only in minor particulars, calculated to guard more effectually the object of the bill than the language of the bill which came from the Senate did, so as to meet the reasonable objections which were raised in different parts of the House while that bill was under discussion.

It makes no other provision than was in that bill except this: it provides in the first instance for the appropriation of money—coin—for the full amount of these bonds. It then provides in the second section for the authority in the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange for these bonds any of the 5 per cent. loan that any holder of these bonds may wish. It proclaims in the first instance, to the country and to the world, that the Government is ready, and has the means, to meet in gold all of its obligations as they may become due. It then provides, in the second section, that if any holder of these bonds prefers a 5 per cent. bond of the United States to gold, he can have it at par, without cost to the Government of the United States to effect the change.

That is the only difference between this bill and the substitute which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has offered. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, solicitous, as well he may be, that the credit of the Government shall not be impaired, has offered as a substitute simply the provision that the Government shall say, "We are ready to meet our bonds whenever they shall become due." The bill before the House does that. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in his substitute, is unwilling to add to that authority that if any man, the holder of the bonds that have become due, is willing to take at par a bond of equal interest running twenty years, he shall have the authority to make that exchange.

Mr. RANDALL. They are both 5 per cents.

Mr. DAWES. The committee are of opinion that it is wise, under all the circumstances, to give that authority to the Treasury, with every advantage which can come to the Government of the United States from the open proclamation of law, that we are ready to meet our obligations as already embraced in this bill. To take twenty millions of gold from the Treasury on the 1st day of January, unless it be to meet our obligations, would be, under all the circumstances in which the country stands to-day, a matter that I think no gentleman would desire to have done.

The Secretary of the Navy, in a communication to Congress yesterday, called upon us to make an extra appropriation. There is now of gold in the Treasury upon which there is no demand but about fifty-three million of dollars. That was the amount yesterday. If you take twenty millions of that fifty-three at once out of the Treasury, you have also to hold the Treasury in readiness to meet any call that may be made upon it, and to meet any extraordinary appropriations, which it is barely possible we may be called upon to make. When men holding these twenty millions of bonds stand ready to say "We would rather have your 5 per cent. loan than have your gold," it does not seem to me that wisdom of administration in any regard calls upon us to say to them, "We will not do it; but we will rather take these twenty millions to-day out of the Treasury of the United States to pay you." I know very well that if we had no extraordinary demand likely to be made upon the Treasuay—if we were hoarding gold—it might be quite right for us to say we will pay it out to meet these bonds. But we have outstanding three hundred and fifty millions, more or less, of paper that we do not pay, that men are carrying around in the transaction of business without any interest from the Government; and if we have any more gold than is necessary to meet the present demands of the Government, I think it is due to the faith of this Government, I think it is due to its credit, not only in the markets of the world but with its own citizens, that while our own demand notes, promisingto pay in gold, are floating about the country, disturbing all channels of business, we should not, instead of paying our promises that are due, take gold out of the Treasury to pay those who do not prefer gold to bonds.

But it is not necessary for us to discuss this. The bill itself contains no provision in conflict with the substitute offered by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] and it has all the merits the bill he proposes has. It has simply a second section which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, not upon his option, but upon the option of the holder of the bond, who says, "I would rather have your bond than your gold," to make that arrangement; and to my mind if we should exchange this twenty-million loan for twenty millions of our 5 per cent. bonds, when we hold the gold in our hands, and tender it to the bondholder, it is a proclamation to the world, if the holders of the twenty millions should prefer bonds rather than gold, which will have a more beneficial effect upon our credit than any declaration we can make.

Therefore it is, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Ways and Means prefer the adoption of the bill they have reported to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

In the discussion the other day a question was raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in reference to commissions that were paid, as he supposed, to the syndicate in the negotiation of the Geneva award. I took occasion to say, Mr. Speaker, on that day, that whatever might have been demanded by the syndicate for commission, not a dollar of commission was paid. I desire to state further, that no man, whether belonging to the syndicate or not, ever made any claim upon the United States for any commission in that transaction, and no dollar was paid by the United States. The inference the public press drew from the transaction, that it was a part of the business of the syndicate, arose simply from this: that Great Britian employed some of the gentlemen, who are also in the syndicate, to transact this business for them at their expense, and, without the cost of a mill to the Government of the United States, the fifteen and a half million dollars was deposited in our Treasury and invested in 5 per cent. bonds, as it has been heretofore reported.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] desires to offer an amendment to the original bill, and I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move to amend the second section by striking out the words "with interest from said January 1."

Mr. DAWES. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is not without great deference to the opinions of my colleagues on the committee that I propose a substitute for their bill; but I do it under a sense of duty, and not, I trust, without sufficient reason. I think the time has come when the American people and Government are masters of the situation, and should take the control of the financial affairs of the Government. We may hitherto have been under such conditions as compelled us to bow to circumstances. I think those conditions have passed away, and the time has come when we may and should ask the question whether we should do any act the tendency of which will be either to increase our gold-bearing indebtedness or perpetuate it.

While I admit the correctness of the statement of my excellent friend, the chairman of the committee, that the bill of the committee does not propose to increase the amount of such indebtedness, I maintain that it does propose to perpetuate it to the extent of $20,000,000; that it does propose to saddle the enterprise, the industry, the productive power of this country, with the annual payment for the next twenty years of $1,000,000 in gold, while the money with which to extinguish those bonds and relieve the country of that annual lien upon its production lies dead in the Treasury; and, again, that it proposes to do this while the American people are not only willing but anxious to lend the Government, at a low rate of interest, on certificates of deposit such as were issued during the war, or on convertible bonds, hundreds of millions of dollars with which to redeem not only the loan under consideration, but hundreds of millions of dollars of bonds the interest on which is 6 per cent. gold.

While we shall continue to owe, as we now do, $99,000,000 annually of gold interest, the industry, the workshop, and the farms of this country, will be, as they now are, enslaved by the money-changes, bankers, and brokers of the world.

The gentleman says that promises to pay a gold dollar are floating about, and bringing us to shame because we are not prepared to redeem them and keep the promise. I would like to see one of those promises to redeem a greenback with gold. They embody no such promise. They promise to pay a dollar; and a dollar is what the sovereign power has declared shall be a dollar. There is no promise to pay gold on the face of any of them, and there is no repudiation of a promise so long as they secure a dollar or are applicable as legal tender in the payment of debts to both the Government and citizens. But these remarks are incidental, and have been made in response to the suggestion of the gentleman.

Sir, let me in the first place remark that we owe $2,000,000,00 of gold-bearing funded debt, and that it is whispered—nay, is proclaimed everywhere by certain distinguished gentlemen—that we are ready to resume specie payments. Here is a debt of $20,000,000, or 1 per cent. of the whole. Why shall it not be paid? But let us speak of this loan as it will be spoken of in London and continental exchanges by the men who will deal with it. They will speak of it as a loan of four million pounds sterling. We are ready to pay it, and so declare, says the gentleman, in the bill. The first section of the committee's bill does declare that we are ready to pay it; aye, and so we are; and so I wish to announce to the world, without qualification or reservation; but the second section of the bill begs the holders, with most persuasive suggestions, not to try our ability by presenting their bonds for redemption. I say, let us proclaim to the dealers in credit that we are not only ready but determined to pay this loan of four million pounds sterling; that we are not, like Turkey and the states of Central America, compelled to go into the London money-market for a petty loan like that. The money is in the Treasury. Why not vindicate our credit by applying it to this purpose? There was at the close of last month more than $83,000,000 in gold in the Treasury, with a steadily rising balance. Permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman is not strictly correct in saying that there are but $53,000,000 in the Treasury that are not subject to demand. There will be, after the 1st of January next, a call for $25,000,000, but that is a future demand.

Mr. DAWES. I will give the gentleman every dollar that is in the Treasury now subject to call over $53,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY. I am afraid that the proposition is something like the offer by Satan of all the kingdoms of the world.

Mr. DAWES. Fifty-three million two hundred and sixty-six thousand four hundred and forty-seven dollars and ninety-four cents is every dollar of gold in the Treasury not subject to call.

Mr. KELLEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I know that I have here the Secretary of the Treasury's monthly report of gold in the Treasury at the close of November, and that there have been no payments since; but in an interview with him yesterday I was told there would be a call for $25,000,000 next month; and I prefer to take the Secretary of the Treasury's published report to any statement of figures which I have not time to analyze that may be presented even by my respected chairman. But be the fact as it may, our people are ready to furnish means for the payment of this and larger loans if we will permit them. How willing and anxious they are to do this has been often and abundantly shown.

At the close of the financial year on the 30th of June, 1866, we had $120,176,196 loaned to us at 6, 5, and 4 per cent. currency interest by the American people on call, at ten days' notice. We forced them to take up their loan in order that we might pay 6 per cent. gold for the $120,000,000. We then, under the act of 1868, issued $75,000,000 of 3 per cent. certificates, the 3 per cent. payable in paper, and the people took them all and held them as long as the wisdom of Congress and successive administrations would permit them to hold them. But it was again deemed cheaper and better for the Government to pay 6 per cent. in gold to foreigners than 3 per cent. in paper to our own people, and we forced them to take up that loan also. It is true we have since had the grace to try and reduce that 6 per cent. to 5 per cent.; but thus has the fact been proven, in all our distresses, that the American people were ready to loan us hundreds of millions of dollars whenever we would allow them to do it, whether the temporary loan certificates were payable on demand, or on call at ten days' notice. Sir, had we had the wisdom to allow the American people to carry our loan as the British people carry the British loan, and the French people that of France, we could have had no crisis, and certainly no such crisis as we are now enduring. Our industries are paralyzed and our men of enterprise bankrupted because we so far repudiate our own dollar as to refuse to accept it as a loan even at a low rate of interest, when business is inactive; while the crops are maturing, or while navigation is closed by ice, there is therefore no legitimate employment for the full volume of our currency.

The Government will not receive it as a loan with which to purchase gold-bearing 6 per cents, and pay even 3 per cent. currency interest for its use. And what is the result? Hundreds of millions that would be at the service of the Government seek employment elsewhere, and find their way into banks to earn a small rate of interest, and find their way into that vortex, that maelstrom of America business, Wall street. They are deposited on call by their owners at low rates of interest at distant points, and come eastward or north by stages at increasing rates. The farmer or planter first deposits at the local bank; this bank forwards them to a bank or banker at the capital of the State in which the deposit is made; then they are forwarded, perhaps through intermediate banks, to a bank in New York; whence they go to the broker, and through him to the street. In each case they are deposited on call. Thus are banking credits compounded. Had the Government had, as it ought always to have, temporary loan certificates on convertible bonds, the September crash could not have occurred. How was it produced? When the time came that original or intermediate depositors wanted their money, the irresponsible people or institutions to whom it had been intrusted could not return it. Panic ensued, and the productive power of the country was paralyzed; and, to intensify the panic, the national banks of New York made a worse failure than has ever been made by banks in this country, for they refused to pay even their own notes to their depositors, but pooled their assets and paid in bank certificates, with which their customers—the owners of the money, with which they transacted business and earned dividends—might go and buy their own notes, the notes of these very banks if they could get them. There has, I repeat, never been so disgraceful a failure of banks as this. And I also repeat that the failure came about because the Congress of the United States has deemed it cheaper and more patriotic to borrow at 6 per cent. gold interest than to take its own money as a loan from its own people at a low rate of interest.

Now, sir, in conclusion I say that it is unbecoming this great country to palter about the redemption of a $20,000,000 loan. The money must lie sequestered in the Treasury from the time the bill shall become a law. We declare that the loan shall be paid, and therefore the fund to pay it must be sequestered; it may not be used by the Government for any purpose, whether of peace or war; it will be withdrawn from the control of the Secretary. Yet we are to allow the holders of the bonds a month at least to chaffer and test the market, and then, if they please, having extended the loans one month by securing them interest for that time, if they shall determine to change to another bond they will graciously avail themselves of our courtesy and come in and make the exchange. I trust Congress will not put the country in any such humiliating position. I trust it will not impair our credit abroad, by leaving any cynic to suggest a doubt of our ability to pay $20,000,000, and will at an early day provide legitimate employment in the interest of the Government and the people for the currency of the country, by reviving the system of temporary loans, with which to buy gold-bearing bonds, or the gold with which to call them home from Europe and redeem them. Thus can we relieve ourselves from the obligations to foreigners which prevent our use of coin as part of our currency, and prevent the concentration in Wall street of the balances and reserves of the banks of the entire country.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania on my left [Mr. RANDALL] would like to have the word "money" changed into the word "coin." I will move that amendment, but I have not the right to accept it, as this is a report of a committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Allow me just a word.

Mr. DAWES. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. This loan was contracted in what I may term "coin" times. It was given to the country in coin, or the representative of coin; and there is an honest and equitable reason that it should be paid in the same. I prefer the bill as reported by the majority of the Committee of Ways and Means to that of my colleague, [Mr. KELLEY;] first, because they declare that if the holders of these bonds, due January 1, 1874, shall desire coin they shall receive it. I cannot conceive of any objection which this Government can make to the holders of this loan, if they shall desire it, receiving a bond at the same rate of interest; that is, at 5 per cent., the principal and interest of which, under the law, is made payable in coin.

I am unable to see why they cannot do so. That will not necessarily take coin out of the Treasury, unless the man who holds this loan shall want the coin; if he does, of course he will have it.

Another thing: the current of coin is now in this direction—toward this country. Our exports are in excess of our imports. There is not a drain on this country for gold from Europe, where, I am informed, the most of these bonds are held. Therefore it seems to me that we shall be enabled to redeem this loan by the bonds which we now have to place, at 5 per cent.

I prefer the word "coin" in preference to the word "money," because the word "money" has now become somewhat ambiguous. When you tell these holders that you are ready to pay this debt as you contracted it, in coin, they will be less inclined to take the coin. That has always been the experience of every one in such cases.

Mr. DAWES. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

Mr. WOOD. It appears to me that this question is a very narrow one, as between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.] I think a plain statement of the facts will, of itself, be a conclusive argument to this House as to whether they should adopt this bill or the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.]

On the 1st day of January next will mature the obligations of this Government to the amount of $20,000,000, which must be paid. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his report sent to us last week, refers specifically to these obligations, telling us that there were two kinds of bonds issued, registered bonds and coupon bonds, making in the aggregate this $20,000,000 authorized under the act of 1858 and 1859.

He also states that he has reason to believe that it is within his power to negotiate some of the 5 per cent. bonds authorized under the act of 1870, in redemption or in payment of the bonds maturing on the 1st of January. The bill sent to us from the Senate has two sections with two provisions; first, that we will pay these bonds upon the 1st of January; the second, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized in payment of these bonds to substitute the 5 per cent. bonds of 1870, he having no such authority under existing laws; because the law authorizing the refunding of the public debt confines him exclusively to the 6 per cent. outstanding bonds, and makes no particular reference of these bonds.

The bill reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] from the Committee on Ways and Means goes further than the Senate bill. It not only provides for the payment of these bonds; it proposes to give the Secretary of the Treasury permission to exchange the bonds, and at the same time guards the question of interest (which we are now taught to believe is an important element in the exchange of bonds) as between 5 per cent. and 6 per cent.; for we know by experience that where bonds are exchanged ostensibly at par, the exchanger, and not the Government, gets the benefit of accrued interest, equal to 1, 2, or 3 per cent.

But now the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] comes in and wishes to deprive the Secretary of the right to make this exchange. He says that these maturing bonds ought to be paid. He would not give the Secretary the power to make the exchange at all, but would take the money out of the Treasury to pay these twenty million dollars' worth of bonds. Now, Mr. Speaker, is the money in the Treasury unless we appropriate it and put it there for that purpose? I think not. I think the experience of the Government within the last three months is that it has not had money enough wherewith to pay its accruing liabilities, without encroaching upon the reserve, which heretofore has been entirely sacred; and we have reason to believe that thirteen of the forty-four millions of the reserve have been necessarily taken by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of meeting expenditures under the appropriations made by Congress.

But the gentleman tells us that, according to the balance-sheet of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the 1st of last December he had this amount. Does not the gentleman know that every dollar of that coin and that currency, returned as cash in hand, has a specific use and a specific purpose, and that to divert it to another purpose, entirely foreign to the objects for which it was placed there and is held there, would be a violation of duty by the Secretary of the Treasury, as it would be a violation of the law?

But, sir, I can readily understand why the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to take money out of the Treasury. It is because he wants an excuse for further taxing the people, for the purpose of putting the money back again into the Treasury.

Mr. KELLEY. I am as much opposed to an increase of taxation as is the gentleman from New York, and shall fight shoulder to shoulder with him against any such increase.

Mr. WOOD. I can attribute no motive to the gentleman in desiring to pay the money when we can pay bonds, except the desire to take money from the Treasury, which he, as a common-sense man, knows the people must be taxed to put there again. Whether it be raised by direct internal taxation or by tariff imposts, the money must come from the people. Therefore I am opposed to the doctrine of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am in favor of refunding our existing public debt. I am in favor of converting these 5 per cents as fast as we can into permanent obligations of the Government, to be paid by another generation, instead of the present.

Mr. DAWES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I cannot discuss this whole question in five minutes, but I can state it. We owe $20,000,000 of bonds issued in 1858, payable on the 1st day of January next. This bill provides in its first section that we shall pay the money on that day if the holders want it; if it is not demanded we provide that the interest upon the debt will cease on that day; and we prohibit the payment of any commission to anybody for making either settlements or transfers; but we provide in addition, by another section, that if the holders of these bonds prefer, instead of the money, to take our 5 per cent. bonds authorized by the law of 1870–'71, at any time before the 1st day of February, they shall have that privilege. That is the whole bill; its provisions are plain, simple, and easily understood.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] says that we ought not to give the holders of our 1858 bonds that privilege; that we ought to pay the debt in gold on the 1st day of January next. The remainder of the committee are, I believe, all opposed to such a course, because we are advised that our creditors do not want the money, and because, if we make payment of that debt in gold now, we must raise that much more money by taxation from the people. Already the Secretary of the Treasury has told us that he needs a large amount of money now for contingencies that may arise. Other departments of the Government are calling for means. We are seeking to put all our debts on a 5 per cent. basis; and why should we not put these obligations in that form if the holders of the debt are willing? I do not say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to impose additional taxation upon the people, but I do say that all men who desire to increase tariff taxation, all men who seek to impose additional burdens upon the people, would be glad to have this money taken out of the Treasury, that we may be compelled to raise from the tax-payers the ways and means necessary for running the Government.

I am one of those who believe that, in the present condition of the country, the Government ought not to pay any part of the principal of the public debt beyond keeping up the sinking fund as at present established. I would keep sacred the sinking fund of 1 per cent. But when it is perfectly certain that the property of the country will double in value in ten years, as it always has done and always will do, I see no sense in taking from the people by taxation (for it all has to come from there at last) money worth to them at least 10 per cent., to pay a debt that is bearing only 5 per cent. interest, when the people holding this 5 per cent. debt do not want it.

Suppose, Mr. Speaker, you are to-day worth $100,000, and owe $10,000, or 10 per cent. of what you are worth. Suppose it is perfectly certain that ten years from now you will be worth $200,000, by your present property doubling its value in that time as the wealth of the country does. You can well afford to pay the interest upon that debt for ten years, at the end of which time your indebtedness will have diminshed one-half in its relation to your means of payment, being then only 5 per cent. of your property. That is the meaning of this proposition. If the money is worth more to the people than 5 per cent., as it assuredly is, why should we not give them an opportunity to let the debt run, when the burden is diminishing every day by the increase of our wealth?

I think we have guarded this bill as well as we can. I differ with my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] and there is the only point of difficulty I have. I do not like to admit that the principal of these bonds shall be paid in gold. By the legal-tender act of 1862, all debts contracted before, as well as afterward, were made payable in the currency of the country, and the Supreme Court, the final arbiter, whether wisely or not, have so decided; and every "greenback" dollar you have in your pockets contains the indorsement on its back that it shall be receivable at its face value for all debts and demands, public and private, except customs duties and interest on the public debt. The 5-20 bonds were authorized by the same act which created the legal-tender notes, and were bought with and made payable in these notes.

I have always regarded, and now regard, the act of March, 1869, which pretended to strengthen the public credit, as the greatest outrage, financially, ever committed by Congress. Under its provisions the Administration has undertaken to pay these greenback bonds in gold. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his report to this Congress, shows that he has paid $363,000,000 for $323,000,000 of bonds purchased, thereby taking from the hard earnings of the people $40,000,000, which has been paid to the bondholders, who have no more right to it than I have; and the wrong is going on, and will continue until we repeal that law, which never had any legal force or effect except to furnish an excuse to perpetrate this great wrong.

The wrong is aggravated by the fact that these enormous sums have been, and will be, paid to men who bought these bonds with greenbacks at par when they were not worth over 50 or 60 cents on the dollar.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not the case with these bonds.

Mr. BECK. It is not the case with these few bonds, as I have said; but we have paid for $323,000,000 worth of bonds $363,000,000. We had to pay for them in gold when every private man who had due him any private debt or any debt from the Government, no matter how sacred, was obliged to take these legal-tender obligations at par. I wish to say further, that we cannot even approach the resumption of specie payment so long as the Government refuses to take its own paper in payment of its demands on the people. We have collected over $200,000,000 annually from customs duties, demanding payment in gold, when we do not need, for the purposes of the Government to pay its gold interest, at the utmost, more than one hundred, I believe now only ninety-six millions of dollars. We are, and have been by this process, repudiating our own paper for the purpose of increasing our tariff by indirection to the extent of the premium on gold. We have by this means been enabling our bondholders to sell their bonds and the gold interest paid thereon for the highest rates, and have been enabling the national banks to get more, by the premium on their interest, than they are entitled to, and our policy has been such as to enable Government officials, by our surplus gold, to control the money market in New York and elsewhere whenever they want to enrich their friends or break their enemies.

Sir, these things ought not to be, and while I admit we do pay the bonds provided for by this bill in gold, because we cannot help it, I wish to say this bill is fair in every other regard. It stops the payment of interest on the 1st of January, paying no commissions to anybody, continuing the debt at 5 per cent., thus enabling us to use the money in the Treasury instead of imposing additional taxation upon the people. The panic in the money market has reduced our income from customs duties, while almost every business in the country has fallen off. Our expenses are, I fear, likely to increase; they certainly are not going to diminish, and we must raise money some way. The Committee on Ways and Means do not wish to be forced, if these gentlemen are willing to take 5 per cent. bonds, to prevent them doing so and impose additional taxation upon the people when the money which we take from them is worth to them 10 per cent., and these bonds bear 5. That is all I have to say.

Mr. DAWES. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BURCHARD. The principal difference between the proposition presented by the Committee on Ways and Means and that presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is, that the committee's bill gives to the bondholders who hold bonds of the issue of 1858 a right to exchange and invest, if they so elect, in the bonds authorized by the acts of 1870 and 1871. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not, as I understand him, cut off by his substitute the right of the holders of the bonds of 1858 to subscribe for the bonds of the funded loan after they have received their money for the bonds of the loan of 1858. He only provides that they shall first receive their money—that they shall go through the process of presenting the bonds of the loan of 1858 at the Treasury of the United States, receiving the money for them; and then, if they choose, they can subscribe for any part of the loan of the $200,000,000 which has not yet been negotiated. He provides in that way they may obtain these bonds of the funded loan. The proposition of the committee, on the contrary, is this, that these bonds of the loan of 1858 may be presented for exchange.

Mr. KELLEY. I beg leave to say to the gentleman that these $200,000,000 of outstanding bonds cannot be taken for money at par, but are held for exchange for 6 per cent. bonds.

Mr. BURCHARD. This proposition is that they may have the privilege of exchanging these bonds on the presentation of those bonds at the Treasury. We are credibly informed that the holders of these bonds desire that exchange; that they are willing to present bonds of the loan of 1858 and receive 5 per cent. bonds of the funded loan in exchange; and therefore the committee have reported, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, that this exchange may take place.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one remark in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] which perhaps is foreign to this discussion. It is this: The promise of the Government to pay a dollar when it issues a legal-tender note is a promise to pay a gold coin dollar. I am supported in that statement by the express and unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in 7 Wallace, an extract from which I send to the Clerk to be read. It is 7 Wallace, page 30, Bank against The Supervisors, opinion of Chief Justice Chase.

The Clerk read as follows:

The dollar note is an engagement to pay a dollar, and the dollar intended is the coined dollar of the United States; a certain quantity in weight and fineness of gold or silver, authenticated as such by the stamp of the Government. No other dollars had before been recognized by the legislation of the National Government as lawful money.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say one word in regard to the amendment I have proposed to the bill. It is simply this: The proposition is to exchange these bonds at par; but on the bonds of the funded loan for which they are proposed to be issued interest is to be allowed, by the terms of this bill, from the 1st of January. It will allow nearly one hundred thousand dollars of interest. Then the money is required, by law, to be set apart in the United States Treasury, and must be held there, subject to the option of those gentlemen to take it or not, for thirty days, while waiting to take advantage of the Wall street market.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to know of the Chair what time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seventeen minutes of his hour left.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] allow me to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD?] I did not hear distinctly the point of his argument, but it appears to me that the gentleman overlooked the fact that in 12 Wallace, in the legal-tender cases there, the court asserted this:

The acts of Congress known as the legal tender are constitutional when applied to contracts made before their passage. Hepburn vs. Griswold (8 Wallace, 603) on this point overruled.

Mr. BURCHARD. I understand the decision of the court to be this: That the promise of an individual is not to pay coin dollars, but the promise of the Government of the United States, which it makes on every legal-tender note, is a promise to pay a coin dollar, and that the Government could make no other promise than to pay its own coin dollars. That is what I understand to be that decision. But in regard to the amendment I have proposed, I desire merely to say that, if the bill is passed as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, it will give the investers in these bonds an option according to what the state of the market in New York may be for one month. They have that time to hold their bonds and to elect, the Government keeping the money appropriated for the redemption of these bonds; and if they choose at the end of that time to exchange the bonds, they have the option of adding interest back to the 1st day of January, being allowed thirty days' interest, which I do not believe is necessary for the success of the exchange, and for that reason I have offered the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to say one word, Mr. Speaker, upon the point suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman does not mean to say that the bill authorizes the payment of double interest; but he says that if we give notice to these parties that upon the 1st day of February if they desire to exchange these bonds they may do so, we ought to stop the interest on the 1st day of January. The bill allows these bonds, if they run to the 1st day of February, to draw interest from that time. We do not desire to deprive the holders of simple interest on this indebtedness.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, to cover this whole ground by reading to the House the first statute signed by the present Executive at the commencement of his administration, the earliest action of the two Houses of Congress which met the present Executive, and which is a proclamation, not only to this country, but to all holders of bonds of the United States, and to all parties interested in and affected by the credit of the United States of what the Committee on Ways and Means desire to stand by and call upon the House to stand by:

Be it enacted, &c., That in order to remove any doubt as to the purpose of the Government to discharge all just obligations to the public creditors, and to settle conflicting questions and interpretations of the law by virtue of which such obligations have been contracted, it is hereby provided and declared, that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin, or its equivalent, of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes, and of all the interest-bearing obligations, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligations has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money, or in other currency than gold and silver; but none of the said interest-bearing obligations not already due shall be redeemed or paid before maturity, unless at such time as United States notes shall be convertible into coin, at the option of the holder, or unless at such time as bonds of the United States bearing a lower rate of interest than the bonds to be redeemed can be sold at par in coin; and the United States solemnly pledges its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of United States notes in coin.

I now move to amend the bill by striking out the word "money," and inserting the word "coin;" and then I will call the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire the same amendment to be made in the substitute I have offered—the insertion of the word "coin" instead of "money."

Mr. RANDALL. That dismisses every doubt.

Mr. GARFIELD. I propose to offer an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and desire to have an opportunity of speaking to it now or in the hour which may be allowed after the seconding of the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The amendments now being offered are by favor, not by right.

Mr. DAWES. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio would be in order, I presume, as an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. GARFIELD. I want it as an amendment to the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will come in as an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] which will be again read.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

Amend section 2 by striking out the words "with interest from said January first."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 41, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question was next on the amendment of Mr. DAWES, to strike out the word "money" and insert the word "coin."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I supposed that I had, under the rule, the right to occupy some time after the seconding of the previous question. All that I desire, however, is to have two or three minutes to yield to another gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has an hour.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire an hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to have the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] again reported.

The substitute was again read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires to modify the substitute so as to correspond with the original bill as modified, by striking out the word "money" and inserting "coin;" and that modification will be made by the Clerk.

Mr. MAYNARD. In connection with the word "coin," I would suggest that we say "gold coin."

Mr. DAWES. Oh, no; it is too late to amend; but "coin" is the right word. That is the currency of the world. If any one wants $5 in change, I presume he will be accommodated.

The Clerk then read the amendment offered by Mr. GARFIELD to Mr. KELLEY's substitute, as follows:

And to provide for the existing deficiency in the revenues, and for the further deficiency which will be produced by the payment herein required, the following duties are hereby levied (to take effect on and after the 1st day of January, 1874) on the following articles of merchandise imported into the United States, to wit:

On tea, 5 cents per pound.

On coffee, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. KELLEY. I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane; it is to introduce a tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania raises the point of order that the amendment is not germane. The Chair thinks the point is well taken, and sustains it.

Mr. DAWES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to speak to what would have been his amendment if it had been in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARFIELD. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is before the House, and it has been sufficiently debated in most of its features; but I wanted to call the attention of the House to this particular feature, that at the very moment in which he is now proposing to do that thing, our expenditures are beyond the revenues; that the revenues last month have fallen off so as to make a deficit for the month just closed of over $9,000,000; and in this condition of deficit, in this condition of reduction of revenue to that extent, the gentleman proposes that the United States shall not extend its payment on the 1st day of January next to those who desire it; that a loan now offered to the American people in the nature of refunding shall be prohibited from these persons who are the holders of $20,000,000 of certificates. He proposes that instead of allowing them to take the 5 per cent. loan, we shall take $20,000,000 out of the Treasury and pay it to them.

Mr. KELLEY. Does not the original bill give them the same alternative?

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, I was desirous of coupling an extraordinary appropriation with extraordinary means of paying it. It seemed to me that if $20,000,000 in gold were to be thus taken from the Treasury, we ought to provide for putting $20,000,000 into it. I think that if the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to prevail it ought to be coupled with the proposition I offered. I was aware that if the gentleman chose to make the point of order it could be ruled out; but I supposed that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, desiring to get $20,000,000 out of the Treasury, would be willing to put $20,000,000 in at the same time.

Mr. KELLEY. I have already said that I am opposed to every increase of taxation.

Mr. DAWES. I now call for a vote.

The question was taken on the substitute offered by Mr. KELLEY, and there were—ayes 32, noes 156.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CORRECTION.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to call attention to an error in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. On page 26, at the close of the proceedings, I am reported as calling for the yeas and nays, which I did not do. I wish the RECORD corrected.

REPEAL OF INCREASED CONGRESSIONAL PAY.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the House, by special order, proceeds to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 471) to repeal the increase of certain salaries and to regulate the same, and to cover undrawn and unreturned balances into the Treasury. Under order of the House, speeches are limited to twenty minutes each.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The bill presented by the committee yesterday, and now on the desks of members, is almost exactly like the bill presented and referred by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK.] Some changes have been made in the way of construction. It speaks for itself, and is, as I said yesterday, simply the repeal of the law of increase relating to Congress and its Presiding Officers and a restoration of the old law. As I said, it speaks for itself, and at this stage of the discussion I do not propose to take up any more time, but may at the close of the debate express my views on the subject.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am almost tempted, by the taunts around me, to retort in kind. I have been rudely characterized as demagogue for doing my duty. My exceeding consolation I do not find in the society of such. In endeavoring, last Congress, to stop this insane greed for salary, I knew consciously that the old friends I had served in Ohio, and the new friends I have served in New York, would not turn their eye from me "asquint with suspicion." The delight of favoring constituents, of gentle thoughts from strangers, of approving messages from distant States, and, above all, the cheer in my own home, even had I not the sanction of conscience, more than compensate for vulgar gibes.

One bucket said to another, "No matter how full I go from the well, I come back empty." The other said, "No matter how empty I come, I go away full." I was content to go away from here, if you please, empty in pocket, and content to come back full of gratitude and content. I am only sorry that every member, on both sides, cannot have my serenity of soul. For, whether full of heart or empty of purse, I am happy in the smiles of the people. It may be but for a season, but while it lasts it is exceeding pleasant. May you know what it is, gentlemen; and then in your eternal retiracy from Congress—like mine of last year—you will look back, though poor, yet very proudly, to your honorable service here. I make these prefatory remarks because I think the personal integrity of each member should be sacred. Does not the integrity of this body depend on the integrity of its individuals?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] somewhat recklessly made a statement the other day which was calculated to embarrass me. Not alone among my friends was it unkind, but on my votes upon this measure it was prejudicial. He said that I had "taken all summer to make up my mind on this subject" of back pay. Now, in the last Congress I endeavored to stop this insane greed for salary. I made a speech upon that subject. It was reported. Perhaps I did injustice to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in making a hurried quotation, or rather a statement, of his remark at that time. If so, I correct it from the record. The speech was of the 28th of September. In it I said:

> Mr. Speaker, I want to put in my protest as one member of this House against increasing my own salary by my own vote. When we were elected to Congress there was an implied contract between us and the people that we should serve for so much.

And then, after some further interruptions on points of order, I said:

> I do not propose to discuss the salaries of first-class or second-class clerks. I wish to say that I do not think it seemly for members of this House to vote money into their own pockets; and I do not believe the people will send us back if we do.
>
> Mr. NEGLEY. They have not sent you back, anyhow. [Laughter.]
>
> Mr. COX. It is true that I am one of those who are not coming back in the next Congress; yet I always come here just after somebody else has voted to raise salaries. But I never refused to take anything which a grateful country had voted to me in raising salaries; and I never will. [Laughter.]

And yet, sir, that playful, ironical remark was tortured into a desire on my part to take this money. So much for that. It is idle to refer to it.

Mr. NEGLEY. I will ask the gentleman whether he did not take it really?

Mr. COX. I took the money from the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. NEGLEY. When did you take it?

Mr. COX. I took it the day before I left for Florida. I took it with a view to dispose of it in a proper manner when I returned. So my letter disposing of it, in April, affirms. I kept it as a separate fund till I came home.

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COX. No; that is all now for the present.

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COX. No; I have the floor, and desire not to be interrupted.

Mr. NEGLEY. I am surprised that the gentleman should refuse to yield, when he is pleased to allude to me in the terms he does.

Mr. COX. The gentleman will have his opportunity. I have said nothing offensive to the gentleman, I think. If I have I withdraw it. I apologize afterward and in advance. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] knows that before I left Florida, in March or April, we conferred together. We coincided as to the return of this money. Perhaps we did not know then the proper mode of returning it. But on my return from Florida, in April, with an uncle who was dying, and who died at my house in New York, I was compelled to go to Ohio, to attend the obsequies. While there, or before—I cannot tell now which—and having kept this money all the time as a separate fund with my brother-in-law, who is a banker in New York, I requested him to return it to the Treasury. This he did in a letter to Mr. Spinner, dated the 20th of April. In that letter he states that I ordered the return of the money the week before; so that there cannot, if the record be true, be any mistake about my doing it in the proper way. If gentlemen insist upon drawing sinister inferences against me, I will not discuss it further. In the Herald, of the 28th of April, I find the letter of my brother-in-law, Mr. Hardenburgh, which I wish to read. I would not intrude it on the House, except in justice to myself and to answer malignant insinuations.

There is a special meaning in this rehearsal after the remarks made here; and especially in view of this fact, that Mr. Brooks, my predecessor, died on the last day of April or the first day of May. ["The 30th of April."] Yes, the 30th of April. And it has been intimated all around this House, in various sly ways, that I returned this money after his death, with a view to be his successor. I will show gentlemen how easily I can refute these allegations. I have a double purpose in doing it.

Let me premise my reading of this letter by saying that I find in the New York Herald of the 26th of April that this money was ordered by me to be returned some time before. Moreover, to save any more insinuations, let me say that at the time of the death of Mr. Brooks—yes, at the time the money was returned—my passage and that of my family was paid for Europe, for a long sojourn abroad. I did not expect to be here in this Congress. I had retired to the "still air of delightful studies," or the nipping air of Northern Europe. Nothing but my father's death and my mother's request kept me in this country at that time. Mr. Speaker, it is humiliating to answer these matters, but I will not allow such matters to go by without the truth. Perhaps gentlemen mean to inquire into my private matters. If they do, they are welcome. Then let them write to the agent of the Cunard steamer, the Java, and they will learn that my passage on that vessel was paid for long before these events, and not returned till long after.

Now I will read from the letter of my brother-in-law, to which I have referred. It is dated on the 20th of April, 1873:

DEAR SIR: My brother-in-law, Mr. SAMUEL S. COX, desired me, on his return from Florida last week, to send you the inclosed check for $4,812. It is the so-called back pay for the last Congress, of which he was member from the sixth district. Shortly after the adjournment he deposited this sum, as a special fund, with my bank, to be disposed of in some way otherwise than for his own aggrandizement. He believed that this fund was his to dispose of, or, as he phrased it, he was a "trustee without interest," except that general interest which every citizen has in fair legislation and Federal taxation. He has, by vote and speech upon this bill when before Congress, expressed his views against his increase of salary, without reflecting on his brother Congressmen.

He begs me to say to you that this act of his has only been delayed by a bereavement which has preoccupied his time since the adjournment. He leaves to you the proper mode of conveying the money into the Treasury. If you think it best to cancel so much of the debt you can do so. As he never expected to receive this fund, and as it was not part of his contract when he entered upon his duties, and as he cherishes the good-will of his former constituents in Ohio and New York, he desires to make his remarks against the measure emphatic by this disposition of the money.

Very truly, yours, &c.,

JOHN A. HARDENBURGH.

This was sent to General Spinner, Treasurer, and acknowledged some days afterward.

Now, I care to refer to this simply for the date. I made no "reflection" upon any gentleman on this or the other side of the House. It comes with an ill grace from men who have this money in their pockets, and who claim the right to dispose of it as they please, to call me to account for disposing of it in the way in which I saw proper. I have not played the demagogue, as gentlemen here have charged. I confess that I love to please my constituents. I am anxious to cultivate the graces of public life. I come here from the people, as fresh as any of you; nay, fresher; fresh on the 5th of November last. I feel as fresh on this as on other matters—as fresh as a dew-drop upon the lip of a rose. [Laughter.]

I know the popular sentiment. Gentlemen seem to think that if they can besmirch me on this topic they will be accounted brave and pure. O, yes! make an imputation of bad motives on my part; and they justify themselves. The argument is not worthy of a moment's hospitality.

Sir, nearly all the gentlemen on this side of the House, obeying the dictates of an honest public judgment, will, I trust, vote in line—vote to repeal this bill. I do not know but the very men who led last session in this increase of salary will vote for some measure or other for repeal. I am not particular whether it be the measure reported by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] which looks to partial repeal, omitting the President's salary, or the measure of the minority of the committee, [Messrs. KASSON and JEWETT.]

I prefer this minority report, and will vote for it if I have the chance. It is a fair reinstatement of the matter before this reckless, injudicious, and mercenary legislation occurred. Besides, it avoids all constitutional quibbles. It makes the President return, in a future tense, his pay; and, if we do anything, it should be just to all.

Here let me digress to make a few remarks as to the Executive salary. If they are tinged with irony I hope nobody will misunderstand their import. The omission to strike out the President's increase shows that there was nothing intended wrongfully in voting for the salary bill. O, no. It was not to help ourselves, else, surely, on the eight votes, at some time there would have been a unanimous voice against it. Besides, there were so many absentees during the progress of the bill last session. Does not that show a stolid indifference to self? Who says now that the last Congress was a selfish conclave? The secret of those remarkable votes is this—to help the President to $100,000. Is it not now apparent? Is his salary not retained still by the majority report? Even the doubts as to whether this bill is affected by the Constitution, as to the President's salary, must give way to the patriotic purpose of adding to the $77,000 per annum for White House repairs and expenses $25,000 more salary. How beautiful and disinterested it seems now! Of course the vote to cut off repairs, &c., will fail. It is a part of the plan.

Of course there is no opprobrium on the wise and disinterested men who voted for the bill that they helped the President to an increase, and do not diminish his pay. There is no constraint from the conventions or the people, from conscience or the press-gang, to save the Executive salary from repeal. We repeal our pay so sweetly and gently. We sidle up to the work with a sort of bashfulness that bespeaks the awkwardness of honesty. Besides, there is only one reason why the back pay already received is not given back. It would look like defying the law. Law is mandatory, you know. We must obey the law. What, open our pockets and return the money, when the law gives it to us? Never! Law is the harmony of the universe. Its home is in the bosom of God. It cares for the least and the greatest—for the three-cent stamp and the five-thousand pile. "Never," says the disinterested patriot, "will I sacrifice myself to anarchy or chaos. Order and Cosmos—these demand I should not refund. I may repeal, but refund—never. It would upheave the foundations of society. Nature, through all her frame, shivers at the bare idea of returning the back pay when the law gives it." And when the law is repealed what a rush will there be, Mr. Speaker, to refund! But we are all members of one body, branches of this one vine. Only the body being clothed upon, one man has a capacious pocket or maw, and another a larger heart and conscience. One branch of the vine is loaded with clusters; another turns from them as Sir Callidore did in Spenser's Fairy Bower of Bliss. But now we are of one accord. Wonderful transformation! Now all eyes shall be wiped; all characters are safe. No more shall we hear the word "demagogue," first or second class, applied. None of us will crook the hinges where there is thrift. Hence, there will be no sycophancy, no fawning.

But one thing is certain: there has been some kind of influence, some sort of prodding, either by the press or people, some good influence which has made us all virtuous, and all at once. I do not complain of gentlemen being pure and noble. Let them defy, like demigods, public opinion! But now that they are all coming into line with us, and ready to vote for repeal, I want to hear no more about demagogery; certainly not on this side of the House. Gentlemen, ye who have the money in pocket, ye cannot charge demagogery on us when you vote repeal. I have never challenged, nor will I ever challenge, the good intent of any man in reference to this matter. All I ask is that I shall be let alone to indulge in the luxury of refunding. Whenever I have been attacked—as I have been here—I have answered, as I always will answer, in the proper way—more out of sorrow than anger.

I have no time, nor was it my intention to enter upon this discussion about raising salaries. Perhaps gentlemen have found that it has been somewhat discussed at home. It got into the State conventions of both parties. The parties in the State of New York condemned all men of both parties in this connection. The democratic convention of New York, held at Utica; in the first week of October, held this language:

We condemn and denounce the salary grab, and all Congressmen, democratic or republican, who voted for it, or who have not renounced all share in plunder seized for a service already done and paid for.

We condemn and denounce the President's signature to the bill, which clinched this iniquity and which gave $5,000 to each Congressman while procuring $100,000 for himself, after Congress had just refused to increase his salary; and we demand its repeal.

I am only obeying the behests of the people of my State and party in aiding to mature some measure of this kind at the beginning of the session to wipe out this peculiar legislation.

I know that gentlemen may say that the forward pay is not too much. It does look to me as too much. It does look so when I consider the early debates on this subject. The debates in the Constitutional Convention and the first Congresses did not contemplate exorbitant pay, but a small salary—about five or six dollars a day. Finally, in 1789, I think, it was compromised on $6 a day and a mileage of $6 for each twenty miles. What a comment on our greed and luxury!

Mr. Speaker, I know how the salary itch began. It commenced in the Army and Navy. Three years ago, to place the military above the civil power, salaries were raised. Jealousies were thus and then aroused. The salaries of the higher military and naval officers were outrageously exorbitant, as compared with those of civilians and judges. Of course, our age is fast. Emerson says that "we ride four times as fast as our fathers did; grind, weave, forge, plant, till, and excavate better, and have better shoes, gloves, glasses, gimlets, and newspapers." True; but we have not improved in the conduct or economies of our political life.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] once appealed to the President as the "polar star of economy," and the result was a letter from the War Department, read by General BUTLER, assailing him for his efforts to reduce expenditures. He found 500 supernumeraries, officers in the Army, costing $1,250,000. We had then excesses of expenditures over appropriations, and in one Department there were 1,600 more men employed than the law authorized. Out of this prodigal expenditure came the itching desire to raise the presidential and judicial salaries. Then Congressmen caught it. It was and is a part of the speculative and, I may say, restless, if not corrupt, elements of our era. It was not so once.

Have we fallen upon different or evil times? Must every man have a large salary who serves the people? In the better days men, statesmen, came here, not in a mercenary spirit, not causa lucri; men came here from Virginia and Kentucky, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, from Ohio and Missouri, on horseback, with their leggings on. In those rare and virtuous old times there were not so many complaints about their salary. They thought more of the honor and glory of the public service, and less of their pockets. They cared for their country, and not for their emoluments.

Why, Mr. Speaker, we have come upon the very era of good feeling when gentlemen on both sides can almost agree upon this measure of reform. I do not know one man on either side who does not propose to vote for some of these measures of repeal. Is there any such man? If there be one I would like to see him. Let him stand up before the people. Where is my leonine friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] on this occasion? Is he lying down with the lamb from New York? [Laughter.] Where are the gentlemen who were so loud in the last Congress in denouncing us all? They join, after reflection and instruction, in saving the reputation of the House. I trust that the people will see that by our action to-day we shall vindicate the service they have called us to perform.

I do not speak on this matter as the organ of any body or party. I did not vote against this measure in the last Congress because the people disapproved of it, for I did not know with certainty, only a priori, what they might think about it. I only guessed at their sentiment; and because I happened to see a little into the mill-stone, while other gentlemen have been ground by it, it does not follow that I am to be abused for having a little foresight as early as in February, 1873.

I again say that I desire not to speak as the organ of any party on this question. Both parties have done their part, one more emphatically than the other, perhaps, in denouncing this measure. But the cause of public disquietude and clamor is not so much the increase of the (then) future pay. It was the back pay that did the business. We did not properly consider it. The people have. They desire to place upon it their seal of reprobation. We properly echo their views in tearing it from the statute-book.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, the three events, if such they may be called, of the last twenty years which have most excited the public indignation were the repeal of the Missouri compromise, the attack on Fort Sumter, and the so-called "salary bill" of March 3, 1873, with some concurrent history.

The first was an attack on human rights; the second on the national life; and the last on the resources of the people.

It is the duty of the National Legislature to preserve all these; and a people that will not be aroused when either one is endangered is far on the road to ruin.

In view of all this I propose to submit a few remarks in favor of the proposition to repeal generally so much of the act of Congress of March 3, 1873, known as the "salary bill," as increases the pay of members of Congress and others. I do not deem it necessary to discuss this measure at so much length as might otherwise be proper, because the whole subject has been more fully considered than political topics generally, by the press, and in the political discussions of the last nine months. Every consideration for and against the increase of salaries has been fully canvassed, the public judgment is made up, and it is beyond the reach of either eloquence or logic to reverse it. Every State convention of all political parties held since the "salary bill" became a law, with perhaps a few exceptions, has denounced it and demanded its repeal.

The republican State convention of Ohio, on the 21st of May last, resolved in these words:

> 8. That when retrenchment is required to lighten the burden of taxation and to continue the reduction of the public debt, the increase of salaries is unwise; that we condemn, without reserve, the voting for or receiving increased pay for services already rendered; and we demand that the provisions of the late act of Congress, by which salaries were increased, shall be promptly and unconditionally repealed. [Enthusiastic applause.]

The general assembly of Ohio, by resolution of May 6, "instructed" the "Senators from Ohio in Congress" and "requested" the Representatives "to zealously use all honorable effort to procure the repeal of" this act.

The preamble to this resolution declares that——

> The action of the last Congress increasing * compensation * * was unnecessary, uncalled for, and distasteful to the people of Ohio, and, it is believed, of the whole Union.

I will not now attempt to embody in words what has been done by other conventions, by legislative bodies, what has been said by the press, in political speeches, and in other forms, for all this has passed into history and is well understood.

The republican party, as such, is in no sense responsible for this measure, because it did not, by any party action, either demand it in advance or sanction it since. On the contrary, it has in every conceivable form repudiated it and demanded its repeal. They alone are responsible for the measure whose votes gave it being as a law.

But notwithstanding this, the recent elections show, in the defeat of the republican party in Ohio, New York, Wisconsin, and elsewhere, and in its reduced majorities in Pennsylvania and other States, that the candidates of this grand political organization have been made to suffer for this measure, so "distasteful to the people."

This law should be repealed, then, because it is demanded by the people, whose agents we are, and whose wishes are entitled to be respected.

I do not claim that the public judgment has always been absolutely right; it may rarely be wrong; but "the sober second thought of the people is seldom wrong, and is always efficient."

The decision of the American people on this subject has not been hastily expressed, nor without due consideration. Their "sober second thought" has been unmistakably pronounced. It only remains for us to decide if it shall be obeyed—if we, as agents, will faithfully represent those for whom we are acting.

I do not ask for any action merely to promote political party success. The true inquiry to guide us, and all men, in all that we say or do, is, is it right? This is the rock on which we should build. But I do not hesitate to declare that if this Congress shall fail to wipe out this law, the omission will be visited with continued defeat to the republican party; and this is a calamity to which I will not contribute. If, as republicans believe, the political organization with which we act has been, and is, right, or substantially so, upon every question affecting the perpetuity of the Government; upon every question affecting the civil and political rights of men; upon measures affecting the moral and material interests of the people; if, as we believe, all hostile political organizations have been and are wrong upon these questions, then it is a grievous wrong to adhere to a law the sole aim of which is to increase the pecuniary gains of a few officers, when such adherence brings with it such calamities.

So far I have not presented the chief and highest motive for repeal. The so-called "salary bill" should be repealed because of the manner in which the salary increase was enacted, and because the increase itself is without justification.

The provision for an increase of salaries was ingrafted on an appropriation bill. The appropriation bill, in proper form and for its real purpose, was legitimate and necessary. I think I state its history correctly when I say the salary increase could not have been carried and made a law but for the fact that its defeat involved the failure also of necessary appropriations, and this furnished the ground for a support which it otherwise could not have received, and without which it could not have been made a law. I do not allege that this furnished any sufficient reason for supporting the measure, but I state the fact as I understand it. Every measure should be met and voted upon on its own merits. Good measures should not be made to carry bad ones. It is but little better than a trick and a fraud to secure unjust legislation by making the defeat of what is right the penalty for refusing to adopt the wrong.

So great a legislative evil is that, in many State constitutions it is provided that "no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title."

It is an absurd rule of parliamentary law that an amendment reported by a committee of conference on disagreeing votes between two Houses is indivisible—it must be adopted or rejected as a whole.

This rule has been made a means of securing the adoption of measures or provisions which but for this could receive no sanction. The general assembly of Ohio has frequently and recently, in this way, made appropriations which the house of representatives had rejected.

I respectfully ask the attention of the proper Committee on Rules of this House to this subject, that they may report in favor of abrogating this vicious rule, and that they may also report in favor of so amending the rules that every bill shall contain only one subject, to be indicated in its title.

And now, assuming that the salary increase was and is in principle and the mode of its enactment wrong, and that this Congress is the successor, and in some sense in legal effect the same body as the preceding Congress, interested in the increase, and that it is a salutary rule of morals and of law that "no man shall be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong," it is due to deliberate action on the merits of this subject that the salary law should be repealed, that the whole subject may be acted on on its own merits. If this shall be done there will be no increase in salary, but there may and should be, as I conceive, a reform in the matter of mileage. And this brings us to the consideration of the question whether the salary as fixed by law prior to the act of March 3 was sufficient.

Salaries may be so low as to be unjust; they may be moderate, yet economical and just; or they may be extravagant. I will not devote much time to prove that high or extravagant salaries are unwise in a republic, unjust to tax-payers, and evil in their tendencies.

Hoffman, in his Legal Study, in referring to Montesquieu and his Spirit of Laws, says that—

> Few works in any age or nation have contributed more to the fame of their authors than this very philosophical and masterly production of the Baron de Montesquieu. With the exception of Aristotle, no writer, ancient or modern, has entered so deeply into the spirit and genius of government and law, or so well entitled himself to the distinguished appellation of the "legislator of the human race and prince of philosophical politicians." * * * As long as genius has power, as long as learning and philosophy have influence, so long must the Spirit of Laws be esteemed among the most valuable of intellectual productions.

I may, then, quote from Montesquieu, who says:

> It is a general rule that great rewards in monarchies and republics are a sign of their decline; because they are a proof of their principles being corrupted, and that the idea of honor has no longer the same force in a monarchy, nor the title of citizen the same weight in a republic.
>
> The very worst Roman Emperors were those who were most profuse in their largesses; for example, Caligula, Claudius, Nero, Otho, Vitellius, Commodus, Heliogabalus, and Caracalla. The best, as Augustus Vespassian, Antonius Pius, Marcus Aurelius, and Pertinax, were economists. Under good Emperors, the state resumed its principles; all other treasures were supplied by that of honor." (Vol. 1, p. 76.)

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] whether the individuals he has just named were members of the last Congress? [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am sorry that my friend is not familiar with these historical names.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I yield for a question.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Are we to understand the gentleman as opposing this action of the Forty-second Congress upon the ground that it embodied the feature of back pay or because he believes the pay fixed was too much?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am opposed to it both because it embodied the feature of back pay and because the salary was fixed at a higher figure than there was any necessity for.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I wish to ask the gentleman one further question: Was he not a member of this House in 1866?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir; and possibly it was a great misfortune that I was not here before and since. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Then I wish to ask the gentleman whether he did not take $4,000 of back pay in 1866?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I did just what every other member did. [Long continued laughter.] Allow me a word further in reply to the gentleman. The salary fixed by the act of 1866 did not outrage the public judgment and the public conscience as did the act of March, 1873; and that doubtless furnished some reason why every member of that Congress received the pay as fixed by the act of 1866. It was not generally regarded as a very unnecessary increase.

Mr. KELLOGG rose.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I yield to my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I would like to say one word further.

Mr. LAWRENCE. No; I yield to my friend from Connecticut.

Mr. KELLOGG. Was not the increase of 1866 coupled with a soldiers' bounty bill and brought in on the last night of the session?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It was ingrafted upon a bill which, but for the fact that it contained an appropriation for soldiers' bounties, could not have become a law.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, rose.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have answered the gentleman from Indiana, and our constituents will decide whether he is right or I am.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Just one further question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. O no!

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. The gentleman has undertaken to give us a reason.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not yield further to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLOGG. Let me ask one further question: Did not the members of the Thirty-ninth Congress take for themselves double mileage—the old-fashioned mileage—which they repealed as to future Congresses?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I think not; I do not precisely remember how the fact was. I must now proceed with my argument.

Again, Montesquieu says:

> The less luxury there is in a republic the more it is perfect. There was none among the old Romans, none among the Lacedemonians. * * * In proportion as luxury gains ground in a republic the minds of the people are turned toward their particular interests. * * * A soul depraved by luxury has many other desires; and soon becomes an enemy to the laws that confine it. * * * No sooner were the Romans corrupted than their desires became boundless and immense.—Vol. 1, pp. 110, 111.

High salaries invite luxury, and luxury responds by demanding more, just as fuel adds to the flame which grows by that on which it feeds.

In a republic we want no lines drawn between rich and poor—no legislation merely to make great fortunes, especially when drawn by taxation from the products of labor; no legislation which tends to create an impassable gulf between men in and out of office.

There probably will not be much dispute over these principles. And if not, we fall back on the inquiry whether $5,000 a year is a sufficiently reasonable compensation for a member of Congress, in view of his position, duties, and the policy which is to guide in determining this question?

I know it has been said that some of "our railroads pay $25,000 a year and upward for the salaries of their presidents, and churches an equal amount to their clergymen."

It might with equal truth be said that outside of the cities, where the expenses of supporting families are more than in the country, good mechanics in most of the States of the Union work for $3 a day, and are not paid for the days they may be idle.

These facts do not fix a rule by which to judge of what is a just compensation for members of Congress.

A railroad president may get $25,000 a year, but he cannot earn any such sum; such salary may be useful to him, but that and similar outlays may leave railroad stockholders with meager dividends, or if not, the freight and fare-paying public will be heavily taxed, and complaints loud, long, and not to be misunderstood may be heard as now all over the land, not merely from "granges," but from many other quarters. If the railroad companies will be wise, they will reduce such salaries and freights "before it is everlastingly too late."

The preacher who demands $25,000 a year for his services is in great danger of caring more for the fleece than the flock—is in danger of worshiping Mammon rather than his Maker, and would do well to study the instructions given to the Apostles when they were commanded to go "to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." But there are not a dozen ministers of the Gospel in the whole country who receive any such salary. The ministers of the United States, to our everlasting shame be it said, do not receive an average of $1,000 a year, and yet that can furnish no reason why members of Congress should be paid with any such sum, but it would be quite as legitimate to use it for such purpose as to cite the high salaries paid in rare instances to prove that the increased salaries provided by the act of March last are right.

In fixing the salaries of members of Congress there are some considerations which do not apply to any other official position. Congress has the power, with few constitutional limitations, of fixing the salaries of all officers. There are urgent reasons now for economy in every department of the Government. For the first time since President Grant came into power, our national debt is increasing. Our declining revenues admonish us that this is no time to increase salaries. The financial panic which has swept over the land is the result of extravagance among all classes of people, and of debt beyond capital or ability to pay. Its effects are manifest in depreciated prices, diminished values, embarrassment, and some bankruptcy. Every dollar of unnecessary expense imposed by high salaries to be paid by taxation adds to and aggravates all these evils. The whole cost of Government must be paid from the labor of our people, for that is the only source of wealth.

As Congress is clothed with the power to fix all salaries, the pay of its own members, in spite of all that can be said, will be cited and regarded in some sense as a standard by which to fix the salaries of other officers.

Some officers who made no complaint over annual salaries of three or four thousand dollars a year, soon after the act of 1866 increased the annual compensation of members of Congress to $5,000, became earnest in the conviction that they were inadequately paid. An examination of the statutes since will show an increase of many salaries, with new offices having pay fixed on the basis adopted for members of Congress. A member of Congress who insists upon a liberal or large salary for himself is in no condition to preach or practice economy toward others.

The mere cost of increased congressional salaries is the least of the evils which follow it. The demand for an increase of other salaries, increased taxation, extravagance which becomes contagious, not only in official but private life—these are some of the evils. On grounds of public policy, then, it is expedient to fix congressional salaries at the lowest point consistent with justice.

What the exact measure of compensation should be may vary with time, circumstances, and the financial situation. Members of Congress perform a constitutional duty when, by their own votes, they determine this measure. But there is wisdom in that rule of the common law which denies the right of any man to be a judge in his own case. The Constitution has, however, made us judges to decide on our own salaries. But in so difficult and delicate a work it becomes us to act with a modest distrust of our own opinions; and we should have great respect for the enlightened judgments of other intelligent men, free from motive to err, and with the means to decide correctly.

Adopting, then, this rule, it is safe to say the whole people, regardless of party, with a very meager minority to dissent, demand a repeal of the recent salary law, and that the compensation be fixed so that it shall not exceed the old rate. It remains for us to execute this decree, which emanates from the source of all political power. We should accept the mature and well-considered opinion of that tribunal rather than our own. If salaries of members of Congress can be fixed by a comparison with others of the highest responsibility in the States, the standard would not be higher than that which prevailed before the recent increase. I will not present statistics of salaries paid to governors, judges, and other high officers in the States, but appeal rather to the knowledge of those who hear me.

These salaries may be regarded as having been fixed by a matured and just judgment of impartial tribunals, and it would seem hazardous for us to pronounce them all wrong.

It is not possible to fix any uniform salary that will do exact justice. A Representative who comes from a large city, where the cost of living is greatly enhanced over that of rural, but equally intelligent, districts, may not always be adequately paid with a salary which would be sufficient, or even liberal, elsewhere. But we all know it is not practicable to make individual discriminations, and a general average must, of necessity, be adopted.

It has been said, in substance, that men fit to represent a nation in Congress can earn more money in other employments. Undoubtedly, many of them can. But this has always been so. And the man who makes this the sole motive and turning-point in deciding whether he will consent to serve in Congress or not, can scarcely be regarded as fit for the place. He who comes for no motive but the salary, will serve the interest of the people better by staying out. He who is not satisfied with the salary can turn his attention to other employments. Our whole history proves that men, among the ablest and best of the whole nation, have been found, and, it is presumed, will continue to be ready and willing, to serve in Congress at the salaries which have prevailed.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

N. P. CHIPMAN, Delegate from the District of Columbia, presented himself at the Speaker's desk, and was duly qualified.

DELEGATES ON COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, under the rule adopted at the last session of Congress, announces that he has appointed Mr. CHAFFEE, Delegate from Colorado, as a member of the Committee on Territories, and Mr. CHIPMAN, Delegate from the District of Columbia, as a member of the Committee for the District of Columbia.

OBJECTION TO LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I propose to object, and I do it now, once for all, to anything being printed in the official CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which is not uttered on the floor of the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE, I ask leave to print a few additional remarks.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object. No; not a word.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not object, if the gentleman from Ohio will allow me to ask him a question, to printing his answer. I ask him whether he has not accepted the increased pay for the last nine months?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have not, but have paid into the Treasury the difference between the pay now, and what it was.

SALARY QUESTION.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am of those who believe that the people's representative should obey the will of the people whenever that will is fairly and clearly expressed. Nay, more: he is in honor bound to do this or resign his trust. While, as such representative, I will carefully ascertain and cheerfully obey the voice of the people, I will not abase myself by meanly trimming this way and that way to conform to what I am conscious is a groundless and senseless popular clamor. Such conduct, such trimming, the American people—always right in the long run—will only despise. And I am happy to say that such is most eminently the sentiment and profound feeling of that noble and generous portion of the American people who have honored me with a place upon this floor. I have lived too long in the far West not to understand something of the difference there is between the sober second-thought of the people and their first ebulition of resentment when misled either by a specious demagogue, a frantic mob, or a corrupted or partisan press. I suppose, sir, that we out there have about the average amount of human frailties to account for. But, among that sum total you will not find as a characteristic sin, that of meanness or stinginess toward those who serve in a public or private capacity. The most unskilled labor of the humblest delver in the earth commands a price that brings with it, in a few years, an independence of comfort and plenty. For diligent and faithful service in whatever position, or station, or office—in the field, or mine, or forest; at the bar or on the bench; in the administration of municipal or county or State affairs—our people expect to pay, and to pay well, without haggling and without small bargains.

So much I briefly premise, so far as I am concerned with my immediate constituency, to whose good sense and judgment I will very willingly trust my conduct in this salary business. Last Congress I voted uniformly in favor of the salary law as it now stands. Earlier in the session I voted uniformly against the repeal of the franking privilege. These measures have a bearing upon each other, and should be considered together. A careful estimate, made by the superintendent of the folding-room of this House, shows that the amount of postage—covered by the frank—on public documents distributed during last Congress by each member would have amounted to nearly $2,000, or more accurately, $1,953. Why, sir, I have here a schedule, a copy of which is upon the desk of every member, showing the amount of postage that must now be paid on the various documents that are now printed by Congress. For example, take a few items from the list at random: the Agricultural Report must pay a postal charge of 42 cents. And I ask the gentlemen from Illinois and Ohio, and my respected but penny-wise and pound-foolish friend from the third district of Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] what they are going to do about it? Will their constituency of farmers willingly forego their Agricultural Reports? Hardly. What then? Why, my good friends will of course gladly affix the 42 cents' worth of postage-stamps to five or six hundred of those valuable documents, lest they hear a murmur of complaint at home.

Again, take the Census Report—and who would not wish to have it? There are five volumes, and the postage ranges from fifty-two cents to one dollar and ten cents per volume. Now, of course, gentlemen mean to distribute these and other documents just the same as ever. But the postage must be prepaid. Nevertheless, they will do it, I suppose, and so nearly two thousand dollars of their salary is expended, and for whose benefit? Who will tell me? Not for the people's, surely; not for the efficiency of the postal service, as a resolution introduced yesterday will soon show. But you will send these volumes by express and have the charges collected on delivery, will you? Such a procedure would hardly be ventured upon just before an election in which you might happen to be candidates.

I refer also to our mining reports—to those most useful reports of Professor Hayden and of Professor Raymond and of Lieutenant Wheeler, and to that magnificent work of that most accomplished gentleman and scientist, Clarence King. I know what I am saying when I assert that every man in the State of Nevada properly appreciates and would be glad to possess these reports. The few that have hitherto been printed scarcely begin to supply the demand; and, besides, the postage upon them will amount to from forty cents to two dollars and a half per set of volumes.

Consider this, if you please; consider, too, the multiplicity of other documents that we are in the habit of sending to our constituents—speeches in pamphlet—our own eloquence and the eloquence of our eloquent friends; the vast number of the speeches of my brilliant friend from New York, [Mr. COX,] which we all so freely and gladly subscribe for and send away for the benefit of the country; consider that there is no mileage allowed under the new law, and no allowance for stationery or newspapers, and I am prepared to show, if I thought the occasion called for it, that, in my own case, the compensation under the old law was greater than it is under the new. Thus, the compensation and allowance under the old law was, per year, as follows:

Salary	$5,000 00
Mileage for one and a half sessions, (there were three sessions in the Congress, mileage attaching to each)	1,674 60
Postage for one year on the regular quota of documents allowed each member for distribution	976 50
Allowance for stationery and newspapers	125 00
Estimated amount of postage for official correspondence, speeches, and other public documents, and upon seeds distributed	250 00
Total	8,026 10

The salary under the new law of $7,500 per year includes everything—mileage, postage, allowance for stationery, and newspapers—everything except actual traveling expenses to and from the capital. And the only item that will vary this comparative statement will be such actual expenses, the amount of which has not been ascertained by the auditing committee.

Now, take the estimate, say for my distinguished friend from the first district of Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] In his case the mileage was $60, and was allowed for only two sessions, he having been a member of the preceding Congress, as I hope he may be of many succeeding ones. The account stands thus:

Salary	$5,000 00
Mileage	60 00
Postage on regular quota of documents for one year	976 50
Allowance for stationery and newspapers	125 00
Estimated amount of postage on official correspondence, speeches, and other public documents, and upon seeds distributed	250 00
Total	6,411 50

Here was a wide inequality, which I thought, and still think, was unfair. Such inequality of compensation, varying in degree, was found everywhere, and the compensations of no two members were alike. I believed this was unfair and unjust, and believed that the new salary bill would be best for all and best for the country; and I have seen no reason to change such belief.

As to the retroactive feature of the law, it is in accordance with a uniformity of precedent from the beginning of the Government down.

Mr. Clay had anticipated the objections of the people as to the propriety of members fixing their own compensation, and said:

As to the amendment to defer its operation until the next Congress, he would remark that, in his judgment, there was more propriety in the law ending than beginning there. It was more respectful to our successors to leave them free to determine what was the just measure of indemnity for their expenses, than for us to prescribe the rule for them. We can best judge for ourselves. With respect to the supposed delicacy of our fixing upon our own compensation, let the Constitution, let the necessity of the case be reproached for that, not us.

MR. Randolph offered an amendment to the bill, proposing to repeal the act of 1816, to deduct the back pay of members in excess of $6 per day, but it was rejected.

These precedents have been so well stated by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT,] that I use his language. He says:

The people afterward repeatedly honored Mr. Clay with their confidence, and a great national party gave him a most enthusiastic support as a candidate for the Presidency. Mr. Calhoun afterward became Senator, Cabinet officer, and was elected Vice-President by the people. Mr. R. M. Johnson, author of the bill of 1816, was afterward elected Vice-President by the people. Mr. McLean was afterward made one of the supreme judges, and he was warmly solicited to become a candidate for the Presidency in 1832, but he declined. Mr. Webster was afterward repeatedly in the Senate, in the Cabinet, supported by many warm friends as a candidate for the Presidency, and became illustrious as the greatest constitutional expounder of his age. James Clark was afterward elected governor of Kentucky To single out a few who received back pay under the act of 1856: Stephen A. Douglas and John Bell were indorsed by their respective parties as candidates for the Presidency when the times were "big with danger." John Bell carried the State of Tennessee. Lewis Cass afterward became a Cabinet officer, and Lyman Trumbull and John J. Crittenden were sent to the Senate.

Believing that I have acted right in this whole matter, I shall oppose any change in the law as it now stands.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has exhibited distressing sensitiveness over a remark I made the other day, which was simply quoting a statement I had read in the newspapers, and one I would have been pleased to have corrected if the gentleman had permitted himself to use language suitable to his own dignity and that of the House. He has been pleased to refer to the subject again before I had an opportunity of correcting the statement according to his version, and now I propose to reply briefly to the remarks which he has made.

I will state that I have no objection to the honorable gentleman's being a dew-drop on the rose, as he styles himself, or a sunflower in a garden of hollyhocks. [Laughter.] His reference to my allegation against himself, and his charge upon me, was wantonly made and unwarranted by what I had stated. I will refer to the facts as evidence against the gentleman's declarations. Immediately after the close of the last Congress he drew the back pay and put it in his pocket, or, as stated again in the press, quoting the gentleman's own remark, gave it to his father and mother because they were orphans, and when the telegraph announced that all that was mortal of James Brooks would soon pass over the borders of care and of time, the gentleman turned the amount into the Treasury. It was not all summer that he retained it, but it was from the 10th of March to the 30th of April. I do not question the gentleman's motives or his right so to act; I simply refer to the facts.

Mr. COX. Did not the gentleman hear my statement, that I put it in the Treasury before Mr. Brooks's death?

Mr. NEGLEY. I have not stated otherwise.

Mr. COX. Oh! Well, go on.

Mr. NEGLEY. I would not misrepresent the gentleman. I have proper regard for my own self-respect and his feelings, but the gentleman appears on this floor immediately at the commencement of the session, and I recognize him as a conspicuous figure in a group of gentlemen who are anxious and zealous in arraigning their fellow-members for committing a great wrong against the public Treasury and public sentiment, and I desire to refer to the gentleman's own acts so as to place him upon record before the country in the position he rightly occupies, and one in which he has placed himself. For the period from June 4 to November 5 the gentleman drew from the public Treasury $3,125, and according to his own statement, a few moments ago, he was only made a member by election on the 5th of November.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman aware of the law on that subject?

Mr. NEGLEY. I am aware of the law. Is the gentleman aware of the law under which we drew our back pay?

Mr. COX. The law of 1859 is express in relation to that. I do not draw pay because I am the successor of Mr. Brooks. There is a time fixed at which the pay commences. Is the gentleman aware of the law?

Mr. NEGLEY. I am aware.

Mr. COX. Well, what is it? Let us see whether you know anything about it.

Mr. NEGLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will proceed in my own way. I have already been more indulgent to him than he was to me. Up to the 1st of December the gentleman had drawn $3,649.35, and he has only served nine days. If that is not drawing back pay, I appeal to the common sense of the House.

Mr. COX. Have you served longer than I have in this Congress? I was sworn in here the same day you were, only I had to run twice in order to get here, and you only ran once.

Mr. NEGLEY. I am not showing such a distressing amount of virtue as the gentleman is, and consequently I am not making my own defense. The objection which I have had to this whole proceeding has been to the indecent haste with which this bill has been brought before the House and the country, when our industries are depressed, when the condition of our finances demands immediate legislation. It was a matter of necessity that this Congress should take hold of those two questions the very first day of the session; but, instead of that, gentlemen proposed a measure of economy by reducing the pay of members and by striking at those who have drawn back pay. I consider, sir, to say the least, that it is indecent.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman will allow me to give him some figures to correct what he has said. He says that he has served no longer than I have, yet he has drawn $2,000 more than I have drawn. He has drawn $5,535, while I could not draw as much by $1,875. Am I not as valuable a man as he is? [Laughter.]

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is true I do not possess as humorous elements as the gentleman from New York, [Mr COX;] nor do I have, as he has, the indorsement of Tammany Hall. But the statement of facts I have made he will acknowledge, after reflection, to be entirely correct. I believe that I have quoted him correctly.

It was far from my intention to make this a personal matter. I simply alluded to the statement reported in the press, and I called attention to it without intending to arraign the gentleman before the House.

The gentleman from New York has the perfect right to act, as has every other member of the House, according to his best judgment on this and every other question. But the gentleman himself appears here as judge advocate on the part of the people. He arraigns his associates in this Hall for committing a great crime, or to use his own language, "for stealing money from the Treasury." When he makes that charge I desire the House and the country to understand the part he has played in "stealing money from the Treasury," if he prefers that phrase.

Now if this measure had been introduced into this House as a measure of economy it would have commanded my vote and my earnest support; or, if it were introduced out of respect to public opinion by gentlemen who had themselves the most right upon this floor to introduce it—I mean those who had fathered the bill before—should have been willing to have given my support to it. But it has been supported, on the contrary, by a number of gentlemen who, having escaped from the follies of their youth, hope to acquire a new reputation. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the subject now under consideration is one which has attracted much public attention. The action of the Forty-second Congress, in passing the act by which the salaries of Senators and Representatives were increased, which it is now proposed to repeal, and especially that feature of it whereby the increased pay was made to date from the beginning of the Congress, has met with the fiercest denunciation. Not only those who voted for it, but those who voted against it, yet received its benefits, have been stigmatized as thieves and robbers.

It matters not how many years of faithful service had been devoted to the country, nor how exalted a character for integrity had been builded up; this one act has been deemed an unpardonable sin, and treated as an unmitigated criminality. While indulging in this wholesale denunciation, no one stopped to consider the circumstances under which any member happened to be placed, and which to him, and to any reasonable man, might seem to make it his duty to vote for the measure; no difference of opinion was permitted as to its justice; no appeal to reason would be listened to. My distinguished friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who struggled against it until, in a conference report which he had resisted to the last, it was brought before the House attached to one of the most important appropriation bills, and then, as all of us who are familiar with the facts must confidently believe, (and it is but justice to him to say so here,) voted for it in the conscientious discharge of his duty to the country, has fared no better than any one else.

I do not doubt that this unstinted abuse has been indulged in by many honest, conscientious men, who, in my judgment, came to hasty conclusions; and certainly by many who thought they could see in it their opportunity for perferment, hoping for official honors upon some demerit of others, rather than upon any merit of their own.

Mr. Speaker, I may be mistaken, but I have thought that I could see in what has transpired here since this question came before the House a disposition upon the part of some gentlemen to seek to gain popularity for themselves by trying to cast reproach upon their fellow-members.

Now, sir, it is not my purpose to argue against the repeal of that act, nor that it did not fix the salaries too high, but to show that there is nothing in it that is immoral or dishonest; that a man might vote for it, or receive its benefits, and still be the peer in integrity and conscience of the very best of all the multitude of his detractors. The limit fixed to this debate will not permit me to enter into an elaborate consideration of this subject in its various aspects, and I must necessarily treat it briefly. As the Constitution now is, the power is granted to each Congress to fix its own compensation. This power was granted for the reason that it was not deemed wise to allow one Congress to fix the compensation of its successor; it was recognized as a delicate duty for members to fix their own salaries, but after weighing all the arguments pro and con, it was deemed best that it should be so. A great many newspaper articles have been published, and speeches made, in which it has been assumed that when a Senator or a Member of Congress is elected it is a contract to serve during the period for which he was elected for the compensation provided for at the time of his election. But, sir, nothing is plainer than that the assumption is without foundation. On the contrary, as before remarked, for reasons which the framers of the Constitution regarded as outweighing those that were urged against it, it was provided that each Congress might judge of its own compensation. Such is not only the plain letter of the Constitution, but there is history which shows that so the people themselves desired it to be, to which I desire briefly to call attention.

On the 27th of June, 1788, when the State of Virginia ratified the Constitution, the convention of that State proposed numerous amendments to be submitted to Congress for action, among which is one in the following language:

18. That laws ascertaining the compensation of Senators and Representatives for their services be postponed in their operation until after the election of Representatives, immediately succeeding the passing thereof.

That convention instructed the Senators and Representatives from Virginia to insist upon this amendment with the others.

On the 8th of June, 1789, Mr. Madison, in the House of Representatives, offered this amendment in the following words:

That in article 1, section 6, clause 1, there be added to the first sentence these words, to wit: "But no law varying the compensation last ascertained shall operate before the next ensuing election of Representatives."

After this and other amendments had passed through the hands of a committee, it came before the House in the following form:

Article 1, section 6, between the words "United States," and "shall in all cases," strike out "they" and insert "but no law varying the compensation shall take effect until an election of Representatives shall have intervened."

In the discussion which ensued, Mr. Sedgwick, of Massachusetts, said: "Much inconvenience and but very little good would result from, this amendment. It might serve as a tool for designing men; they might reduce the wages very low, much lower than it was possible for any gentleman to serve without injury to his private affairs, in order to secure popularity at home, provided a diminution of pay was looked upon as a desirable thing. It might also be done in order to prevent men of shining and distinguished abilities, but of indigent circumstances, from rendering their fellow-citizens those services they are well able to perform, and render a seat in this House less eligible than it ought to be."

Mr. Vining said he thought every future Legislature would feel a degree of gratitude to the preceding one which had performed so disagreeable a task for them. The committee who had made this a part of their report had been guided by a single reason, but which appeared to them a sufficient one. There was, to say the least of it, a disagreeable sensation occasioned by leaving it in the breast of any man to set a value on his own work. It is true it is unavoidable in the present House, but it might, and ought to be, avoided in future; he therefore hoped it would obtain without any difficulty.

Mr. Gerry said he "would be in favor of this clause if they could find means to secure an adequate representation; but he apprehended that it would be considerably endangered; he should, therefore, be against it."

Mr. Madison said he "thought the representation would be as well secured under this clause as it would be if it was omitted; and as it was desired by a great number of the people of America he would consent to it, though he was not convinced it was absolutely necessary."

Mr. Sedgwick "remarked once more that the proposition had two aspects, which made it disagreeable to him; the one was to render a man popular with his constituents, the other to render the place ineligible to his competitor."

This is the substance of the debate on this proposed amendment. The House passed it, as did also the Senate, and it was sent to the States for ratification. By that act the First Congress virtually said to the people of the several States: "You have, by the Constitution, authorized each Congress to fix its own compensation. It is a delicate duty to perform, and we propose that you so amend your Constitution that when the compensation is fixed it shall not apply to the Congress fixing it." But the States rejected this proposed amendment. They said by that refusal, "We will leave to each Congress the right to fix its own salary."

With this approval of the Constitution as originally framed, and disapproval of the proposed amendment, five different Congresses have made changes in congressional salaries, each time increasing the amount and each time fixing its own salary, i. e., dating the increase back to the beginning of the Congress, as the Constitution authorized, and as the people had, by the refusal to amend, sanctioned. Of those who participated in said legislation and its benefits the records disclose the names of many who were illustrious for their wisdom and integrity.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he has before him the votes of the States when they acted on that proposition.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I have not.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will give the statement to the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Eliot's Debates contain the statement that the vote was as follows: New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey voted nay on the direct proposition for that amendment. Delaware, Maryland, South Carolina, North Carolina, Rhode Island, and Virginia voted yea. Massachusetts, Connecticut, Georgia, and Kentucky declined to act upon the subject altogether. Therefore, eight States, either by direct vote, rejecting or refusing to act, negatived the proposition. Six states voted for it.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. It was not ratified; it was rejected, and the people have refused to accede to adopt any such amendment to the Constitution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when interrupted, I was calling the attention of the House to the fact that, since this refusal on the part of the people to make this amendment to the Constitution, five Congresses have increased the salaries, and each time dated the increase back to the beginning of the Congress, or, in other words, have embodied in the law this feature, which the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] a short while ago, so earnestly objected to as "back pay."

In the Fourteenth Congress such men as John McLean, of Ohio, Daniel Webster, John C. Calhoun, John Randolph, and others of like character, voted for such a bill, and all the members of that Congress took the benefit. Among the latter were such men as Lowndes, Forsyth, Philip Barbour, Henry St. George Tucker, Nathaniel Macon, and Rufus King. President Grant has been denounced for signing the bill of March last. James Monroe, then President, signed the bill which I have just been referring to.

Again, in August, 1856, the Thirty-fourth Congress passed an act increasing compensation, dating it back to the beginning of the Congress, a period of seventeen months, whereby each Senator and Member received for that past seventeen months, is without cutting off perquisites, about $2,400, in addition to what had already been paid him under the prior law; in other words, about $2,400 of what is now stigmatized as "back pay." In the Senate were such men as Lewis Cass, Stephen A. Douglas, B. F. Wade, John M. Clayton, George E. Pugh, Samuel Houston, William H. Seward, Hamilton Fish, Henry Wilson, Charles Sumner, Jacob Collamer, John P. Hale, William Pitt Fessenden, and Hannibal Hamlin. In the House were, among others, John Sherman, Francis E. Spinner, Henry Winter Davis, John Scott Harrison, Samuel Galloway, Benjamin Stanton, Joshua R. Giddings, John Covode, Galusha A. Grow, Washburne of Maine, Washburne of Illinois, Washburn of Wisconsin, William H. English, George P. Dunn, William Cumback, David P. Halloway, Lucian Barbour, Harvey D. Scott, Schuyler Colfax, John W. Pettit of Indiana. None of the gentlemen in that Congress failed to take the benefits of this act.

Again in 1866, on the 28th of July, sixteen months after the Thirty-ninth Congress began, a like bill was passed increasing the salary $2,000 per annum, and making it date from the beginning of the Congress, and cutting off no perquisites whatever.

Among those voting for it in the House I find General Schenck, of Ohio, now our minister resident near the Court of Saint James, Mr. Kerr, of the State I now in part represent, my colleague on the other side of the House, [Mr. NIBLACK,] and many others. There were others of equal character for integrity who voted against it, among whom I find the names of Mr. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, WILLIAM LAWRENCE, of Ohio, now a member of this House, Mr. KASSON, now a member from Iowa, Mr. GARFIELD, now chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I also find that many did not vote, among whom I find the distinguished Speaker of this House; the present distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, three Washburns, and my predecessor, Mr. Julian. But all, whether voting for or against, or not voting at all, took the benefits of the increase—the "back pay." When the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] declined to yield to me a few minutes ago for further questions, after he had answered that he condemned this act both because of the feature of back pay and because it was too much in amount, and after he had answered that in 1866 he took about $3,000 of back pay, I desired to ask him further if the principle was wrong last March, whether it was any the less wrong in 1866, and whether he has yet covered the portion he received into the Treasury as conscience money. He can answer now if he desires to do so.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I can answer that question.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I desire that the gentleman should answer the question, but I hope it will not come out of my time.

Mr. LAWRENCE. From the 4th of March to the 2d of December I collected my pay from the Treasury at the rate fixed by the old law.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I am talking about 1866.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I collected the whole amount of the salary of 1873 as fixed by the new law, and on the 2d of December paid into the Treasury the difference in amount between the old and new law.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. When?

Mr. LAWRENCE. On the 2d of December.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. This present December? I am trying to get the gentleman to answer what he did with what he got in 1866. Has he covered that into the Treasury?

Mr. LAWRENCE. In 1866, as the gentleman has said, every member of that Congress drew the pay fixed by the act of 1866, except one member, a gentleman from West Virginia. In what I said I condemned this salary act of March 3, 1873, because its back pay increased the pay, and because of the amount of pay. The back pay, like the front pay, is to be condemned, because it is all too much.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. O, yes; the gentleman from Ohio only condemns it now because it is too much. That is the essence of the whole matter, as I will show presently.

But the gentleman said a little while ago, when I interrogated him when he was addressing the House, that he condemned it because it was back pay.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Because it was back pay—too much in amount. [Great laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I wish to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. NIBLACK. Will my colleague [Mr. WILSON] yield to me a moment?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. My time is fast passing away.

Mr. NIBLACK. I merely wish to say that in 1866 there was one member of this House who declined to take the back pay allowed him—Mr. Hubbard, of West Virginia.

Mr. DAWES. I understand my friend from Ohio to say that he was opposed to this back pay because it was too much. I want that he shall tell us how much back pay he would go for? [Great laughter.]

Mr. LAWRENCE rose.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to ask the gentleman one question more, and he can answer all together. He says in the Congress of 1866 every member took the back pay, and that is the reason he took it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I said no such thing.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman gave that as his excuse, and now he turns round and says that the people condemn this, and that is the reason he thinks it to be so bad. He goes with the multitude, whatever way the multitude goes. [Laughter]

Mr. LAWRENCE. Now, I hope the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to reply to the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] has expired.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended ten minutes.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I ask the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania on the right of the Chair [Mr. TOWNSEND] was about to be recognized. But if the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is a member of the committee, insists upon his right, the Chair will feel called upon to recognize him.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I do not desire to interfere with my colleague. If I were recognized I would yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. Now I hope the gentleman from Indiana, having had his time extended, will allow me to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I cannot yield, because my time will very soon expire.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Oh, let me answer the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. The House will give you time to answer.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman from Indiana to order. In violation of the Constitution of the United States he is inflicting on the gentleman from Ohio "cruel and unusual punishment." [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. After this long interruption, I resume what I was saying about the Congress of 1866. There were some very distinguished gentlemen in the Senate in that Congress, among whom I find, from my own State, Henry S. Lane, who spoke in its favor; Thomas A. Hendricks, who sat in the chair while the matter was being discussed; the present Vice-President, Mr. Fessenden, Mr. SUMNER, and others whom I need not name; but none of them failed to take the benefits. Some of them voted for back pay, and they all took back pay, as it is called.

I think I have shown that the Constitution was purposely framed so as to allow each Congress to fix its own salary, and that, acting within its express constitutional power, the Forty-second Congress, in passing the act to which I have referred, has followed an unbroken line of precedents, and has trodden in the footsteps of many illustrious predecessors.

Having the right to fix its own compensation, it is of course wholly immaterial on what day of the Congress it is done. The merit or demerit does not in any way depend upon whether it is done on the first or the last or any intervening day. It might be done on the first day, and then it would all be "front pay," to use the language of some of the newspapers; but the effect upon the Treasury would be precisely the same as if fixed upon the last day. The merit or demerit, the good or bad qualities of the act, depends, therefore, not on the time in the session when it is done, but altogether upon the amount. If the amount fixed would have been right if it had been fixed at the beginning of the Congress, it is equally right if fixed at any later day in the Congress to date from the beginning. Upon this question of amount it is but natural that there should be a diversity of opinion, and that difference may exist between honest men.

One may think that the honors of the place are entirely adequate to induce men of the requisite character and ability to accept and faithfully discharge the duties of the place, regardless of salary, and doubtless this is true; while there are others equally honest who believe that the man who devotes his time, abilities, and experience to the faithful service of the country should have a salary reasonably in excess of his reasonable expenses—that it is neither fair nor just to take advantage of the fact that the place is desirable for its honors, and thereby secure the services of competent men for an inadequate salary. A man may entertain such an opinion and act upon it, and be neither a robber nor a thief. Such a man need not be seriously apprehensive that he will, in the opinions of just men, suffer when brought in comparison with those who think the same way but have not the moral courage to do what they believe to be right, and especially with the debauched slanderer and political charlatan who exhausts himself in denouncing what has been done as legalized robbery.

I shall not argue the question whether or not the action of the Forty-second Congress was ill-timed or indiscreet, although it would possibly not be difficult to convince a thinking man that it is never ill-timed nor indiscreet to do what is right; but this would involve the single question, and it is the only question involved, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] now admits, whether or not the amount fixed by that Congress was in excess of a fair compensation. Those who had experience here would differ in regard to it, and those who have had no opportunity to know to what expenses Senators and Members are subjected are not in a good condition to form a correct opinion.

It is sufficient for us to know that the people, whether wisely or unwisely, are unwilling to pay the amount fixed by that Congress. We cannot now argue that they are wrong. They have a right to dictate what they will pay. They have a right to demand that it shall be repealed. They have made that demand, and we are now about to accede to it. When repealed we must once more fix salaries; and that, also, we are about to do. Whatever we may do will be criticised; but we must do something, and perhaps the best guide to us in disposing of the matter is the law as it was before, and I trust that the House will place the bill upon that basis.

Mr. TOWNSEND rose.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Now will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I cannot yield to the gentleman.

I do not think that the people of the United States desire that we should turn this House into a class-meeting or love-feast in order that we may acknowledge our political sins and ask to be forgiven. Nor is this an occasion for our clothing ourselves in hair-cloth shirts, heaping ashes on our heads, and subjecting ourselves to a course of self-flagellation like penitents for what we have done in the past Congress. The people of the country are willing to compensate their Representatives fairly and equitably. They are neither unjust nor ungenerous. They are willing that we should have a fair salary for the services we are rendering them here. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the popular indignation during the past summer was not directed so much against the increase of pay as it was against what has been called the back pay. The people felt indignant that in the last hours of the last day of the session, after we had signed our receipts monthly, acknowledging that we had been paid in full for our services here, we should pass a law taking immediately out of the Treasury $5,000 each, which we had acknowledged we had not earned. It was for this that the people called members to a stern account.

I thought on that occasion, when the bill was before the House, that it was injudicious, and I thought that it was wrong. I thought that the people had had no opportunity to pass upon the bill. And I am very sure that, if the bill had been brought into the House at the first session of Congress, before the county and district and State conventions met, that bill increasing the pay and giving back pay never would have passed, in the form and at the figures at which it did eventually pass. If it had been passed at that earlier session, however; if the people had had a chance to express their sentiments with regard to it, in their different constituencies, they would have made no complaint. They could have dealt with their Representatives as they thought best. But they had no such opportunity. On that occasion I advocated the bill extending the pay to $6,000 a year. I did it because I saw there was a determination to increase the pay, and I felt that $6,000 a year, as I proposed at that time, would be about a just compensation for what we would lose, in the shape of stationery, mileage, and obligation to pay postage on public documents, under the bill that finally passed.

Therefore it was that I voted against the bill, and never touched the back pay, but turned it over to the Treasurer, who receipted for the same.

In the last Congress, before the salary bill was passed, and from 1866 down to that time, the compensation of members of Congress was $5,000 a year. We received in stationery about $125, and on an average in the way of mileage $325. The gentleman who had the superintendency of the folding-room told me that the postage that would be imposed upon the books that would be sent forth, after the franking privilege was done away with would be over $700. These sums added together make $6,150.

I thought then that the sum of $6,000 would put us about where we had been before the abolition of the franking privilege. I advocated that sum then; I advocate it to-day. The people of the country have demanded that we should repeal, or in some way change, the bill under which we are now drawing compensation. I think that a fair compromise, and one that will be acceptable to the people throughout the country, and I hope to the members themselves, will be the one I have proposed in my amendment, in which I provide that the pay of Senators and Representatives in Congress hereafter shall be $6,000 a year, and payment for actual expenses individually incurred in going to and returning from the seat of Government once at each session.

I think we meet there on a common ground, as a proper compromise among each other and with the people.

The bill that is proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] does not do away with that odious principle of mileage, whereby gentlemen from the Northwest and Southwest Territories receive in pay and mileage something like $3,000 more than we do. This enormity is allowed by the bill of the gentleman from Maine to stand. It is an inequality to which we ought not to submit; it is an inequality that the people of the country do not ask us to submit to.

In my amendment, which gentlemen will find upon their tables, I have omitted the members of the Cabinet and the Speaker of this House. The reason why I have done so is, that wherever I have heard any expression of opinion with regard to increase of salaries, I have never heard a word of complaint against the increase of the salaries of the President, which had remained the same from Washington to Grant, while congressional pay had been repeatedly increased, nor of the members of the Cabinet, or of the Speaker. There has been no complaint made of them. The only complaint has been made against us that we, in the last hour of the last day of the session, should have put up our pay, and should have taken $5,000 extra and departed.

I do not intend to impeach the motive of any gentleman who voted for that increase. I concede to him the right of individual judgment; he acted upon his own responsibility, as I did upon mine. He thought it right, I doubt not, as I thought it right in me to endeavor to put the amount at $6,000.

In my amendment I have omitted the names of the Cabinet, because I think that the $10,000 allowed to them is no more than a just and adequate compensation for their services. I have omitted the name of the Speaker, because he has always been considered equal to the members of the Cabinet, and he has always received the same salary; and because, in addition, he is obliged by custom to keep house here as well as keep house at home. And I think that any Speaker, I care not who he is, who can guide and control a legislative body of three hundred men, of independent thought, feeling, and self-will, in a House like this, and conduct legislation as promptly and well as the present Speaker has done, is entitled to $10,000. It is for this reason that I have omitted those officers in my bill.

The bill that is presented by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] I say, is an unequal one. I trust that bill will not pass the House; that gentlemen will see that the amendment I propose is a placing of the salary at fair figures, and bringing it to what it was before the salary was raised. It will be a proper and just compromise between gentlemen on the one side and gentlemen on the other. It will be a just and honest concession to the exigencies of the sentiment of the people, who feel that Congress has heretofore done wrong. They will acknowledge that this is a proper compensation for our services. They will feel satisfied that we have done fairly and justly by them; that we have corrected an error of judgment on our part in putting up our salaries; that we acknowledge that they, in their conventions—State, county, and district—have spoken properly and well.

If this bill of the gentleman from Maine should pass, we will still have postage to pay. When I take up this schedule of postage on public documents that comes up from the folding-room, I find that if we send to our constituents, as we should do, our books and public documents, the postage on them will amount to something over $700. I forgot the figures presented by the gentleman from Nevada, [Mr. KENDALL.] But I know that my Agricultural Reports alone, if I send them out, as I intend to do as soon as printed, will cost me $220; the Census Compendiums will cost $85; the Census tables, $98; and the Report of the Secretary of War, $15. Those four documents alone, of the multiplicity of the public documents, will require each member, if he does his duty to his constituents, to pay the sum of between $400 and $500 for postage.

Therefore it is that I think the amendment I propose is only equitable and just; it is a common ground upon which members all may meet, and upon which we can go to the country, face our constituents, and say to them that we have put our compensation down to a just and reasonable sum and such as we fully earn.

In this there will be no degradation, but such an honorable acquiescence in the public will as is always due from Representatives to their constituents.

Mr. LAMISON. Mr. Speaker, when I came to this House this morning, I had no intention to say anything on this subject; and I do so now only because I am almost the only member from my State now on this floor—the only member, I believe, on the democratic side—who voted for the bill passed at the last session increasing salaries. I did so at that time because I believed I had good and sufficient reasons for my action; and I see no reason for changing my convictions to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I am too familiar with popular clamor not to know its full force and effect upon candidates for any position. I know full well the potency of the public press; and I know that at no time in the history of this country, not even during the dark days that followed the war, has there been a more rigid, a more absolute, a more tyrannical mob set upon men than has been set upon those who supported the bill passed at the last session.

In saying this I speak within due bounds and with due respect to every fellow-member; but I say it with a sense of my responsibility to the constituency who sent me here, and the country who hears me to-day. This is not the first time I have heard this clamor. I have heard it before to-day in a more clamorous body than this, and I regarded it then as my duty not only to defend my action, but to defend it because it was right, and for the best interests of my constituency and the country. Actuated by motives of this kind, I met my constituency; and I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that I have as intelligent a constituency as that which he represents. Although I had been traduced by the public press from one end of the country to the other; although there had been sent into my district, even before my arrival home from Washington, calumnies as disgraceful as they were false; although I was beset by men who were aspirants for position and were seeking popularity, I went home and met my constituents, and after explaining to them in a twenty-minute speech my course of action, with the reasons therefor, I heard no more of the matter for three months afterward, and then only in a convention called together for the purpose of convicting.

I will say another thing to my colleague from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.] It was among my constituency that the movement was born which was intended to wrest from us the power we had in the several counties of our State, and to put us—I mean the democratic party—in a hopeless minority. In one word, it was intended to annihilate us, and leave us forever without even a name whereby we might be known among men. That was the object with which the movement was started there by designing men. When that movement met me in the convention, and when resolutions directed against me were voted unanimously, I met my antagonists at the threshold and told them they would fail of their mission.

Afterward I met the same movement in another convention—the largest and most intelligent body of men that assembled in my district during the last year—a judicial convention, called together to nominate judges for the several courts of my district. In that convention there was a former member of this House, whom gentlemen will recognize when I give his name—Mr. Sawyer. Although the convention had not passed a single resolution upon the subject of back salary, he, true to his demagogical instincts, introduced the subject.

After a good deal of trouble I obtained the floor; and when I did I settled the matter in that district forever; at least up to the present time I have heard no more of it.

Now, I say to gentlemen here who may assail my action, let it be done "decently and in order." I have great respect for the gentlemen who presented this bill, but I would have a much greater respect for them if they would consider it like statesmen, and not like culprits goaded to do that which they are unwilling to do. This is a great question; one that involves the honor of this House and of every member in it; and that on the very first day of the session a special committee should be raised in order to rush the bill through without consideration or reflection, simply at the demand of popular clamor, is as disgusting to me as it is disgraceful.

This is my notion of the matter, and it is a notion which I entertain after meeting my people and discussing the subject before them. I do not know one of them who would not meet me with hissing and scorn if I were now to eat my own words and confess that I have been a scoundrel. In my own district I never had the reputation of being either a thief or a scoundrel, and I do not intend to carry such a reputation back with me from Washington. I intend to so conduct myself in the deliberations of this House as to command the respect of myself, of my wife and children, and of my constituency.

I do not intend to argue the general principles of this bill; it is unnecessary; every member of this House is fully familiar with them. We are now all receiving a salary of $7,500. Some of you may not be worth it; I believe I am. [Laughter.] I believe I am considered worth that at home; I believe my constituency will say so; and I am perfectly willing to go back and take their judgment upon my action here to-day. Yet men chosen by their constituents at the same time I was selected by mine come here now imbued with horror at the enormity of this offense; and although in days gone by their own hands have been stained with lucre taken in the same way and upon the same principle, they evince none the less zeal in prosecuting this crusade against those who supported the bill passed at the last session.

Mr. Speaker, let me say to them, and let me say to the gentleman upon my right, from my adjoining district in Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] let him go back, after this debate to-day, and, my word for it, he will make no more speeches on the "salary grab" in this House. [Laughter.] I know his constituency, and I know they are not the miserable tools and simpletons he would represent them to be. [Renewed laughter.]

One word more. Mr. Speaker,——

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will my colleague allow me——

Mr. LAMISON. No; not a word. [Laughter.]

One word more. The gentleman stands here to-day and teaches to us political ethics; he teaches to us moral ethics; he teaches to us, as it were, legal ethics. But I would beg him to remember that there is another maxim of the law, equally familiar to himself as it is to me, that when a party comes into court demanding equity he must himself do equity. Now, if he be the honest man he represents himself to be; if this bill be of such a character as to invoke all of the moral and physical hate which has inspired that speech delivered by him to-day, in which he has so largely dealt with the Greeks and with the Romans, then I ask him what he would have? And now, while referring to the Greeks and to the Romans, let me say there is not a man here to-day of any literary turn who would not be glad if he could have for example the portraits of the heroes among the Greeks and Trojans Homer has made so familiar to us in his immortal works.

There is not a man to-day here, sir, who would not give almost anything to know whether the figures sketched upon the discovered ruins at Nineveh are the true lineaments of those who raised these gigantic piles of antiquity. But, Mr. Speaker, in the case of the gentleman we are left to no such doubts, for so long as this Capitol stands, so long as one stone remains upon another, just so long will the true portrait of my friend from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] be indelibly preserved in the public libraries of the country as the man who produced the report made by the great committee sent to New York City for the purpose of investigating election frauds. [Great laughter.] Here is the book and here is the portrait. [Renewed laughter.] [Here Mr. LAMISON held up the book and exhibited the portrait to the House.] It comes from the Congresssonal Library; it has the congressional mark upon it, that it belongs to the United States; but I do not know by what appropriation bill the features of my distinguished friend were embalmed forever as the frontispiece to this book. [Laughter.] I am requested to break the current of my remarks right here to read an extract from the Congressional Globe, second session, Thirty-ninth Congress.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. * * * Every member of this House has taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. That Constitution declares that "Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law." When members have taken an oath to obey that Constitution, which so declares, I take it that it is the duty of a member to accept the provision which is made by law.

[Great laughter.]

One word more. I wish only to say that, in disposing of this bill, I think it would be more decorous on the part of this Congress that it should receive a fair and honest consideration. Let it go back to the committee. Let careful inquiry be made whether the present compensation be too much or too little, and then let fair-minded men on both sides vote like honest men upon the dictates of their honest judgments. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The rules positively prohibit any expression of applause or disapprobation of any member's remarks.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Mr. Speaker, judging from the indications here, I should suppose the salary bill, while the most unpopular measure in the country, is the most popular one in this House. I do not intend to indulge in any declamation. I have no claims to make of superior merit to other gentlemen, and I desire only a few moments to explain my views in regard to this question. It is an important one, and should be treated with consideration and gravity. I do not propose to excite any antagonism between myself and any other gentleman on this question. My only purpose is to state substantially what my views were when this bill was passed, and what they are to-day. And let me say, in this connection, whatever view we may take of our own service here, there is back of each one of us a great constituency which has the right to be heard. They are heard in their public assemblies, in the discussions of conventions, and elsewhere. But I make a distinction between the just expression of public sentiment by the people in their conventions and the clamor of that portion of the press that lives by detraction. The sensational press is often very unjust to those who are engaged in the public service.

I do not join in that clamor, nor do I allow that clamor to control my action. The retroactive salary is no new thing. It has been voted repeatedly, and it was voted for by many of the most distinguished and honorable men in all these Congresses.

I do not think the honest judgment of the country can afford to condemn all these men in the past history of the country from its commencement to this hour. I do not, therefore, accept that clamor, or bow to it. But I am of the same judgment as I was at the time the bill was passed, that $5,000 was a fair compensation for a member of Congress. It is not a large compensation, but a reasonable one. At least, taking into consideration the services of the eminent men before us, taking into consideration the services and compensation of the judges of our courts, the heads of Departments, the members of the Legislatures of our States, I believed then, and I believe now, that $5,000 is a fair compensation for the time that we give to the public business. For that reason I was opposed to an increase of our pay. For that reason I am in favor of going back to the old pay, not because I am influenced by a newspaper clamor, but because I believe it is right.

But some will say, perhaps, "The gentleman may set a price on his own services, and if he is not worth more than that let him take no more." I claim to be no better than other gentlemen. I do claim that, while I have been here, to the best of my ability I have served my constituents faithfully, never having been absent from the House one hour except in case of sickness; and I have been absent from sickness but six days during the six years I have been here. But judging from what I am able to do, and what I see my fellow-members able to accomplish, and looking to the compensation paid to our judges, to executive officers, and to the members of our State Legislatures, in my judgment—and I think it is the deliberate and honest judgment of the country—$5,000, while not a large, is a fair compensation. Therefore I regret that the bill was passed increasing our pay; and in the bill which I have introduced I have embodied the principle to which I was committed before the people.

I claim no credit for having returned my "back pay," but simply did it because I believed it right. And, following that up, as many members here have not taken their "back pay," and nearly all, I believe, are willing to return it, I have incorporated that principle in my bill. It expresses simply my own individual opinion. I believe it to be right; and it is for that reason that I have placed it in my bill. I have heard many members on both sides of the House express themselves perfectly willing, when the law is passed, as far as "back pay" is concerned, to have it covered into the Treasury.

I have not risen to make a long speech, for if gentlemen vote the bill up or vote it down they will no doubt vote according to their conscientious convictions. We can afford to be honorable and generous with the people in this matter of fixing our salaries, because, by the Constitution, this is left in our hands; and a high sense of duty should make us careful in a matter where our honor is involved. We should be sure we do not overestimate our own services.

Then the situation of the country should be regarded. The time has come when 20 per cent. has been deducted in all our great business establishments from the pay of the workmen. Shall we increase our pay 50 per cent. when the wages of the laborers of the country have been diminished on an average 20 per cent.? Shall we, when our finances are running astern; when, probably, we may have trouble with foreign nations; when extra appropriations may be necessary—shall we, setting a price on our own services, advance our compensation 50 per cent., or shall we go back to the old standard? For my own part I do not wish to go beyond the mark of just compensation. I would rather have it written on my humble monument, when I am dead, that I chose to serve faithfully for less, rather than demand, because I had the power to do it, more of my constituents and my country; that I chose to do right; and that, if I made an error in fixing my compensation, it was not against my constituents but against myself.

I will not longer occupy the time of the House.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 as follows:

In line 81 strike out the words "of the Vice-President of the United States, and Speaker of the House of Representatives."

And amend section 2, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "that," in the first line, and insert the following: "Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in future Congresses shall receive each a salary of $6,000 per annum, and this sum shall be in lieu of all existing provisions of law for their compensation, except actual individual traveling expenses from their homes to the seat of Government and return by the direct route of usual travel, once for each session of the House to which such Senator, Representative, or Delegate belongs.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that the amendment I offered contains several propositions. One is to strike out that portion of the bill which contemplates a reduction of the pay of the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House. The other is to fix the pay of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates at $6,000 per annum, with the proviso, however, that the change shall not take effect during the present Congress.

Now, I will state the reason why I propose that amendment. I am satisfied that, so far as the people of the district I represent are concerned, they are satisfied with the law as it now stands. They do not object to $7,500 per annum for a member of Congress, but what they did object to (and what they do still object to) was the clause making the increase retroactive. That was what they thought wrong. I am satisfied myself that Congress ought not to alter the compensation of members so as to affect the members of the Congress making the change. That is the position that I stand upon, and I am now ready, and will be whenever the opportunity presents itself, to vote for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting any Congress from hereafter altering the compensation of its own members. That is what I favor; and although I know the precedents have been the other way, yet I am in favor of changing the precedents. But it occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that if it is wrong in principle for Congress to increase its own pay, it is also wrong for Congress to reduce its own pay. [Laughter.] I think that the principle applies both ways.

It has been intimated by some gentlemen that we of the South, the Southern Representatives, as a general thing, are opposed to repealing the increased pay. Now, I do not admit that, as a general thing, we are opposed to the repeal, although it may be true that a great many of us are.

But, sir, if we are opposed to repealing the increased pay it is not because we defy public sentiment, but because we have the privilege and the high honor of representing a constituency that is more liberal on this question than are the constituencies of some of our Western brethren. That is the reason why we do it. I am satisfied that the southern people have not made so much fuss about this question as some of the northern people have. You will have noticed that the southern newspapers have not denounced the members of the Forty-second Congress so severely as the northern newspapers have, and you will have noticed that the political conventions of the two parties in the Southern States have not denounced the members of the Forty-second Congress as severely as the political conventions of the North have done. We, consequently, cast our votes in accordance with what we believe and know to be the sentiment of the people that we represent. And now I say that the people, so far as I have been able to ascertain, are satisfied with the pay as it stands. They did believe, and do, that the retroactive clause was wrong. I think so, too, and that is the reason why I do not want Congress to change the compensation now. If we believe the pay is too high, reduce it, but do not let the reduction apply to ourselves. [Laughter.] If we believe that it is too small, then increase it, but do not let the increase apply to ourselves.

The Forty-second Congress fixed the salary at $7,500 per annum. I say, let us provide that Congress shall not hereafter increase the salary of its own members. If the members of the Forty-second Congress had fixed the pay at $4,000 instead of $5,000, had reduced instead of increasing it, I would still have been opposed to members of the Forty-third Congress adding to it so as to affect themselves; that is my position.

But I have been thinking during the discussion of this question that some gentlemen are making a mistake in what they believe to be public sentiment in this matter. They seem to think that the people of the country require a reduction of the pay of members below what it was before the last increase. Now, I am satisfied that the people do not require that; I am satisfied that not even the people of the Western, and Northern, and Eastern States require a reduction of the pay of Congress below what it was prior to the last increase. The members of the Forty-second Congress, and of each prior Congress for several years, drew $5,000 salary, mileage at the rate of 20 cents a mile each way, and had the benefit of the franking privilege, beside a proper allowance for newspapers, stationery, &c. Now, to put the salary back to $5,000 without those perquisites, would be to reduce the pay below what it was prior to the last increase. I am satisfied that the people do not demand that; and when Representatives go that far they go beyond public sentiment.

My friend from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] the Boanerges of this debate, says that the republican party has been defeated in many States, and has had its majority reduced in others, in consequence of this measure for the increase of salaries; and yet he says that the party is not responsible for it. Well, if there is any force in that argument it amounts to this, that the people have condemned the republican party for doing one thing, and have indorsed the democratic party for doing the same thing. I cannot see the force of such an argument.

Now, although I am satisfied from my knowledge of southern feeling that our constituents will indorse our action if we vote to keep the pay what it is, yet I offer a proposition, which I think is fair and liberal, to make the pay $6,000 per annum, the increase of $1,000 over the $5,000 to be in lieu of mileage, stationery, and the franking privilege; in other words, that we abolish mileage, that we abolish stationery allowances, that we abolish every perquisite that members of Congress have heretofore enjoyed, and add $1,000 to the $5,000 to make up for that. If that amount does not quite equal it, then reduce the pay that much; if it exceeds it, then we increase it that much. That is my proposition; and I make it apply to future Congresses and not to this, in order to be consistent in the proposition I have assumed on this question, that a Congress ought not to interfere with its own pay.

Sir, I hope that this proposition may be adopted as a compromise, and that the North and South will shake hands across the bloody chasm. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be wiser policy for me to indicate my sentiments on this question by the votes I will cast when the bill comes to be acted upon. But as I was not sent here to seek personal popularity by following any policy of my own, nor any policy excepting such as may be indicated by the time-honored principles of the democratic party, I feel that it is not inappropriate for me to say a few words upon the pending question which has agitated the whole country. When, upon the night of the 3d of March, or rather early in the morning of the 4th of March, 1873, I was informed by the newspaper press that the salary bill had passed both Houses of Congress, I felt that it was, if not an improper measure in some of its features, at least it was not a measure that would commend itself to the admiration and support of the democratic party. Pending its consideration we were taught by the press that it was only another scheme of the republican party to plunder the country in their own interest, and that the democratic party would have no lot nor part in it; but when I found that it had been passed by aid of democratic votes, I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I was in a measure disappointed; and I then came to the conclusion that perhaps in many of its features it was not as reprehensible as I had been led to believe. [Laughter.]

I think I know the opinions of my constituents, and to me they are the country. I know not what New York says, nor do I care; nor do I inquire what Ohio says on this question; but I have desired to discover the sentiments of the people of Maryland, and I propose to vindicate that sentiment, regardless of personal consequences.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Maryland stigmatize and condemn only certain features of the salary bill.

The action of their representatives in the Forty-second Congress who voted for the salary bill was universally condemned, because particularly of its retroactive feature. The action of Congress was regarded as the breach of an implied contract in voting the members, at the last hour of their term, when many of them were retiring from public life to return no more, a larger sum than they had agreed to accept for their services. But I am also fully convinced, from a fair and reasonable consideration of the opinions of my people, that the increase of salary would be approved by them if it were passed under fair and reasonable circumstances.

Now, sir, I am of opinion that the press on this question goes even further than the people. The press of Maryland is unanimous in demanding not only the total repeal of all increase of salary, but also that members be compelled to refund, in so far as this can be done by law under the Constitution. I defer, with all proper respect, to the opinions of the press, and it becomes me as a Representative from Maryland to sustain by my vote the voice of my constituents as I may apprehend it. In that view I propose to discharge my duty on this question after a fair canvass of the opinions of the entire country as brought to my attention by the Representatives on this floor, and to cast my vote in an honest and conscientious discharge of the responsibility resting upon me.

I would say further to the House that I believe it is the opinion of the entire intelligent population of Maryland that it would be proper and right to restore that privilege, which belonged to the people more than to the Representatives—the privilege of acquiring information by means of the numerous documents and books published by order of Congress, and that they should be conveyed to them in some way not at the expense of their Representatives. I believe they would justify a re-enactment of the franking privilege, in some form which would enable them to reap the intelligence which will otherwise be concealed in our vaults, and have it scattered broadcast throughout the country, so that all men may know not only what their servants here are doing, but what their other servants in the Cabinet and in the Departments are doing with the public money.

Now I desire to say that when I find gentlemen upon this floor who I know must have made, in coming here to represent their people, sacrifices to which mine are but little, eager, anxious, and determined on this question, I am compelled to form the opinion either that they feel that they have done at least some measure of wrong in raising salaries, or that they now find, upon calm consideration of the facts, that a concurrence of their views with the views of the country will be better; that a sacrifice must be made by them and the pay reduced to its former standard. I must be guided in some measure by the almost concurrent opinion of members of the House. I have no reason to say that their judgment is not wiser than mine. I am here for the first time, and I find from my little experience in the city of Washington that it is possible for a man to live here on the old salary of $5,000. This is not difficult unless members are accompanied by their families, and I doubt that it was ever contemplated in any respect that their presence was necessary for the security or expedition of the proper legislation of the country. Certainly it cannot be contended that the families of members are entitled to provision for luxurious living out of the public Treasury.

Therefore, when I find an almost unanimous expression of opinion on the part of my fellow-members in favor of returning to the former rate of pay, I say that I am gratified, because it will be joyful news to my constituents to know that, while they are willing, perhaps, to pay me more than $5,000 a year, my wisdom agrees with the concurrent wisdom of the whole House, and I am willing to take a less sum, and will doubtless serve them as well as and as faithfully as though I had millions.

But there is one feature of this bill to which I am utterly opposed—that is, a feature of this bill and of several of the proposed amendments. I refer to the cutting down of the small salary voted to the officers of this House. I am entirely opposed to any such reduction of their salaries, because neither public clamor, nor public sentiment, nor the newspaper press has demanded it; and if we are willing to make ourselves victims upon the altar of public clamor, if you will, or public opinion, there is no reason why we should ask these clerks to become parties to the sacrifice. Let us reduce our salaries, but let the officers of the House keep theirs at the present standard; their services entitle them to it, and the country will justify them in receiving it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NIBLACK. I have not sought the floor at this time for the purpose of speaking on this question, but I desire to ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill to consent that we may adjourn.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. There was a very anxious desire expressed yesterday on the part of members that this matter should not be hurried, but that it would be open for free discussion. A desire was manifested by some gentlemen near me, whom I do not see now, and others in this House, to take part in the discussion upon this bill. To-day has thus far been given to this discussion; it is not yet late; I hope the House will be gratified by more speeches to-day. We have sat here patiently, and for one I am willing to sit here longer.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I gave notice yesterday that about the end of the debate to-morrow I would withdraw the motion to recommit, and take the further sense of the House upon this bill. I hope it will not then be claimed that because of the short time occupied to-day the time for debate should then be extended. Of course, I have no objection to adjourning now.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were presented, under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. COTTON: The petition of J. G. Querk, of Iowa, in regard to pensions to maimed soldiers.

By Mr. FOSTER: The petition of Ralph Wilcox and 25 others, of Clarksfield, Huron County, Ohio, praying for the enactment of laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

By Mr. GUNCKEL: The petition of 570 disabled veterans of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers, near Dayton, Ohio, praying for the passage of a law equalizing bounties to honorably discharged soldiers of the late war, and granting to such as have been disabled, and the heirs of those who died in the service, one hundred and sixty acres of land without condition.

By Mr. HATHORN: The petition of John Young, of Amsterdam, New York, for extension of letters-patent.

Also, the petition of A. L. Reynolds and others, for the settlement of all international difficulties by arbitration, without a resort to arms.

Also, the petition of the Saratoga Monument Association, for an appropriation of $200,000, to aid in the erection of a monument at Schuylerville, New York, to commemorate the surrender of the British army, under General Burgoyne, on the 17th of October, 1777.

By Mr. HYDE: Petitions for the establishment of a mail-route from Pattonsburgh, in Daviess County, to Allendale, in Worth County, Missouri, via Burr Oak, Hamptonville, Martinsville, and Jewett, in Harrison County; and from Chillicothe, in Livingston County, via Avalon, in Livingston County, to Carrollton, in Carroll County, Missouri.

By Mr. LAMAR: The petition of J. & T. Green, asking indemnity for property destroyed by the Army of the United States.

By Mr. NEAL: The petition of Joel Thurman and other citizens of Highland County, Ohio, praying for an increase of pension for soldiers of the war of 1812.

By Mr. RANDALL: The petition of Sarah Burns, mother of James Burns, late a private in Company G, Twentieth Pennsylvania Cavalry, asking a pension.

By Mr. TREMAIN: The petition of John L. Perry, president of the National Association of Stove Manufacturers, and 100 others, praying for the passage of a law for the better security of property in metal patterns.

POST-ROUTE BILL INTRODUCED.

The following bill was introduced, under the rules, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:

By Mr. VANCE: A bill to establish post-routes in North Carolina, as follows: From Hendersonville, in the county of Henderson, to the Forks of Pigeon, in Haywood County; from Asheville, via Democrat, to Flag Ponds, in Washington County, State of Tennessee; from Bakersville to Johnson City, State of Tennessee.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 10, 1873.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 470) relating to the limitation of steam-pressure of vessels used exclusively for towing and carrying freight on the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

A bill (H. R. No. 472) granting general amnesty, and prescribing an oath of office.

A bill (H. R. No. 474) to establish a post-route from the village of L'Anse, in the county of Houghton and State of Michigan, to Huron Bay, in said county and State.

A bill (H. R. No. 478) to provide for the redemption of the loan of 1858; and

A bill (H. R. No. 223) changing the times for holding certain district courts of the United States for the State of Iowa.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of colored citizens of the United States praying the passage of the supplementary civil rights bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FENTON presented the petition of John Young, of Amsterdam, New York, praying an extension of his patent for an improved washing and wringing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of the Sun Mutual Insurance Company, of New York, and three other insurance companies, asking for a rehearing of their claim for the loss of the bark Caldera, out of the surplus of the Chinese indemnity fund; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the papers of Louis Volkhausen, of the city of New York, praying for bounty as a veteran volunteer of the Fifty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FENTON. I also present the petition of the Society of Friends, of New York, Samuel Willets, president, and R. W. Underhill, secretary, asking for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the traffic in alcoholic liquors, and its relations to crime.

I have another petition from the New York State Temperance Society, signed by its president, Mr. E. Remington, of a similar character; and I am requested, in a note from Mr. Powell, of New York, to ask the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Finance. I do not know that any rule has been established by the Senate at this session in respect to the reference of these papers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the reference proposed will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are the papers?

Mr. FENTON. They request the appointment of a commission of inquiry by Congress concerning the traffic in alcoholic liquors and its relations to crime.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then that is the right reference.

Mr. FENTON. I only present the petitions. I feel bound, however, in view of the request in this communication, to suggest that reference to the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. Before those papers are referred, I desire to say that I have a petition of a similar character, sent to me by the officers of the Young Men's Christian Association of Philadelphia; and the prayer is, that legislation may be reported to suppress within the sphere of national authority the traffic in alcoholic liquors and beverages. The most important question to be considered upon these petitions will be the question of the powers that shall be conferred upon this commission; and therefore I intend to move that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FENTON. I am inclined to think, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, that that would be the better reference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope we shall consider the question of the reference of these petitions before any more are presented. I object to the reference to the Committee on the Judiciary. I think I can take the liberty to report from that committee now that Congress has no authority on the subject whatever, except in the District of Columbia and in the Territories, and possibly upon the high seas. I think it pretty safe to say that. Therefore, Mr. President, in all seriousness, it is purely a question of expediency. So far as this District is concerned, the question belongs to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and so far as the Territories are concerned, it belongs to the Committee on Territories. I have no hesitation in saying that I should be very glad to see such legislation as is proposed passed. I am perfectly willing to say that; but it is not doing right toward the Committee on the Judiciary, which is actually burdened with matters that really belong to its jurisdiction, that these papers should be sent to us.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves the reference of these petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that at a previous session considerable discussion took place in the Senate on the subject of referring petitions of a precisely similar character with these, the result of which was that they were ultimately referred to the Committee on Finance, and that committee reported by bill. Now, I have one of these petitions from certain officers of the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance of Ohio, which I am requested to present; and with it comes a note asking me to move its reference to the Committee on Finance. In view of what has been said by the Senator from Vermont, and the fact that that committee considered the subject before and reported a bill, and that the petitioners undoubtedly, in asking that it be referred to the same committee, consider that committee as favorable to the petition, so that referring it to that committee comes within the parliamentary rule of sending a child to a good nurse, I think these petitions ought to go to the Committee on Finance, and I shall vote against any other reference.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have also a petition of a like character from the——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTT.]

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a word to say in regard to that reference. I have a petition of like character from the Temperance Alliance of New Jersey. This petition does not only ask for legislation—that part of the petition is subject to the remarks made by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary—but it also asks for inquiry—for a commission to inquire as to the effect of the traffic in alcoholic drinks on crime, pauperism, and the public health. That inquiry, I suppose, may come within the power of Congress, not merely restricting the inquiry to the District of Columbia; but I agree that the petitions should go to the Committee on Finance; and I ask that reference of the one that I present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania insist on his motion?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is that the petition presented by him be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the reference to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SCOTT. The reference of these petitions was the subject of some considerable discussion at the last session; and it will be remembered that the chairman of the Committee on Finance at last, for the purpose of getting rid of the subject, said he would have the petitions referred to that committee, and that he would report back in substance what was known as the Ohio restraining liquor law, and then hand it over to the then Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Pomeroy,] who, I believe, was chairman of the Committee on Territories, or on that committee. It was not treated as a subject properly within the cognizance of the Committee on Finance, for, it will be observed, these petitions do not ask that Congress shall make this inquiry, but that it shall appoint a commission whose duty it shall be to make the inquiry; and therefore, as I have already stated, the question of the power to be conferred on that commission would be the real subject to be considered in any committee—not the question of the effects of the traffic in alcoholic liquors. That the committee are not instructed to inquire into; but we are asked to raise a commission whose duty it shall be to make that inquiry.

I have, as I have stated, a similar petition, and I can only say that in the amount of business properly belonging to the Committee on Finance, and which is likely to come before it, if the Senate wish to send this child to a good nurse, they had better find some other committee than that one to take charge of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to refer the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I offer a petition similar to those already presented to-day, from Samuel D. Hastings, Right Worthy Grand Templar, and M. S. Williams, Right Worthy Grand Secretary of the national organization of the Independent Order of Good Templars, representing 45 grand lodges, 6,000 subordinate associations, and 350,000 members, asking for the appointment of the commission already described. I am told, in a letter accompanying this petition, that it represents the largest temperance organization in this country, probably the largest in the world. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance; and in making this motion, I must say that I cannot enter into the sensibilities of Senators as to this reference. It seems to me that so many petitioners deserve to be heard, and that one of our ablest committees will do well if it considers carefully the petition and makes some answer to it, either by a favorable or adverse report, but makes answer. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of W. H. L. Combs and other officers of the Sons of Temperance of the State of Virginia, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to crime, pauperism, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a petition of the National Temperance Society, of which William E. Dodge is president, asking for the appointment of a commission; and, with the view to its going to one of the ablest committees of the body, I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Rudolph Eickemeyer, of Yonkers, New York, and accompanying papers, touching the invention of certain mechanism especially adapted and solely intended for stitching linings into hats, and praying an extension of a patent for the same; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SCOTT. I present the petition of John Wanamaker, president, and other officers of the Young Men's Christian Association, of Philadelphia, asking for the same commission to which reference has already been made. In obedience to the expressed will of the Senate, I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I present a petition from G. W. Merreil, John Gundry, and other officers of the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance of the State of Ohio, asking for the appointment of a commission such as has been mentioned in other petitions presented to-day. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the petition of John Stevens and a large number of other citizens of Minneapolis, Minnesota, asking for the appointment of the commission mentioned by several Senators, to inquire concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of citizens of Illinois, praying the establishment of a mint in Chicago, Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of J. Lash, G. P. Lyman, J. L. Burnside, and other citizens of Illinois, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of Wells C. McCool, late first lieutenant Company I, Twenty-ninth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, praying payment of the amount due him from the United States on account of his military services at the time of his dismissal from the service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Arch H. Stuart and 100 other soldiers and officers of different companies and regiments of Iowa and other States, praying that the bounty to discharged soldiers and sailors may be equalized and 160 acres of land given to each soldier and sailor; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of Thomas H. Rabe, president of the Alleghany County Christian Temperance Alliance of Pennsylvania, of Rev. Elliot E. Swift, Rev. William M. Robinson, and other clergymen of Alleghany, Pennsylvania, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CRAGIN presented the petition of J. B. Hendly, Grand Worthy Chief Templar, and J. L. Odell, Secretary of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars of the State of New Hampshire, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PRATT presented the petition of Mrs. Barbara A. Nock, mother of William H. Nock, deceased, late a private in Company D, Seventy-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying for arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, presented the petition of W. O. Buckley and Thomas G. W. Jefferson, officers of the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance of Connecticut, and other citizens, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic in connection with pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Frederick F. Baury, praying to be commissioned a lieutenant in the United States Navy and to be placed on the retired list in consequence of wounds received in the line of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of the Massachusetts Temperance Alliance, signed by Rev. A. A. Miner, D. D., president, and Rev. William M. Thayer, secretary, representing a constituency of 10,000 members, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WADLEIGH presented the petition of Benjamin Blanchard, a soldier of the War of 1812, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Jacob K. Marshall, a soldier of the War of 1812, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, presented the petition of Edward Stabler, jr., president, and George M. Lamb, secretary, of the Library and Literary Association of the Society of Friends of Baltimore, Maryland, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relation to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I present the petition of the Supreme Council of Templars of Honor and Temperance, a petition very similar in its character, I suppose, to those that have already been presented; and I desire to say that, considering the importance of this subject and considering the statement made by a member of the Finance Committee, to which the former petitions have been referred, feeling that if it goes in the direction which the others have already gone it goes to an unfriendly nurse, and sympathizing entirely with the sentiments expressed by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] and feeling and believing that it touches the subject of education and labor at a great many points, I desire to give this petition a different direction from the others, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.) It will be so referred if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a petition signed by Oscar D. Wetmore, as the head of the National Division of Sons of Temperance, and Samuel W. Hodges, Most Worthy Scribe, alleging that they represent in this matter 93,252 men and women of North America, praying for the appointment of a commission in relation to the traffic in alcoholic liquors; and I move that it take the same reference as the last one did, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That reference will be made.

Mr. HOWE. I have a petition of the same character from the officers of the Independent Order of Good Templars of the State of Wisconsin, making the same prayer; and I wish to say to the Senate that this prayer is not for any legislation in the world, but they ask, on behalf of a very large number of the American people, that Congress will grant a commission to make certain inquiries to the end that legislation may be proposed. The petition assumes that neither the petitioners nor Congress understand this whole subject of the liquor traffic well enough to recommend legislation; and it assumes that a careful inquiry might suggest legislation very appropriate and very important. Now, I am specially requested to move the reference of this particular petition to the Committee on Finance. I do not understand that that committee are hostile to the general object of the petitioners; nor have I any reason to assume that they are specially friendly to it. I see no reason why the request of my correspondents should not be granted; and so I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance, and I hope that committee will report favorably upon it.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. FENTON, it was Ordered, That the memorial and accompanying papers of John Ahearn, of Albany, New York, praying for extra compensation for subsisting troops of the United States, during the rebellion, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. FENTON, it was Ordered, That the memorial and accompanying papers of the heirs of Captain Joshua Chamberlain, late of Ontario County, New York, praying for half-pay as captain during the revolutionary war, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. FENTON, it was Ordered, That the memorial and accompanying papers of Mrs. Anna M. Orne, administratrix, &c., praying for payment for damages sustained, and reimbursement for destruction and appropriation of the property of her late husband, by the United States forces at Memphis, Tennessee, during the late war, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. MORTON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Henry C. Smith be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. BOREMAN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of James V. Boughnet be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. BOUTWELL, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of P. W. Whitcomb be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Colonel Thomas Worthington, of Ohio, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. ALCORN, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Wade Hopkins, of Mississippi, sole surviving heir of Colonel David Hopkins, deceased, late of South Carolina, praying for half-pay as an officer in the revolutionary war and for reimbursement for certain moneys advanced in aid of the war, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 71) to authorize the organization of national banks without circulation, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask leave to introduce a bill to amend the act of Congress to expedite and regulate the printing of public documents, approved the 25th of June, 1864; and I wish to give notice that the object of this bill is to repeal a law which directs the publication of the abridgment of the President's message and the accompanying documents. That is printed entirely for popular distribution, not for any use of the Executive or Legislative Departments of the Government; and as the franking privilege has been abolished and the cost of transmitting the book through the mail is very near the value of it, it is supposed to be a useless expense to continue the publication any longer. I wish Senators to understand that some of them have expressed a desire to have the law repealed.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 140) to amend the act of Congress to expedite and regulate the printing of public documents, approved June 25, 1864; and it was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 141) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 142) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FENTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 143) for the relief of Norman Wiard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS, in pursuance of previous notice, asked, and obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 144) providing for the free transmission by mail of newspapers and periodicals; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 145) to amend an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on western prairies;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CROZIER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 146) to repeal an act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 147) authorizing national banks that have decided to reduce their capital stock to withdraw a proportion of bonds upon retiring their own circulating notes, or depositing lawful money of the United States in the proportion provided by law; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 148) for the relief of Elias C. Boudinot; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 149) for the relief of certain settlers on the Fort Randall military reservation; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 150) to authorize the issue of United States notes held as Treasury reserve; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that the United States shall never make anything but gold and silver a legal tender in the payment of debts; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

"THE LETTER-WRITER."

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be instructed to consider the expediency of providing a further convenience in correspondence known as the "letter-writer," with a one-cent stamp, being a new article of stationery adapted for a letter, circular, and newspaper wrapper.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 223) changing the times for holding certain district courts of the United States for the State of Iowa was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 474) to establish a post-route from the village of L'Anse, in the county of Houghton and State of Michigan, to Huron Bay, in said county and State, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. No. 478) to provide for the redemption of the loan of 1858 was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 472) granting general amnesty and prescribing an oath of office was read a first time by its title.

Mr. SUMNER. I object to the second reading of that bill to-day. I do it with no opposition to the bill, but because I am anxious, before it becomes a law, to secure justice to our colored fellow-citizens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.) The bill will lie over, objection being made to its second reading to-day.

STEAM PRESSURE.

The bill (H. R. No. 470) relating to the limitation of steam pressure of vessels used exclusively for towing and carrying freight on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, was read a first time by its title.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask leave to make a short statement, preparatory to a motion to proceed to the consideration of that bill without a reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read the second time.

The bill was read the second time by its title.

Mr. SCOTT. It will be remembered, Mr. President, that in the general steamboat bill, as it was framed, there was a provision applicable alike to passenger steamboats and to freight and tug boats, which, upon examination, was found to prevent practically the use of freight and tug-boats on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. The section referred to was introduced and passed for the purpose of relieving those boats on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers from the terms of that law, with a limitation in it expiring upon the 17th of this month, (December.) The reason for that limitation was that a new steamboat bill was then pending in Congress, and it was expected that it would pass, and it contained a provision which would render this special law unnecessary. That bill was a very voluminous one, was sent to a committee of conference, and the report upon it was never reached. The consequence is, that law will expire by its own limitation on the 17th of December; and the supervising inspector of steamboats, uniting with the Secretary of the Treasury, has requested that it be re-enacted. I have conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and he says that he concurs in that request, and that a reference of this bill will not be necessary. I therefore move that the Senate proceed at once to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HAMLIN.) The Senator from Pennsylvania asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider this bill at the present time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The bill was read at length. It proposes so to modify the provisions of the act to provide for the better security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, approved February 28, 1871, so far as they relate to the limitation of steam pressure of steamboats used exclusively for towing and carrying freight on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, as to substitute for such boats 150 pounds of steam pressure in place of 110 pounds, as provided in that act for the standard pressure upon standard boilers of 42 inches diameter and of plates of one-fourth of an inch in thickness. It declares that such boats may, on the written permit of the supervising inspector of the district in which they shall carry on their business, be permitted to carry steam above the standard pressure of 110 pounds and not exceeding the standard pressure of 150 pounds to the square inch.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask to hear the provision of the bill read again which describes the boats to which it applies.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

So far as they relate to the limitation of steam pressure of steamboats used exclusively for towing and carrying freight on the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

Mr. CONKLING. I asked for the reading a second time of that language in order that the Senate might know and that I might know that it has no application to passenger boats; and although my honorable friend from Pennsylvania may have stated it—I was diverted for a moment—I wish to inquire of him whether the bill now before us has any effect except to make permanent those identical provisions which, from time to time, we have passed limiting them to a fixed period.

Mr. SCOTT. That is my understanding of the bill, Mr. President, that it simply makes permanent the limitation which is fixed for freight and tug-boats on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and has no effect whatever upon any other provision in what is known as the general steamboat bill. I have in my hands, I may say while up, a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, requesting that this provision be enacted so that its expiration on the 17th of this month will not interfere with the commerce of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. The letter can be read if any one wishes to hear it.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not ask to have that read. I only wish to say that I make no objection to this bill, for the reason that we are assured that it pertains to the Mississippi River and Ohio River and their tributaries, and to freight and tow-boats alone.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania whether the former acts dealing with this same subject removed the restriction from tow-boats and freight-boats, or from tow-boats only. My impression is, that it removed the restriction from tow-boats only, and that this is an enlargement of the liberty which was granted to tow-boats by the former acts.

Mr. SCOTT. In answer to the Senator from Massachusetts, I will say that I have only had the opportunity of hearing the bill read at the Clerk's desk; but the Representative from the Alleghany district has informed me that the language of the bill is identical with the bill passed, which expires on the 17th of this month; and my recollection of that bill is, that it applied to pressure both upon steamboats for carrying freight and tug or tow-boats on those rivers. There is a copy of the section, however, accompanying the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and by having that read it can be very readily ascertained whether this bill is any extension of the provisions of the former bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The reason why I make the suggestion, Mr. President, is that the bill now before the Senate goes beyond the removal of the difficulty, which was assigned to the Department when the original bill was passed. The difficulty stated was that tow-boats were sometimes placed in such an exigency that it was necessary to apply all the steam they could possibly command without reference to results, and that those boats engaged in towing took the risk. With freight-boats the case is different, and the reason assigned for the removal of the limitation originally did not apply to one class of boats covered by this bill; but it may have been that that bill as passed was precisely like the present bill.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me one moment, I have before me the bill, and also the provision which was approved on the 17th of December, 1872, and I see by comparison that the phraseology in that behalf is identical. I will read from the act of December 17, 1872: "So far as they relate to the limitation of steam pressure of steamboats used exclusively for towing and carrying freight on the Mississippi River and its tributaries." These are the precise words contained in this bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I am content. I do not know that any evil has resulted from the former law.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, this is a bill affecting the navigation of the Mississippi, the section of country from which I come, and I desire to have it passed over for a few days. I design to send the bill to some of the leading men in the city of Saint Louis, who are engaged in this branch of business, and who are deeply interested in it. There can be no harm in postponing the bill for a few days until I can get an answer from those persons. The bill affects the navigation of the Mississippi and its tributaries. Perhaps I have not been as diligent as I should have been, because I had no expectation that the bill would be put so early on its passage. I hope that the bill will be laid over for a few days until I can have the opportunity of consulting in reference to it with gentlemen in my city who are affected by it.

Mr. SCOTT. Has the attention of the Senator been arrested by the statement that this is a bill for relief from a very burdensome provision which hampered and really prevented business from being done on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, and that by its own terms it will expire on the 17th of this month? If it is permitted to expire, it is a practical embargo upon the freight business and the tug business on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. I have no desire to ask the passage of the bill against the wishes of any gentleman whose constituents are interested; but I think, if the Senator from Missouri will look at it, he will see it is largely to the interest of his constituents that this bill should pass immediately.

Mr. BOGY. Then I will say this: if the bill is laid over until to-morrow, I will make it my duty to look into the subject to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator submit a motion to postpone?

Mr. BOGY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state that the pressure was very strong at an early period in the last session for the passage of the bill suspending the law for one year. The allegations were that it was utterly impossible, at certain stages of the water in the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, for the tugs engaged in that traffic to stem the current; that it was absolutely a prohibition to their traffic. Those were the allegations made, and the Committee on Commerce then reported the bill for one year, and this, as I understand, is simply a repetition of it for another year.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri, before he urges his motion to postpone, to have the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury read and see what there is in it. I ask for the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on postponing the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. RAMSEY. Cannot that communication be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. RAMSEY. Then I should like to hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The communication from the Secretary of the Treasury will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, December 8, 1873.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a circular issued by this Department in February last, relating to the limitation of steam pressure on towing and freight boats on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and based upon section 9 of an act of Congress approved December 17, 1872.

As will be seen, by the reading of the section and act referred to, the privilege of carrying an increased pressure of steam in boilers of the class of boats and on the waters above named expires on the 17th instant.

Referring to the letter of my predecessor under date of June 1, 1872, to the same effect, I recommend that section 9 of the aforesaid act be continued in force for the period of twelve months from December 17, 1873.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

Hon. Z. CHANDLER,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that, instead of postponing the bill, he permit it to be laid aside informally until he satisfies himself about it, and we can then resume its consideration.

Mr. BOGY. Very well; I will look at it in the mean time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his motion?

Mr. BOGY. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid on the table for the present.

Mr. BOGY subsequently said: Mr. President, after examining the steamboat bill and consulting with some of my colleagues of the lower House, I withdraw all objection to its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senate will resume the consideration of House bill No. 470. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPECIE PAYMENTS—THE CURRENCY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask leave to report a resolution from the Committee on Finance, which I desire to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the duty of Congress during its present session to adopt definite measures to redeem the pledge made in the act approved March 18, 1869, entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," as follows: "And the United States also pledges its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin;" and the Committee on Finance is directed to report to the Senate, at as early a day as practicable, such measures as will not only redeem this pledge of the public faith, but will also furnish a currency of uniform value, always redeemable in gold or its equivalent, and so adjusted as to meet the changing wants of trade and commerce.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands this resolution to have been reported by the Committee on Finance, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to present to the Senate a resolution expressive of my own views and those of a minority of the committee on the same subject, and to have it now read and printed for the consideration of the Senate, stating that I propose to offer it at the time this committee's resolution comes up for discussion as a substitute for the resolution presented by the majority of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be received if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas a just regard for the interests of every class of the community demands that the national basis of finance shall consist of a currency of uniform standard and intrinsic value: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, instructed to report to the Senate measures which will secure at the earliest practicable day a return to specie payments.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, in view of the importance of this subject, I would suggest that these resolutions be printed, so that they may be examined by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not intend to ask action of the Senate to-day, but I simply report the resolution and ask that it be printed with that of the minority, giving notice that at an early day I will call up the resolution reported by the committee, when, as a matter of course, it will be open to discussion and amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. That is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps I ought to state that it is our desire to ascertain definitely the wishes of the Senate on this question. We are met at the outset with a great number of propositions submitted to us, and with a doubt as to whether it is the will of the Senate now to take some step toward the resumption of specie payment. We wish to ascertain, if we can, by a vote upon the resolution, or on any amendment that may be offered, what is the definite desire of the Senate, so that the committee may act as nearly as they can in pursuance with the opinions thus elicited.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I rise only to say that I do not wish that, by my silence, this report coming from the Committee on Finance shall go out as embodying my views upon the question. I acquiesce in the action of the committee so far as, and for the purpose of, receiving instructions from the Senate. The committee met with obstacles that many have foreseen and foreshadowed; but for the purpose of obtaining an expression from the Senate it was deemed best that some unmatured form should be adopted to secure that end.

I do not care now to offer the amendment which I intend to present, as there is to be no action at this time. Since the Senator from Delaware, a member of the committee, has offered his amendment, I might be inclined to let mine also follow; but as some Senator—I think the Senator from Illinois—has asked that the resolution be printed, I shall secure my object when the resolution properly comes up for discussion by an amendment.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that there should be an early day fixed for the discussion of this resolution. I had hoped that some action would be taken before the holidays upon the financial questions which are before the country. I had hoped that before the holidays some measure might be devised and passed which would have the effect to shorten the panic that is now upon the country; to diminish its violence, and to relieve the country somewhat from its effects. I do not know that this is now possible; but as this resolution is intended to take the sense of the Senate in some sort, upon the question of returning to specie payments and general financial legislation, I trust it may be set down for discussion at an early day. I suppose the chairman of the committee would be willing to take it up to-morrow, as there is scarcely any business before the Senate; the committees have not reported much business yet, and we shall not have much for three or four days. I will suggest to the chairman that perhaps it would be better to take it up to-morrow.

Mr. GORDON. I hope it will be postponed longer than that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose this resolution will not be voted on for several days, so that Senators need not be alarmed about the probability of a speedy vote. As to whether it can be taken up to-morrow or not, depends entirely on whether any Senator will desire to speak then on the question. For my part I do not desire to speak, at any length, on these propositions when they shall come up. My views have been already expressed, particularly at the last session of Congress, and I shall only now very briefly restate them. I have no desire to engage in any discussion, at least in the beginning; but if any Senator wishes to speak, if the Senator from Indiana wishes to speak to-morrow, I shall be satisfied. When any Senator desires to have the subject taken up, I will call up the resolution. Perhaps by the day after to-morrow I shall be prepared, as well as at any time, to go on with the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio submit a motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. Simply that the resolution lie on the table and be printed, and any Senator can call it up to-morrow or next day.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I think the Senate and the country may be congratulated that the minority report and the majority report are so nearly or substantially in accord. Listening to the two resolutions, I did not observe a great difference between them. Both of them contemplate a return to specie payments, as I understand, at the earliest practicable moment. Therefore, I do congratulate the country. I think that the discussion on which we are about to enter will begin under excellent auspices. Both branches of our important committee concur in this great demand; and I hope that the Senate will unite with them in the demand; that it will not be longer postponed; that the national honor will be saved, which suffers so long as it continues to circulate what is little better than failed paper—setting the example of bankruptcy to the country. I think the subject should be considered at an early day, and I hope we may be unanimous in our conclusion.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest, Mr. President, that the consideration of the resolution be set down for the day after to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved by the Senator from Indiana that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until Friday, and that it be made the special order for that day. Does the Senator add that?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. Had it not better be Monday, as we probably shall not sit on Friday?

Mr. HOWE. Friday is an unlucky day; it is better to say Monday.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it would be better to fix it for Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana modify his motion in that way?

Mr. MORTON. I am satisfied to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the further consideration of this question be postponed until Monday next, and that it be made the special order for that day.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Mr. President, I did not intend to say more at this time; but since the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts, I am led to believe that he is not aware of the fact that there is a respectable minority of the Committee on Finance who dissent from the view, in all respects, as expressed in the resolution, and, I trust, that his congratulation to the country will include those of the committee who think that the most rapid way to arrive at a specie basis is through a moderate increase of the currency to relieve business prostration and restore commercial activity, and by prosperity and through the laws of trade, instead of by further prostration through the force of statute. I merely say this much now that hope and expectation may be put into the congratulations which the Senator from Massachusetts tenders to the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.]

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is also moved that the report of the committee and the paper presented by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

COTTON SEIZURES AT THE SOUTH.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I offer a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to report for the information of the Senate:

First, The number of bales of cotton seized under orders from the Department after the close of the war, from whom taken, by whom taken, by whom and when sold and where sold and at what price, and what disposition was made of the proceeds, and when and how much of the same went into the Treasury, and what disposition was made of the proceeds before being paid into the Treasury.

Second. That he report a list of the claims filed before him under the act of March, 1872, showing the name of each claimant, and how much cotton claimed was alleged to have been taken from each, and when.

Third, That he state the amount of expenses deducted from the proceeds of the sales of the cotton, and whether the same were allowed by the Department, and in whose favor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the first part of that resolution read again.

Mr. GORDON. I will say to the Senator that I do not ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution, but I wanted it read in order to attract the attention of Senators who might feel an interest in the subject; and I move, if it be agreeable to the Senator from Ohio, that it be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-two minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened, and (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 10, 1873.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CONSUL-GENERAL AT ALEXANDRIA.

Mr. ORTH, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs a joint resolution (H. R. No. 16) for a change in the name and title of the agent and consul-general of the United States at Alexandria; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that the name and title of the agent and consul-general of the United States at Alexandria shall, from the passage of this joint resolution, be "Agent and consul-general of the United States at Cairo."

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARBOR OF PLYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. BUFFINTON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to cause an examination or survey to be made of the harbor of Plymouth, Massachusetts, with a view to dredging and improving the same, so as to afford greater protection and facilities to commerce; and that he report upon the feasibility of making such improvement, and the probable cost thereof, to the House of Representatives.

CUBA—THE VIRGINIUS MASSACRE, ETC.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time a joint resolution; which I ask the Clerk to read.

The joint resolution was read. The preamble states that a state of war has existed in the island of Cuba for some years past, waged to secure its independence from European rule; that, under its violence and excitement, the American vessel Virginius has been seized, the national flag hauled down, and a large number of those on board cruelly massacred under the pretense of military executions; and that, while we recognize the rules of international law and desire to maintain an honorable peace with all nations, especially with the struggling republic of Spain, and are not desirous of complicating any question which can be honorably adjusted, therefore the first section of the joint resolution declares that, in the hurried and cruel massacre of the persons taken from the Virginius, we recognize acts of barbarism unworthy of the civilization of the American continent, and which should place the perpetrators outside of the pale of civilized nations; that it is due our position among nations that we should exert every means in our power to repress and check such cruel acts by parties whom circumstances have given powers of government which they seem incapable of exercising.

The second resolution declares that Congress reaffirms the doctrine that the occupants of any portion of the American continent, or the islands thereof, are the proper rulers of the country they occupy; and that cruel and despotic acts on the part of any European government to suppress and prevent the independence of such people are to be deprecated; that systems so maintained are contrary to the genius of American progress; and that it is the duty of these United States, whenever the people of Cuba or any other part of America indicate their desire to throw off a European yoke, promptly to recognize and sympathize with them; and that, in view of recent events, humanity dictates an early recognition of Cuban independence.

The third resolution declares that the continued existence of African slavery in the island of Cuba is inconsistent with, and injurious to, the civilization of the continent; that it is provocative of disorders affecting these United States, and is a condition of affairs that ought to terminate; and that it is the duty of our Government to exert every means in its power for its speedy overthrow.

The fourth resolution declares that all violations of our maritime rights, or disrespect to the American flag, should be promptly met, so as to forever prevent their recurrence and secure what is due the dignity and character of the American name.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction of these resolutions?

Mr. ORTH. I object to their introduction for action now; but I will state to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PHILLIPS] that if he will consent to the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH,] chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, suggests that the resolutions be printed and referred to his committee.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Very well; I will consent to the reference.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 17) was introduced, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] made yesterday a very good speech on the salary bill, which the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has tacked on to a few remarks of mine. His was a very good speech; but it does not fit very well with what I said. To show how the two go together, I ask the Clerk to read my remarks, with the paragraph immediately following, and which should have begun with the name of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The bill presented by the committee yesterday, and now on the desks of members, is almost exactly like the bill presented and referred by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK.] Some changes have been made in the way of construction. It speaks for itself, and is, as I said yesterday, simply the repeal of the law of increase relating to Congress and its Presiding Officers and a restoration of the old law. As I said, it speaks for itself, and at this stage of the discussion I do not propose to take up any more time, but may at the close of the debate express my views on the subject.

Mr. Speaker, I am almost tempted, by the taunts around me, to retort in kind. I have been rudely characterized as demagogue for doing my duty. My exceeding consolation I do not find in the society of such. In endeavoring, last Congress, to stop this insane greed for salary, I knew consciously that the old friends I had served in Ohio, and the new friends I have served in New York, would not turn their eye from me "asquint with suspicion." The delight of favoring constituents, of gentle thoughts from strangers, of approving messages from distant States, and, above all, the cheer in my own home, even had I not the sanction of conscience, more than compensate for vulgar gibes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think the correction had better be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must state that corrections of the RECORD, which takes the place of the Congressional Globe, are not questions of privilege.

Mr. COX. I beg to say that I have already had this error corrected. I am the father of the remarks last read. The fact of it is that last night we all met at the palatial residence of my eloquent colleague, Mr. WOOD; and, although I looked this matter over before I went there, I do not know but that the gentleman from Maine may have fixed up his part after he came from there. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It looks a good deal as though the reporters of the RECORD were there. [Laughter.]

Mr. STORM. I would like the gentleman from New York to state who is the father of that portion of his speech which appears on page 10—I mean the passage beginning "Law is the harmony of the universe," &c.

Mr. COX. That is an extract from Hooker.

Mr. STORM. Then the gentleman "hooked" it from Bishop Hooker. [Laughter.] It was not spoken yesterday in the debate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at fifteen minutes after twelve o'clock.

TAMPERING WITH THE MAILS BY DETECTIVES.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Ways and Means have directed me to report the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to inform the House whether any custom house officers or detectives have been allowed to examine correspondence passing through the post-offices of New York or Boston, and whether any such officials have opened or otherwise tampered with such correspondence for the purpose of ascertaining whether the revenue laws have been violated, or for any other purpose; and to report all the facts to the House.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. WOOD. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back, with a recommendation that it be adopted, the resolution which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House, at the earliest practicable period, the cost of refunding the national debt thus far into the 5 per cent. bonds authorized by the acts of Congress approved July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, with a detailed statement of amounts paid on that account, to whom paid, when and where paid, including traveling and other expenses of any person or persons attached to the Treasury Department; and, further, to report whether, in the adjustment of differences of interest between the 6 per cent. bonds redeemed and the 5 per cent. bonds issued in lieu thereof, the Government has received its proper allowance; with a detailed statement of the interest account, giving amounts, dates, and names of parties with and through whom negotiations were made.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BANKS WITHOUT CIRCULATION.

Mr. MAYNARD (when the Committee on Banking and Currency was called) said: I do not rise to report a bill from the committee, but there is one which I wish to introduce, that the committee may have it before them at their next meeting.

There being no objection,

Mr. MAYNARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 479) to authorize the organization of national banks without circulation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. HAYS. The Committee on Agriculture have directed me to report a resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, for the years 1872 and 1873, 255,000 copies of each; 180,000 of each of which shall be for the use of the House; 50,000 of each for the use of the Senate, and 25,000 copies of each for distribution by the Commissioner of Agriculture; and those for the use of the House and Senate shall be so marked by the clerks of the respective bodies as that they may pass by the mails free of postage; and that such seeds as shall be furnished by that Department to members of either House for distribution be marked in like manner, and for the same purpose, by the clerks of the respective Houses.

Mr. DAWES. Is that a bill?

The SPEAKER. This is for reference, and must be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to make a statement. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in his seat, and I therefore deem it proper at this time to say that that committee this morning considered the subject of the distribution of documents published by authority of Congress, and referred it to a sub-committee, to prepare a bill to be reported to the House. That bill will also embrace, I may add, some provisions looking to the propriety of repealing former legislation in connection with the circulation of newspapers in counties where they are published, and with reference to newspaper exchanges.

The SPEAKER. The bill which the gentleman reports from the Committee on Agriculture must necessarily, under the law, go to the Committee on Printing. The Committee on Printing is a joint committee, and the law provides that any printing beyond the usual number of copies cannot be authorized except on report from the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, it was due to the House to make this statement, that the Post-Office Committee was not indifferent to the subjects to which reference has been made.

The SPEAKER. The bill, under the law, goes to the Committee on Printing.

NAVAL ENLISTMENTS.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I understand the Committee on Appropriations will report a bill making appropriations for the naval service, and I have been instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move as an amendment to that bill a proposition to enlarge the number of enlistments of men in the Navy. I ask the Chair whether it will be in order to move such an amendment to that naval appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The bill from the Committee on Appropriations will go to the Committee of the Whole, and the ruling, therefore, will be by the chairman of that committee; but if the present occupant of the Chair were chairman of the Committee of the Whole, he would rule such amendment to be not in order.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Then I will present the bill now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. SCOFIELD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 480) in relation to enlistments in the Navy; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that the number of enlisted men in the Navy shall not exceed 10,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to enlarge the present number not exceeding the above limit.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the present number?

Mr. SCOFIELD. The number of men in the Navy now is 8,500. The Navy Department for some years has been very much embarrassed because of the small number of seamen in the Navy, and it has repeatedly asked Congress to enlarge the number to 10,000, adding 1,500 to the number now authorized by law. The Secretary has sent a communication to the Committee on Appropriations, which that committee has referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, in which he states the fact that there are not now men enough in the Navy to man the ships he has been fitting out at this time, and he recommends that the number be enlarged. The Committee on Naval Affairs instructed me to move such an amendment to the appropriation bill, if in order, but as it is believed not to be in order, I have reported the present bill to make the number 10,000 instead of 8,500. For one, I should not be strongly inclined to agree to this enlargement because of the present emergency, as I am under the impression we do not need it; but as the Navy Department has been embarrassed because of the need of men in the Navy, I think, and the committee think with me, that we should enlarge the number to 10,000.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Is this with the idea that the number of 10,000 will be permanent; that the increase to take effect now will continue for the future; or, after the present emergency, is the number to be cut down to the old figures?

Mr. SCOFIELD. The bill provides for 10,000, instead of 8,500; and the enlargement is to continue at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. Dischargng and recruiting of seamen are going on all the time; and if he can in the future spare any of these men, he will of course do so. The law will be permanent, of course, until it is repealed. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SPEER. I understand this bill does not make it compulsory upon the Secretary of the Navy to increase the number to 10,000 men, but is merely discretionary.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will so modify the bill as to make the enlargement temporary instead of permanent. I believe the Secretary of the Navy does not ask for a permanent increase. In the letter referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and which has also been before the Committee on Naval Affairs, he states, as I remember, that he desires only a temporary increase, the number to be reduced to the old figures after the present emergency has passed.

I do not believe we ought, without some recommendation from the Department, volunteer to make this enlargement permanent; and I hope my friend will modify the bill so as to make the increase temporary. We ought to put some limit of time when this increase shall cease, and the number shall stand at the old figures. I do not offer any amendment, because I do not wish to interfere with the gentleman's bill. I merely ask my friend not to put Congress in the attitude of increasing the number of men in the Navy, and making that increase permanent, without any recommendation from any department of the Government. I do not think that we should take any such action.

Mr. SCOFIELD. If the gentleman will move an amendment or suggest some language that he thinks will make this elastic Navy, I would, of course, give him an opportunity to submit it to the House. Unless we limit the time within which this number may be employed I do not know any other mode of making the increase temporary, except by the language employed; that is, "within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy."

The bill provides that the number shall never exceed 10,000; and the Secretary may enlist men, according to his wants, under that number.

I yield a few moments to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. GOOCH.]

Mr. GOOCH. It seems to me that it would be impossible for us to fix a limit of time when these men shall cease to be employed in the Navy, because it is impossible for us to determine now when their services can be dispensed with. If we should fix a limit of time, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] will see that possibly it might be at the very moment when the services of these men were required over and above any other time.

This matter was considered in the committee, and it was deemed that the only thing which we could do was to authorize the maximum Navy to be 10,000 men, at the discretion of the Secretary, presuming that, whenever the exigency which requires this increase shall have passed by, he will decrease the number so as to keep in the employ of the Government no more men than are required to meet the exigency of the service.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I yield a few moments to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CROOKE.]

Mr. CROOKE. A moment's reflection will satisfy the members of this House that this should be a discretionary matter with the Secretary. There can be no possible object on the part of the Secretary or of the Government in keeping sailors afloat unless they are needed. Ships are of no use without sailors. Ships can neither be run nor fought without sailors. They are mere traps for men unless they have a sufficient complement. This should be merely a matter of discretion.

There can be no object, as I have said and repeat—there can be no possible object on the part of the Secretary in employing a sailor a day or a year longer than is absolutely necessary for manning the vessels of the Navy, and they will be discharged as a matter of course the instant they are not needed. A moment's reflection, based on the slightest acquaintance with shipping or salt water, I think must satisfy any member of this House that this should be purely a matter of discretion with the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy, or the Government, can have no object political, economical, or otherwise, to retain one sailor in commission one day longer than is needed for the country.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CROCKER.]

Mr. CROCKER. But a single moment is necessary to show and evince the importance of this bill which my friend from Pennsylvania has presented. As has been well said by my friend from New York [Mr. CROOKE] who has just taken his seat, the discretion should be with the Secretary of the Navy himself. When we consider, Mr. Speaker, that our last man-of-war left our shores with raw men almost entirely unable to encounter a gale, and that it was a miracle, if I may so say, that that vessel was saved, I think that the statement of that fact alone, without my adding another word, would be sufficient as regards the wisdom of the bill presented by my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It seems to me Mr. Speaker, very clear that there should be something in this bill—I do not care how it is phrased—which will show that the House is not in favor of a permanent increase in the personnel of the Navy. This is a serious matter as far as expenditure is concerned. If 1,500 additional men are granted now with the idea of permanence, or with that idea not negatived, reckoning at the rate that men in the Navy cost the Government now, it will add about a million dollars yearly to the expenditure in that Department. It is a matter which the House should gravely consider, even in the present emergency. And while I can see some difficulty in meeting the point so well raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] that you must leave it somewhat discretionary, or if you do not, and fix a time, men may be lacking just when they are most needed, still, notwithstanding that objection, I hope the gentleman will consent that something be inserted in the bill which will show that the House does not commit itself to a permanent increase. Perhaps the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has an amendment that will just meet the case.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer the following proviso, to come in at the end of the bill; and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me a moment, I will say a word or two after it has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the temporary increase of the force of enlisted men in the Navy herein authorized shall not continue beyond the 1st of January, 1875.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations had before them the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, and after considering it thought it their duty to refer it to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as being more properly within the province of that committee. But I am authorized to say that it was the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Appropriations that it was the duty of this House in the present emergency to authorize a small temporary increase of the force of enlisted men in the Navy, but that it is also their opinion that the increase should be only temporary. We do not suppose that the Secretary of the Navy only will be under the necessity of keeping this increased force only for a few weeks. But we believe, from all the facts laid before us, that it is safe and prudent that such temporary increase should be made. We believe, however, that this speck of war will blow away, and that we shall soon find ourselves again in peaceful relations with Spain.

The appropriation bill which I am authorized to report, and will try to report in a few moments, looks to the guardianship and protection of our rights on the sea, and this measure is in the same direction; but nothing has occurred which leads the committee to believe that we ought now permanently to enlarge the Navy, and if the proviso I offer be adopted by the House, it will limit to the 1st of January, 1875, by law any temporary increase the Secretary may make. I have no doubt he will himself restore the old figures long before that time, but if the matter is left so that the increase may be made permanent, you may depend upon it that the pressure upon the Secretary of the Navy from all the navy-yards of the United States, from all the population along the coast who are especially interested in the Navy, and particularly from inside the Navy itself, will be a pressure which it is not likely he will be able to resist.

Mr. COBURN. Will the gentleman from Ohio answer a question? I desire to ask the gentleman to state what reason there is for increasing the Navy? If there is no danger of war or of hostilities, as we all believe, why should we increase the Navy?

Mr. GARFIELD. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will answer that question, although it would come in more properly on the appropriation bill. The gentleman is, of course, aware of the facts that have transpired within the last few weeks with regard to our relations with Spain. The Government found itself with a comparatively small naval force of ships actually in commission. We had a number of ships of war not in commission which it was deemed safe and prudent to put on a war footing to meet any emergency that might arise. It was deemed the safest and surest way to preserve peace and prevent war, to put ourselves in readiness to meet whatever might arise. The Secretary of the Navy, therefore, put in commission a number of naval vessels not before in active service, and of course it was necessary to man them.

Mr. COBURN. I wish to ask the gentleman another question appropriate to his committee. What will be the annual cost of the 1,500 additional men? Some estimate must have been made.

Mr. GARFIELD. I cannot state the specific cost. The Secretary of the Navy does not suppose that he will need to take the whole number, but we have made an appropriation in the bill I propose to report of $4,000,000 to meet this and all other costs involved in the general rearrangement of the Navy—made to meet this emergency. The Secretary has told us that $4,000,000 will meet this emergency so far as the present status of affairs is concerned. That is my answer.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I now yield for one moment to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. BECK. I want to call the attention of the House, and especially this side of the House, to the question this bill presents.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Allow me just to say that I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. BECK. I was about to advocate that amendment. Congress has for years been struggling—when I was on the Committee on Appropriations two years ago it was a part of the struggle we were making—to reduce the Army and Navy. The law now fixes the number of men in the Navy at 8,500. The purport of this bill is to allow the Secretary to increase it himself; and, unless the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio be adopted, he may make the increase permanent. I insist that no Secretary ought to have the power to increase either the Army or Navy; that Congress ought to retain that power absolutely in its own hands, and that some amendment ought to be put in this bill either requiring the Secretary of the Navy to report to us the number of men he employs, the length of time and the exigency that requires it, or something else that will enable us to continue or dismiss them. In other words, while in prospect of war I would refuse the Secretary neither men nor money necessary to do what the honor of the nation requires, I would hold the control in Congress to determine when the exigency has ended and to bring back the number of men employed to the number fixed by law. Therefore it is that I support the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. SCOFIELD. I now yield for a moment to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN.]

Mr. COBURN. In view of the condition of affairs in connection with the relations between this country and Spain, it seems to me a proposition of this kind is at least unfortunate. Just now the Government is doing all it can to bring about peace and to have an amicable adjustment of the difficulties that exist between the two countries; and it does seem to me that now, while that condition of affairs exists, and we believe that the Government of Spain is acting in good faith so as to establish permanent peace on just such a basis as we desire, the enlisting of any number of men, increasing the war power of the country in any degree, may create agitation and apprehensions that will prevent just now the adjustment of these difficulties. Let this matter, then, be postponed until we see the result. It may be decided in a week; it may take two weeks, or it may take three weeks; but if war should break out and the country were called upon to act in the premises, the enlistment of 1,500 men for the service of the country, either in the Army or in the Navy, would be accomplished in a single day. Let a declaration of war once be made and there will be no scarcity of men, either for the Army or the Navy, if we have just cause for war, and until that time I would say we had better defer entirely, totally, absolutely, the increase of the Army or the Navy. I think there will be no lack of patriotic spirit if we are engaged in war, but it seems to me that this is the most unfortunate movement that could possibly be inaugurated at this time.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I now yield for a moment to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. I supposed that when the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] was accepted by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the House would not hesitate a moment to pass the bill as reported. The gentleman from Indiana, however, takes the ground that we ought to refuse all additional men to the Navy. It is for that reason, and for that only, that I ask the attention of the House for three minutes, to call their minds back to the fact that our Government now is especially deficient in its ability to protect the interests of American commerce.

Owing to the condition of things during the war and to legislation since the war, we are deprived of resources which belong to every other commercial country in the world, by which they are enabled to supply the Navy if needed in case of war. Other countries have a large commercial marine. We had before the war. By that means a large number of seamen were placed at the disposal of the Navy, and experience at that time showed that enlistments of competent men could be quickly made for the use of the Navy. That state of things does not now exist. Our vessels are going to sea with barely men enough to manage them; and some of the disasters and delays of which we have recently heard are undoubtedly the result of the character of the men enlisted.

For one I would be willing to vote for this bill without amendment. I would vote for it for the purpose of providing means whereby in time of peace we can train practical seamen to meet the emergencies of war, train men so that they shall be competent to protect our flag and our citizens against insults by powerful nations of the world, who, when they choose, may administer those insults, haul down the national flag, and murder our citizens that are found on our vessels. I hope that the time will come when we will have in every port a ship to protect our commerce and extend to our citizens the protection they should receive. I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ARCHER] five minutes.

Mr. ARCHER. Against my earnest protest as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, for years past this House has been so acting toward the Navy that it has now become inefficient to police the sea and to protect the honor of the country. I am aware that both the country and this House will be astonished to learn that one month after the outrage committed upon our flag in the case of the Virginius we had but 22 guns in the Cuban waters. When this Congress met there were but 22 guns in the Cuban waters; the Worcester carrying 14 guns, the Wyoming 6, and the Saugus 2. At this time, we have within Cuban waters not more than 68 guns.

Sir, our fleets, such as they are, are now in foreign waters, and it requires time to call them in and fit them for the duty which may be required of them here. It is a godsend to us that if we are to have complications with Spain they cannot arise until after the 25th of December. We have, so allowed our Navy to deteriorate, that it will not be possible in less than 120 days to have in Cuban waters more than 500 guns; and it is possible within that time for the Spaniards to put there 514 guns; and in that 514 will be embraced 4 of the most powerful plated iron-clads in the world.

I am aware of the recuperative energy of this country, and the manner in which our people can act quickly. I am aware of the great ability of Admiral Porter. I know his efficiency, and his power of overcoming difficulties. I am satisfied that whatever difficulties may come upon us, if there is anything like liberality on the part of this Congress, under his direction and the direction of the Navy Department we will be enabled to meet them, and to provide for any emergency that may arise. But this is the initiative step; it is necessary that we should now have men to man the vessels that are now being very properly fitted out by the Government.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I desire a moment or two upon this subject.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I think it may be inferred, from what has been said here, that we are less prepared for an emergency than we really are. I am aware that, up to a month or six weeks ago, our Navy was scattered, and much of it was not in readiness for service. And this was inevitable from the fact that provision had not been made by Congress, in the regular appropriation bills, to meet an emergency of the character suggested by events at Cuba.

Now, it may be a question whether we should discuss this matter in such a way as to show exactly what our strength is. But inasmuch as our preparations to meet an emergency have been underrated here—very greatly underrated—I think no harm can come from stating the fact that we are in a good degree of readiness to meet any emergency likely to arise.

I hope no war will occur with Spain; and I believe none will occur. I believe the most recent information which we have looks to a peaceable settlement of this question. If, however, war is to come, for one I hope it will not be upon any idle or frivolous pretext, but in compliance with the substantial judgment of the country; not to avenge any fancied wrong, but to defend the honor and integrity of the nation. I apprehend that no such war will arise. Still it is our duty to be ready under all circumstances.

I say the Secretary of the Navy has accomplished wonders, considering the condition of our Navy one month ago when the threatening emergency arose. It is true that we had then only eighteen guns in the Caribbean sea, or in the vicinity of the difficulty; but to-day we have more than four hundred guns within ready reach of the scene of action—not all immediately on the spot, but all within a reasonable distance, and capable of being brought there almost any day. At our rendezvous at Key West, and other places within eight hours, there are nearly four hundred guns that can promptly be placed on the scene of action whenever necessary. I believe it is not to be necessary; I hope it will not be, because we need and desire an era of peace, that the country may recuperate from the ravages of the last war.

Mr. BECK. If the gentleman will permit me, I desire to ask him a question. Both he and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ARCHER] have spoken of the low ebb at which our Navy has arrived, and how efficient we have been making it recently. Now, we had a magnificent Navy up to 1860, and we never expended upon it over $14,000,000 annually; but during the last five years we have expended $20,000,000, $25,000,000, and $30,000,000 every year upon our Navy. I wish to ask what has been done with this money if our Navy has run down so low? At the close of the war we had over six hundred ships; we now have less than one hundred and thirty. What is the cause of this decline, in view of our large appropriations?

Mr. STARKWEATHER. We never had a magnificent Navy. We had a Navy that did its duty. We had a Navy with a few ships, a few men, a few guns, and a few good officers; but we never had a grand, magnificent Navy, except that we had good and tried men, men of courage, with good officers, so that our ships were well fought; and in this sense we had a good Navy. If difficulty should occur with Spain we shall have the same grand fighting we have had in previous wars. But neither before 1860 nor since 1860 have we had a Navy that would at all compare with the expensive navies of Europe, whose guns and ships have outnumbered ours tenfold. What has been done since 1860 has been well done. During the late war there were, of course, necessarily large expenditures which in some details may not have served a good purpose.

Mr. KASSON. Let me ask my friend from Connecticut [Mr. STARKWEATHER] whether the cost of constructing iron-clads does not account for the additional expense of our Navy?

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Of course the expense of building iron-clads was great; yet as their construction was in a great measure experimental, much of the expenditure was lost.

But let me tell the gentleman from Kentucky to-day that if he will review the action of the present Administration and observe what has been done under the present organization of the Navy Department, he will find that he has as much cause for congratulation and pride over what the Government has accomplished during the six or eight years since the war, as over what was done during any other period of our history.

I do not feel any apprehension of want of success in case of a war with Spain. I say we shall be ready; and the fact that we are ready, that we have the right to enlist these men, will avert a war. It is for that reason I support the bill. It is a just bill, and is demanded by the exigencies of the country. If we are to have a war, Spain will find us ready; and the country will have reason to rejoice that, though Farragut is dead, American seamen on wooden ships, as well as on our monitors, can cope with any force that Spain can bring against us.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I yield to my colleague, [Mr. SPEER.]

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, the achievements of the American Navy have justly been the pride of every citizen. While we have had cause to rejoice at the victories in several wars achieved by our soldiers upon the land, no American has ever had reason to blush for the conduct of our sailors upon the sea. I confess my surprise that there should be seemingly a single word of opposition this morning from any gentleman upon either side of the House to the reasonable provisions of this bill, contemplating, under the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, a limited increase in the number of our seamen.

The recent insult to the American flag thrilled the people from one end of the country to the other. That flag is the symbol and the emblem of the nation's power and glory; and when it is insulted or assailed, every American, however humble, feels the insult as a blow at himself.

If this bill be passed with the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] the House will distinctly declare its repugnance to any permanent increase of the Navy, unless national exigencies should so require. In view of the recent conduct of the Secretary of the Navy, I think we may say he deserves well of this House and the country; and it would be but a just and merited tribute to him and to his fidelity in the discharge of his duties in the recent emergency for this House to commit to his discretion the enlistment to a limited extent of the number of additional seamen that may be needed.

Mr. MYERS. I would like to ask my colleague a question. If the amendment should he adopted, and if the emergency should require additional men, what should we do for these men, who, I agree with my colleague and others who have spoken, are so much needed?

Mr. SPEER. In reply to my colleague I have this to say: The Secretary only asks authority to enlist 1,500 additional men.

Mr. MYERS. The limit is one year. The discretion we give to him in this bill is to enlist that additional number of men. He need not do it unless he thinks it is necessary; and I think there should be no objection to give to the Secretary of the Navy such discretion in case of an emergency.

Mr. SPEER. I understand that; but my colleague must remember, if the emergency lasts beyond the 1st of January, 1875, that Congress will be in session before that time; and if the emergency should continue to exist at that time, the power given by this bill could be continued.

Mr. MYERS. I object to the amendment, for the reasons stated by the gentlemen who have preceded me. The Navy needs these men, and I hope the bill will pass without amendment.

Mr. SPEER. The bill concedes that it needs them now, but it admits, by implication, that it may not need them beyond the 1st of January, 1875. If we do need them, what is to prevent the next session of Congress from extending the provisions of the bill, on the request of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. MYERS. Men who will be enlisted will be enlisted for five years; and, if the amendment be adopted, skillful seamen would have to be discharged at the end of one year.

Mr. SPEER. I understand the Secretary of the Navy himself only asks for a temporary increase of men for the Navy. I believe him to be the best judge of the wants of the naval service, and I think the committee have gone too far when they have gone beyond the request of the head of the Naval Department.

Mr. MYERS. I am supporting the request of the Naval Department in the bill as reported by my colleague, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SPEER. If this bill is to be passed upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, then there must be some misunderstanding between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, because the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has told us that the Secretary of the Navy, in his recommendation, only asks for a temporary increase of the number of men.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I will yield now to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I have in a small way for some years past been fighting the fight for the Navy Department here upon this floor. It has always been hard to get appropriations for the Navy. Objections raised by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and the gentleman from New York, as well as gentlemen on this side of the House, have been hard to answer because it was difficult to say, without full explanation, how it happened, that, with so many hundreds of millions of dollars spent during the war, we should have so poor a Navy. The explanation, in brief, as given, and it is true, was that a large portion of the money expended during the war, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, was, so far as a permanent Navy goes, useless. The expenditures were for the emergency; to blockade the coast, to capture the southern cities, those vessels were built. Experiments were made which proved sometimes to be disastrous. Indeed, there were constructed vessels which, as Henry Winter Davis once said upon the floor of this House, "could not make a single voyage without going straight to the bottom of the sea." All this was the result of the stress and haste under which the Naval Department labored at the time. And it is an actual fact that when we came out of the war the best vessels in the United States Navy were the old vessels built before the war; and to-day the very best vessels we have in the American Navy are vessels like the Colorado and the Franklin, and of the smaller vessels like the Hartford and the Brooklyn.

I cannot, however, in the few minutes allowed me, go over the whole ground in order to answer the objection of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] As to why it is all this has been so, I can do no more than give the general explanation I have already given.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman allow me a minute?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have only a minute more to speak. In the present condition of our Navy the feeling in the House has changed. For the first time the Navy Department comes into this House with an emergency looming up the sky, which inclines members to give the Department all it can reasonably ask; and, that being so, as a naval man and interested in the Navy, I feel all the more sensitive of pushing it to the extreme. And that is the reason why I do not believe in committing the House to any permanent increase. But, sir, I consider ships are wanting more than men; and when this House, when Congress, passes—as I have no doubt it will—acts in favor of a fair appropriation to put into good repair the ships now in the Navy, and to construct others, in order that we may have a respectable Navy, then I have no fear, if after this war-cloud blows away more seamen are needed to man our ships—if in that respectable Navy more than 8,000 men are needed—but Congress will agree to the needed enlargement. I have no doubt Congress will do what it has never before been willing to do; still I do not believe in committing Congress to any permanent increase of the Navy before we really do need it for a respectable navy in time of peace. The good which will come out of this war panic and this increased enlistment of men is that we will get out of it a respectable navy for a time of peace.

Mr. BECK. Let me say one word.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. I have never complained of the expenditures for the Navy during the war, although they amounted to over two hundred million dollars. But the point I did make, and which the gentlemen from Connecticut and Maine seem to avoid, was, that while we have given the Navy Department over twenty million dollars every year since the war, and when we left it at the close of the war with over six hundred ships, the Navy is in no better condition to-day. Why is it necessary to appropriate so largely every year for the Navy? And, if it is necessary, why have we no better results from such expenditures, when we had a first-rate Navy before the war, when we only appropriated $11,000,000 or thereabouts?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will tell the gentleman in a word. The money has gone in paying the men, and in keeping in repair and afloat on the waters of the globe those few battered and worn vessels that the war almost used up; and we have not built a single vessel since. Ships of war will wear out as well as commercial ships.

Mr. BECK. But why did less than half the amount maintain a sufficient Navy before?

Mr. SCOFIELD. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; which was first on Mr. GARFIELD'S amendment.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 134, noes 26.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REVISION OF LAWS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has almost expired, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] desires to make a report for reference to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to report certain bills, prepared by a committee under a joint resolution of the two Houses, for the revision of the general laws and those on certain specific subjects; and, with the leave of the House, I will explain what this mass of paper is that I have before me.

Between five and six years ago the two Houses of Congress, by law, provided for the revision of the statute laws of the United States; and a commission was appointed, who sat three years engaged in that revision. They had not accomplished the work, and an extension was given, and another commission appointed, substantially, and they attempted a revision. Then, that commission not being ready to report during the last Congress, the two Houses, by a resolution, appointed a joint committee, whose duty it should be to prepare a bill, or bills, to carry out the objects of that resolution.

As you are all aware, the statute laws of the United States are in sixteen or seventeen volumes, averaging between 1,000 and 1,200 pages each, including the several treaties. Taking the revision partly accomplished by the two sets of commissioners. the committee of the two Houses have, during the recess, subjected that revision to a thorough revision by one of the best lawyers in the country, who has devoted his time and ability to it with the most indefatigable industry and greatest success; so that now we have all the laws of the United States, with a single exception which I shall mention, in this book, containing about 1,400 pages, printed in large print in the form of an act, with an index, in a shape in which every member can examine it. If the revision is carried through Congress and becomes law, all the general laws of the United States will be found within the limits of one volume, instead of its being necessary to wade through sixteen volumes in referring to them.

I desire to premise here that your committee felt it their bounden duty not to allow, so far as they could ascertain, any change of the law. This embodies the law as it is. The temptation, of course, was very great, where a law seemed to be imperfect, to perfect it by the alteration of words or phrases, or to make some change. But that temptation has, so far as I know and believe, been resisted. We have not attempted to change the law, in a single word or letter, so as to make a different reading or different sense. All that has been done is to strike out the obsolete parts and to condense and consolidate and bring together statutes in pari materia; so that you have here, except in so far as it is human to err, the laws of the United States under which we now live. And it will be necessary, if the bill passes Congress, that it shall pass without any one undertaking to amend the law as it stands in this revision; because, once beginning to amend the revision by altering the law from what it is, will lead into an interminable sea, in which we shall never find soundings and which will never find a shore. But if there be any omission of any provision of law, the theory of this revision is that that shall be supplied; and to that the committee desire to call the attention of the House.

I said that there is one omission, and that omission is in regard to the laws of the District of Columbia. The question came up before the two commissions whether these were not local laws. Both of those commissions decided that they were, and did not revise them; and your committee found the revision in that shape, and they have not changed it, although in their opinion the laws of the District of Columbia are not local. But it was too late to remedy that. That can be remedied under the law by your able Committee on the Revision of the laws.

In addition to this, it was required by another resolution that all the Indian treaties which were in force should be revised, the obsolete and amended parts being stricken out. This has been done, and you have all of them within this volume which I hold in my hand. By a singular omission, the resolution did not provide for any revision of the foreign treaties; and I hope the House will provide that foreign treaties shall be revised in like manner and put into a volume with the Indian treaties. By putting into a separate volume both the Indian and the foreign treaties, there can be no occasion, for the ordinary use of the laws, that that volume should be bought except by students of international law and those having to do with Indian and other treaties.

Then there was another and still further duty imposed upon this committee, and that was to revise the postal routes. There had been no revision of the postal routes since the origin of the Government, and it was found that these postal routes interlaced, lapped over, ran into each other, requiring double mail service, and occasioning a great many other inconveniences and infelicities which I need not name.

All the postal routes in the United States have been revised and have been brought into one system, and every post-road that ever has been established is here unless it has been made a part of another post-road. You have that in this volume.

There was still another duty imposed upon the committee, and that was to revise and codify the law in regard to military offenses. There had been a large mass of legislation during the war as to military offenses, and which needed revision, some in appropriation bills, some in other general law. They have been brought together, and are all found, as we believe, within the limits of this pamphlet.

I have taken the liberty, Mr. Speaker, to present this bill thus early in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Revision of the Laws, the chairman of which, the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND,] was associated with me on the last committee, together with the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. LEACH,] in order that there may be an early report to the House, that the bill may be passed in its integrity early in the session, and printed, for which arrangements have been made at an early day, and sent to the country, so that if any errors have crept in those errors may be corrected during this long session and a perfect body of the laws, or a body of the laws as nearly perfect as we can make it, shall be sent out for the guidance of the people of the United States. Before I press the motion to refer, I yield to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND.]

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in reference to this subject, and to call the attention of members of the House to it. It is now nearly eight years since a bill was passed for this revision. Three years each have been allowed to two several sets of commissioners to make the revision. A long time and a good deal of money have been spent to get the work in the state of forwardness in which it now is. As my friend from Massachusetts has said, the committee have endeavored to have this revision a perfect reflex of the existing national statutes. We felt aware that if anything was introduced by way of change into those statutes it would be impossible that the thing should ever be carried through the House. In the multitude of matters that come before Congress for consideration, if we undertake to perfect and amend the whole body of the national statutes there is an end of any expectation that the thing would ever be carried through either House of Congress, and therefore the committee have endeavored to eliminate from this everything that savors of change in the slightest degree of the existing statutes. If the work of the commissioners shall be referred, as I suppose it will be, to the Committee on Revision of Laws, we design to give it early and careful attention, so as to bring the matter before the House for consideration immediately after the holiday adjournment; and, in the mean time, I invoke the careful attention of the members of the House, and especially every gentleman who belongs to the legal profession, to this work. All must be aware of the embarrassments that attend carrying such a bill as this through the House. The idea of the committee has been that there should be no changes in it, that it should be a perfect reflex of the existing laws; and I invoke the attention of gentlemen to it in that view, so that if any gentleman shall upon examination discover that there is any change in the existing law in any section of this bill, or that there is anything in any national statute that is omitted in this bill, he may call the attention of the committee to it, that they may themselves perfect it and not take up time in carrying it through the House. As I said before, we hope between now and the time Congress shall reassemble after the holidays to have this matter so examined by the committee that we shall then be able to present it for consideration.

Mr. WOOD. If the gentleman from Vermont will permit me, I would like to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. If this matter consumes time, the Chair will feel bound to throw it over.

Mr. POLAND. I do not intend to take any time myself, but I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. WOOD. It is, whether there will be anything in this revision of the laws that we have not already in the Statutes at Large?

Mr. POLAND. Nothing; at least we do not intend there shall be.

Mr. WOOD. What will probably be the expense to the Government?

Mr. POLAND. The expenditures have already all been incurred, and the whole expense has been somewhere in the neighborhood of $100,000.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to ask the gentleman one question, and, perhaps, as this matter has been discussed so far, it may be well to throw out the suggestion at the present time. It is whether there would be any objection to sending this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, after it has come from the Committee on Revision of the Laws, or to its consideration in the House under the rules which apply to appropriation bills, so that the objection of a single member should prevent any amendment that looked to a change in existing laws, and the House would only have to deal with questions of phraseology and omissions?

Mr. POLAND. I am not now prepared to answer that question. Our committee has held no meeting or consultation in regard to what the proper course would be when the bill comes before the House. Very likely what the gentleman suggests would be the proper course. My only desire in obtaining the floor was to invoke the early attention of every member to this work, that they may examine it, so that if they have any suggestions to make they shall be made to the committee, and that we shall not take time, which is so hard to obtain in the House, in carrying it through.

I will say further, Mr. Speaker, that this work is already printed, and in a very few days at least every member will be supplied with a copy of the entire work for his examination. It is already in print, but not stitched.

Mr. WOOD. I would ask the gentleman if he is not in error in estimating the expenses which have been involved in this codification, which has been going on for six years, and if it will not exceed twice the sum he names?

Mr. POLAND. Oh, no, sir; we have had two sets of commissioners for three years, at $5,000 each, and one of them was not paid for the full time. That would be $90,000, and then there is something for clerk hire.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Does the gentleman include in that printing already done?

Mr. POLAND. No, sir; but, whatever that costs, the expense has already been incurred.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman's estimate is merely of the salaries of the commissioners?

Mr. POLAND. My estimate did not cover the printing.

Mr. ELDREDGE. No doubt the whole expense will be equal to the sum suggested by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

Mr. POLAND. I have not made any calculation. Whatever it has been, it has already been incurred.

The documents were then referred to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

EXTRAORDINARY EXPENSES OF THE NAVY.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 481) making appropriations for extraordinary expenses of the naval service; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that this bill be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, giving notice that to-morrow I shall move to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would inquire of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] if this bill contains any provisions other than matters of appropriation?

The SPEAKER. All points of order will be reserved.

The motion of Mr. GARFIELD was agreed to.

REPEAL OF INCREASED CONGRESSIONAL PAY.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 471) to repeal the increase of certain salaries and to regulate the same, and to cover undrawn and unreturned balances into the Treasury. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAINE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TREMAINE. The course which the debate has taken upon the bill reported by the special committee on the subject of salaries has reminded me of an anecdote related of a prominent and popular democratic leader in the State of New York, now deceased. On being chided for having employed his influence in the State convention to secure the nomination to an important office of a very recent convert to the party, he replied that he believed there ought to be a statute of limitations, preventing any inquiry into the past record of a public man, or of political parties, that extended beyond a period of six months.

It so happens, perhaps fortunately for me, that upon this vexed salary question I have no record whatever, even so old as six months; and therefore I am enabled to approach its consideration totally disembarrassed by any motives or influences except the intrinsic merits of the question. There is no real or seeming necessity imposed upon me of reconciling any apparent inconsistencies between my present and my past position; of endeavoring to reconcile seeming conflicts between my own views and the present wishes and views of my constituents; or of uttering sentiments either of exultation or of regret at anything I may have said or done, or omitted to say or do, in the Forty-second Congress, or any prior Congress.

If I know my own heart, I approach the examination of this question influenced solely by an ardent desire to comply with the oath I have taken to discharge the duties of this office to the best of my ability; to carry out, so far as in me lies, the wishes of the constituents which I have the honor to represent upon this floor, and to take such action as shall in my judgment promote the interests and the welfare of the country.

Permit me, at the threshold of this discussion, to say that it seems to me that gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject, and who had the honor of being members of the House when the bill approved March 3, 1873, was passed, labor under some misapprehension as to the purpose of this bill and the intention and objects of those who framed it. They seem to deem it necessary to enter into a vindication of their action in reference to that bill. I am sure that no one desires to arraign them, nor is this bill to be regarded as an indictment against them. We award to them the same honesty of purpose that we claim for ourselves.

Sir, we have high authority for the declaration that errors are winked at in times of ignorance which in times of light and intelligence are not excused. They did what they believed for their best interests and for the interest of the community. We, however, are enlightened by the discussions of the people and by their expressed determination upon this question. If they made a mistake they may be excused for it. The only material question is, what is their present attitude and their present action; while we shall be guilty of the most egregious mistake if we sin against light and knowledge.

Sir, the people are not ignorant of the past history of legislation upon the subject of increasing the compensation of members of Congress. They know full well that in every instance, in the five cases in our past history where Congress has raised the compensation of its members, the increase has taken effect retroactively from the commencement of the congressional term. But the people have always regarded with jealousy and suspicion any act of their Representatives by which they have assumed to increase their own compensation and to take that increase of compensation from the Treasury of the people.

If the gentleman who yesterday gave us a historical sketch so interesting had gone a little further back he might have told us that even Henry Clay, with his great popularity, found exceeding difficulty in finding his way back to this House after having voted an increase of his compensation, which, even with the increase, stood, I believe, at the low sum of $1,600 a year.

While the people understand full well that the past action of Congress has favored the retroactive principle, there may be something in the time, manner, and circumstances in which that retroactive principle was adopted calculated to increase the natural jealousy and suspicion with which the people look upon the acts of their Representatives increasing their own compensation.

As I have already said, I make no charges against any gentlemen on this floor. I think it is perhaps due to the people, whose wishes we seek to carry out in this House, to remind gentlemen that, according to the first intelligence that came from Washington, this bill had been defeated. Yet in the closing hours of the last session it came to light, and the people found out that this retroactive principle had been incorporated into the bill, so that the increase by nearly five thousand dollars of the compensation of the members of Congress was to take effect from the commencement of the term of Congress.

There was something in the condition of the country at that time which induced the people to look upon this measure with disfavor. At all events, they have given expression to their sentiments in a manner that cannot be mistaken. I concur entirely in the report submitted by the minority of the special committee, in which the truth is uttered that in every form in which the public will can be known—through conventions, State and county, through legislative bodies, through the public press—in every mode in which the popular will is accustomed to make itself felt and known in this country, the people have condemned that increase of salary and have instructed us, as among the first duties devolving upon us, to brand it with a repeal. And, sir, I am sorry to hear the remark coming from the other side of the House, that this endeavor of the majority at the earliest moment faithfully to respond to that popular demand has excited "disgust." I think that if my friend who made that remark had consulted with his democratic colleagues from my own State of New York, who occupy the most advanced and radical ground upon this question, who are instructed by their State convention, and are therefore just as "fanatical" as we are upon it, he might recover his accustomed equanimity and composure, and that his "disgust" might no longer trouble him. At all events, in our action we are endeavoring faithfully to respond to the popular will; and, sir, it ill becomes any gentleman in this House to call us who are seeking to carry out that will "demagogues." If this remark is intended simply to apply to those gentlemen who have assailed only the principle of retroactive salaries, and who may have, perhaps, defects in the joints of their harness, I leave it for them to vindicate themselves. But if in that remark a criticism is sought to be indulged against those of us who are earnestly and honestly seeking to carry out the popular will, I am ready and willing to assume cheerfully the responsibility and the odium, if you please, which belong to that title. Yes, sir, if that Representative is a "demagogue" who faithfully labors to carry out the popular will in a popular form of government, and who in doing so is willing to submit to personal sacrifices and losses—if he is a "demagogue," then I wish this House was full of such "demagogues." Perhaps I might retaliate by saying that the gentlemen of opposite views who would call themselves anti-demagogues belong to that school which holds and practices the belief that public offices are created, not for the benefit of the public, but for the benefit of the incumbent. Perhaps they are willing to trample under foot the honest old doctrine of the common law, that every public office is created for the public welfare, and that every man accepting such an office accepts it on the implied condition that its duties shall be discharged solely with reference to the popular good.

Sir, there has been a prominent example of this extraordinary modern doctrine—a man once a member of this House, who held high office in the city of New York, where, by means of a conspiracy with other office-holders, he was enabled to use that public office to build up and aggrandize his own fortune, to roll in wealth acquired at the expense of the tax-payers, to collect an army of 16,000 henchmen ready to do his will. But, sir, the time came when he suffered the penalty that is sure to come sooner or later upon those who violate the laws of God and men; and those who wish to find further instruction on this subject may call upon him to-day in cell No. 34 of the penitentiary on Blackwell's Island, near the city of New York.

Sir, it is said that we have put an estimate upon our own services; that by voting for this bill we assume they are worth but $5,000. Pardon me, sir; we have here no Uriah Heeps so "'umble" that they have not a due appreciation of the value of their own services. We know that the services of many of us on this side as well as on the other side—gentlemen engaged in honorable and profitable private pursuits; great lawyers, great merchants, bankers, business men—are worth ten times the amount that can be expected to be given to them by an act fixing congressional salaries. But, sir, is there a gentleman here who for that reason would attempt to measure by a pecuniary standard the value and the honor of a seat upon this floor?

For myself, I regard it as the greatest honor that can be conferred upon me that I have a seat, by the free choice of my constituents, in the highest representative legislative body on the face of the earth. The honor is enhanced by the further fact that I have more than four millions of constituents; that I have thirty-two constituents on the floor of this House; that among them are the honored and honorable gentlemen on the other side who are so sound now on this salary question; and that among them is, last but not least, my brilliant friend, the "dew-drop" [laughter] from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. Speaker, there was great beauty and great significance in that simile of the "dew-drop." We read in mythology of an ancient king who, on consulting the oracles to learn his future fate, was warned that he would be destroyed by his own grandson, who would succeed him as king. As he had lost his wife and never meant to marry again, and had but one child, a beautiful daughter, he resolved to guard against his approaching danger by condemning her to perpetual imprisonment within the walls of a dungeon where there was no opening except a small orifice in the roof, through which her food was passed, and where the light and rain penetrated. Jove had fallen in love with her, and one night, in the form of a "dew-drop," he came down through that opening. [Laughter.] It is quite unnecessary that I should go further. My classical friend from New York is, I am sure, familiar with the sequel. Suffice it to say that in due time a hero was born who burst the bonds of his prison, destroyed his grandfather, succeeded him upon the throne, and thus verified the prediction. So that, Mr. Speaker, the "dew-drop" is not only bright, brilliant, beautiful, but it may be powerful, effective, and godlike.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question before this House is, whether or not the bill reported by the majority of the committee or the bill which by common consent has been received from the minority as a substitute shall receive the sanction of this House. I understand the majority of the committee have reported this bill in obedience to what they regard as the popular demand, without intending to perfect and complete such legislation as may be carried out when more time and opportunity shall be allowed. And, sir, it seems to me in this they have responded to the popular will. I have but little choice between the bills which have come up from that committee. The distinction between them may be stated in a few words. As I understand the majority bill, it proposes simply to restore the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to what it was before, except that for the present session it breaks down the mileage system and substitutes a system of compensation according to actual expenses; while the minority bill restores the old law, not only as to the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, but also as to the Vice-President, members of the Cabinet, Speaker, employés of the House, and all other officers, except so far as the Constitution has spoken, putting the salaries of the President and judges beyond our control.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The gentleman will allow me to correct him in one thing. The bill of the majority comprehends the Presiding Officers of the two Houses.

Mr. TREMAINE. Leaving the Cabinet. For myself I am free to say if we were preparing an original bill I would certainly desire an exception should be made in favor of Cabinet officers, the Vice-President, and the Speaker of this House. By past usage they have been put on a par with members of the Supreme Court. The exalted dignity of their position, the necessity imposed on them of residing in this city during the entire year, would seem to me to justify a departure from the compensation prescribed under the old law. But all that, in my opinion, may be more properly postponed until a more perfect law can be passed. I should have been better pleased with the report presented by the majority of the committee if, when they attempt to break down the mileage system as to this session, they had made it apply to all succeeding sessions of Congress. For I believe the people have expressed their disapproval of the inequalities of the mileage system adopted, when it took as long to come from Boston to the capital as it does to-day from San Francisco. I think there is no justice in allowing $3,000 to gentlemen for traveling expenses from the Pacific coast, when that is a very large portion of the compensation allowed to gentlemen living near this capital. I should be pleased if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, carrying out the principle of compensation according to expense incurred, and not according to mileage, should be adopted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have but a few words more to say. In conclusion it seems to me this is a time in the history of the country when we should be willing to make personal sacrifices. We are passing through a crisis of unparalleled severity in the business history of the country. Values are shrinking everywhere, property is depreciating all over the land, trade and commerce, manufactures and agriculture, are dull and languishing; large manufacturing establishments are unable to carry out at present their full time, and hundreds and thousands of laborers are found in our streets unable to procure employment to obtain bread for themselves and their families. In the mean while the pressure of taxation to pay the interest upon our national debt, contracted to save our nation in time of war, is resting with a heavy hand upon the industry of the country. The people have lavished their confidence on us to an unparalleled degree. Let us prove ourselves worthy of that confidence. They look to our action on this question as the supreme test of our professions that we are in favor of economy, retrenchment, and reform. They have, through the conventions of both parties, expressed their sentiments on the subject, and I am free to say they have, in my judgment, been more grieved and more sorrowful at the action of republicans than at the action of democrats, upon the principle that "to whom much is given from him much will be required." They have given to us the ten talents, while to the opposition they have only given five. But on this question I hope to see substantial unanimity.

Sir, the angry waves of partisanship which recently were so strong and so furious are gradually subsiding; and I am sure I speak the sentiment of every gentleman in this House when I say that if it be necessary to-morrow to vindicate the unatoned and unsatisfied dishonor put upon the national flag, there is no man here who would not vote for all the men and all the money to vindicate and wipe out the stain upon our honor at every cost and at all hazards. On this question, then, let us as one man, with substantial unanimity, march forward to the work before us. Let us vote in accordance with the popular demand, and repeal the act increasing salaries of March 3, 1873.

By so doing I am certain that we shall receive a reward better than the $5,000 we surrender; that we shall not only have the consciousness of having done our duty according to our oath, but will feel that we deserve and shall receive when we return to our constituents that welcome of approval so grateful to every hard-working Representative, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I had not intended at first to take any part in this debate, nor would I have done so had the tone of the discussion continued as at first. I have now but a few simple and plain considerations to submit, without any desire to attack anybody, or to go into any personal discussion. I have no doubt that my constituents are agreed as to what they demand—none whatever.

I have no doubt that they unanimously—I speak of both the great political parties—disapprove of what is known as the "back-pay" feature of the bill passed last March. Secondly, I have no doubt whatever that they unanimously—speaking again for both parties—demand that there shall be a reduction of salaries; that there shall be a substantial repeal of the old law. I have no doubt, further, in the third place, in regard to my constituents of all classes, that they do not ask of us a reduction below what our pay was in the Forty-second Congress They do not expect that. The whole question is substantially before us in this bill and its various amendments. Let us see what the increase was.

I have a few figures here which I have obtained from the Sergeant-at-Arms. The pay proper of members during the first year of the Forty-second Congress was $1,341,698.55. The total mileage for that year was $81,698.75. If we deduct from that 5 cents a mile, which would amply cover actual expenditures, what may be called the profit on mileage would be $71,486.45 for that first year. The stationery allowance, $125 for each member, makes for the year $31,625. The aggregate is $1,444,810.15. This amount, divided by 253, the number of Members and Delegates, gives as the average clear profit on the compensation of members, during, the first year of the Forty-second Congress $5,710. I have not included in this what we may be considered to have profited by the franking privilege.

The franking of public documents, books, &c., was of no pecuniary benefit to members, but only to their constituents. We will suppose that the benefit to their pockets by the franking privilege, in covering private correspondence, &c., was $100; and, supposing that the expense in forwarding documents without the frank would be $700 a year—as I am told is a fair estimate—the lawful compensation in the last Congress averaged $6,510 to each member, out of which he had to forward his documents; the rest, about $5,810, was profit.

Now, the last Congress voted, in addition to that, for each member $2,500 a year. This makes the compensation of members for each year of the Forty-second Congress, $9,010—or, we may say in round numbers, $9,000. Or. if we deduct from that what is required for the postage on documents, at least $8,300 was the average compensation voted by the Forty-second Congress to itself, and I suppose—for I never troubled myself to look into the record of the Sergeant-at-Arms—taken by a great majority of them.

Now, I have no attack to make upon any man of those who took the back pay, or who did not take it. It was none of my business. I acted according to what I thought was my own duty. I followed my own notion, if you choose to call it such. During the debate I assailed the measure, even angrily, but not with personal feeling toward anybody. I said to myself, and I said to others, that I would take none of the back pay if the bill did pass. But I had no discussion with any other man as to what I would do.

Members therefore received about $9,000 per annum, each, during the last Congress, $2,500 of which was "back pay." The excuse for taking the additional $2,500 was that we were taking from ourselves certain privileges in the way of the franking privilege, mileage, &c., and that this would make it about even, overlooking the fact that those who were members during the whole of that Congress—in which I was not—had enjoyed all these privileges for two years, and were compensating themselves for the future loss of them by taking $2,500 a year for "back pay." I am just informed by the gentleman near me that mileage, save for actual expenditures and stationery, was subtracted. That alters the case somewhat, but I will not stop to compute it precisely. It would leave the pay not far from $8,000. I make no question that the people throughout the country disapprove of it; and that is all that is necessary for my purpose.

I judge, as the eloquent gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAINE] has stated, by the resolutions of State and local conventions of both parties and by the unanimous voice of the press. I have seen nothing upon the subject from the republican party so violent, so determined, as the expressions that I have been reading within the past few days from the democratic journals all over the country. I assume that the country is agreed as to that.

Now, if we are to have a correction made of this matter—and I take that for granted—the next question is, what is to be the pay for the future? The bill proposes that it shall be $5,000 a year, leaving for this Congress mileage only for actual expenditure, but mileage hereafter at the old extravagant and partial rate of 20 cents a mile coming and going. The old allowances, as I showed, were $6,510; and taking out the estimated value of franking documents the profit was $5,800; so that if we put our figures at $5,000 we make a reduction under this pending bill, an actual reduction of about eight hundred dollars a year. I do not think that that is demanded by public sentiment. My constituents do not ask me to vote for anything of that sort.

And, while I may vote for this bill rather than fail to get a repeal of some sort, I am inclined to say that I will not vote for it because it is wrong. I am not willing to so leave the question finally as to make a reduction from what our pay was before this Congress. It is not right. Moreover, this bill, while it corrects the mileage for this Congress, leaves the ancient system of mileage to be enforced hereafter. That is a great abuse—an apparent and acknowledged abuse. But some of you say you will correct it by subsequent legislation. Now I am in no such hurry, no such panic-stricken hurry, to legislate on this subject as to be willing to do wrong now with a promise that I will correct it in the course of the session. I would just as soon take another week or fortnight to make this bill what it ought to be. I will vote for an honorable and fair compensation, and I believe my constituents will think I am right; at any rate, I will try to make them do so; but if they do not, I will vote for it nevertheless. That is all.

I am asked, perhaps, what I think would be a fair compensation. I should say—I might say a little differently perhaps if I had been sitting on a committee investigating the whole subject—that inasmuch as the pay netted $5,800 before, we might make it $5,500 or $5,000 a year. Then, as to mileage, I would, of course, correct that abuse, and allow only actual necessary traveling expenses. As to the franking privilege, or the forwarding of books and documents, I am opposed to the restoration of what is technically known as the franking privilege, because it was vastly abused, beyond all question. I would never give members of Congress the franking privilege proper. My own idea of the best way to do it is to direct the Departments to forward our share of such documents as Congress may wisely and necessarily order printed for distribution to the people to our several districts according to lists we furnish them. That would give no chance to abuse the franking privilege at all. There is not a member here who cares a farthing for the franking for his private letters; but his documents ought to be distributed, and they should either be distributed in the mode I suggest, or else there should be a corresponding allowance to members, say of $600 or $700 a year, strictly for that purpose.

Mr. NEGLEY. Does not the gentleman think there would be quite as much abuse at the Departments as by members of Congress?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I think not, if members of Congress control the distribution. The Departments would simply send the books and documents to such of our constituents as might be named in the lists we furnish. I suggest that as one solution of the question. We have to solve it. I do not want the franking privilege restored, but if you are going to make the pay precisely $5,000 a year, (several hundred dollars lower than before,) I confess I cannot afford to pay six or eight hundred dollars a year to send books to my district.

I do not propose to dodge any part of this question, and I shall be asked what will you do about the Cabinet. Well, I do not object to give them the allowance they now have. I think that when a man leaves his business and comes here, for four years, and keeps house here, probably retaining his homestead also, he is entitled to that amount. How about the judges? I am willing that they shall have $10,000 a year, and I think my constituents are. A man fit to be a judge, who surrenders every other employment and comes here and keeps house in a respectable style, as he ought to do, involved also in large traveling expenses, is entitled to that amount. If you were all hard money men, as I am, and would make your paper what it ought to be, a man could live on $8,000 a year better than he can live on $10,000 now, and I might be then more willing to vote for the reduction. But until I see signs of hard money times, I am willing that they shall retain the salaries they have under the existing law, especially as having once allowed it, the Constitution forbids our recalling it from any judge now on the bench.

Now, as to the President: I did not vote for the increase of his salary, but the question now is, will you order a reduction to take effect four years hence? The Constitution forbids our making a change during the current four years. Well, if you are going on with the old system of spending forty, fifty, sixty, or seventy thousand dollars a year in keeping the White House and gardens so that you cannot distinguish what is for the public offices of the White House and what is for the President's private residence, I am in favor of a reduction to $25,000. But if you do the business as you ought to do it, and give him a private residence entirely detached, and provide a detached public executive office, and supply it with clerks and door-keepers, and other servants for that office, then you can tell what he needs to support himself in his private mansion, and what you expend on his business office. But you are now paying a large portion of the expenses of the Executive Mansion, and you make no proper distinction between the President's office and his private residence. You do not give him a residence such as the chief Executive of this nation ought to have; the offices are in the same building, and the President's family are crowded into a corner. It is really more a public office than a private residence. You have to settle that matter before you can satisfactorily and finally determine the question of his salary.

I close with remarking that I am sorry to see so much of a tone here of denunciation or censure of those of us who opposed this increase. We do not seek to make personal war on other men, and I am sorry to see the spirit prevailing among some who defend back pay and the increase. I believe the sentiment of nearly the whole nation is opposed to the measure, and I will vote for a restoration of the actual former compensation. I will vote to wipe out all the abuses and unreasonable perquisites, and to give members what they ought to receive, and I think my constituents will justify me.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House but a very few moments, for I know there are others desiring to speak more and longer on this question than I do. I shall indulge in no declamation whatever, in view of the situation, but I expect to face the music on the details of this bill. I expect to state squarely and frankly what I am willing to do, and what I believe the country will be willing to have us do. And, in the first place, I do not believe the country calls upon us to interfere with anybody's pay except our own. I think if we want to take any credit whatever, we never shall get any by interfering with the pay of other persons, unless we are quite satisfied that it is too high.

Now, I agree with my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] that the Cabinet officers and judges have salaries none too high with the 20 or 25 per cent. addition of last session. I cannot support the bill of the minority, for it would present the anomaly of leaving the present judges of the Supreme Court to receive $10,000 a year during their lives, while a judge appointed the next year, or the year after, and sitting by their side, would receive only $8,000. I will agree to no such proposition as that.

Then, again, so far as the President is concerned, if there are allowances which constitute a part of his salary and which ought to be cut off, do it and do it like men; but I for one will give no vote by which it would be provided that the salary of the present incumbent should remain at $50,000 as long as he continues in office, and his successor shall have only $25,000. We cannot under the Constitution reduce the salary of the President during the present term of office; and I think it would be a very poor piece of work for us to make the salary of the present Executive $50,000 per annum, and provide by law that his successor shall have only $25,000 per annum, which cannot be increased under the Constitution during the term of his successor. I shall give no such vote in my place here. Twenty-five thousand dollars a year was given to the President, in gold, when the Government was first established, with only 3,000,000 people in the country, when Washington commenced his first administration, and when one dollar went farther than ten will now. Now we have 40,000,000 people, and a country filled with wealth.

So in regard to the employés of this House; I do not believe their salaries are any too much for the work they have to do, with the expense of living in Washington. Therefore, I come directly back to the proposition with which I started, that I think we should confine ourselves to our own salaries, and make a fair and just equalization.

I agree with my colleague who spoke yesterday [Mr. STARKWEATHER] that this is a matter in which we should heed public opinion. When we are satisfied what public opinion is upon the question of our own pay we should heed it. I do not agree with my friend from Nevada [Mr. KENDALL] that a Representative here should be bound in all cases by the instructions of his constituents. There are many cases in which a Representative should use his own discretion and good judgment, for he is sent here for that purpose. As Burke said years ago of the doctrine of instruction to a representative by his constituents, a member of Congress, like a member of Parliament, should stand here as a pillar of state, and not as a mere weather-cock on the top of the edifice to indicate the shiftings of every popular gale and point the way the wind blows at home.

Mr. KENDALL. One word by way of correction. I said that when the popular will is clearly and fairly expressed to a Representative, he is then bound to obey that will or resign. And I adhere to that opinion.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understood the gentleman on yesterday. I do not intend to provoke any controversy with him; I do not agree with him. In many respects I think the Representative should have a mind of his own. But I say, clearly and fully, that in the matter of our own pay I think we should respect the feelings of our constituents and those who sent us here, and be governed by that to a great extent.

I do not believe that the country, or our constituents, will call upon us to make our pay any less than it was before. I shall be in favor, if I get a chance to vote upon it, of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] but I would couple with it a provision that should cover into the Treasury the sums that have already been, or hereafter may be, returned as back pay. I think that provision should certainly be attached to his bill. There are a great many here, as my colleague said yesterday, who are perfectly willing that the money should be covered into the Treasury, provided it can stay there. But they do not wish to subject themselves to the taunts of their adversaries, who will say, "You will draw it out again." The Treasurer has said that the only way to get rid of the money in the absence of a law covering it into the Treasury is to make your will and give it to the United States in consideration of the love and affection you have for your native land. It does not release the right of any member to reclaim his money unless a law is passed covering it into the Treasury.

One word more. I did not intend to take any more time than I have. I think that, so far as our back pay is concerned, we should satisfy the country that we respect their will. In the light of public opinion, which some did not understand last spring, but which a good many understand now, the action of last Congress increasing the back salary, though it was not stealing any more than any previous increase of salary in the history of this country, which the best men in the long line of our most eminent statesmen have agreed to, yet it was a blunder—a very great blunder; and sometimes a blunder is as bad as a crime.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, doubtless members have made up their minds in favor of the general purpose of this bill. They may differ about details. They recognize the necessity of some like measure. But some gentlemen admit they yield to a popular clamor against their own wishes. The voice of the people ought to be listened to. If it be unreasonable, defy it. If it be just, respect it. In this case I obey the popular will, because it is right.

In the last Congress I failed to agree with the majority which pressed and carried the increase of congressional salary. The motives which governed my votes then control me now.

We are not to inquire into the personal conduct of gentlemen. That inquiry could throw little light upon our duty as legislators. It will be better if we eliminate the personal element altogether, and approach the subject free from all such difficulties.

But the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] to whom the House always listens with so much interest, expresses the sense of wrong from unjust denunciation, under which many are restive. Great harm is done by the violence and lack of discrimination of the public press. None of us, I trust, will object to criticism, trenchant and severe. But the vile abuse of men in public service, without reason or decent pretext, is a crying evil. It breaks down the incitements to laudable ambition at home. Turn your eye to the other side of the Atlantic, and you will see that it brings the American people into disgrace abroad.

Mr. NEGLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS. Yes.

Mr. NEGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he did not carry his back pay to the other side of the Atlantic?

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS. If the gentleman has satisfied his own conscience with reference to his own back pay, he has performed his duty When I appeal to him to decide my duty for me, I will answer his question.

Mr. NEGLEY. I mean nothing unkind to the gentleman. I simply wish him to state whether he did not lately return his "back pay" into the Treasury.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, when I assent to degrade this body into an arena for personal controversy, it will be when I change my estimate of public duty. Malignant, slanderous, reckless denunciation is the offensive monstrosity of our politics. Exaggeration is, perhaps, a national characteristic. When it vents itself in caricature, we can laugh; when it dips its pen in malice, it is inexcusable. If we could keep its manifestations at home, its worst effects would be avoided. Abroad these exaggerated tirades are taken as a true picture of our public life. It is not a party, it is not Congress, which is condemned. It is the nation and its institutions. Thus, monarchists conclude in a republic virtue is in retirement and knaves bear rule. Yes, reckless denunciator, in other lands your testimony is accepted as true, not against your Representative or your colleague only, but against yourself and against the country.

Perpetual scandal makes the face of vice too familiar. If virtue does not exist at all in public station, sooner or later it will not exist in the homes of the people. The exaggeration of criticism and of assault is a crime against the Republic.

This exaggeration is the outgrowth of a moral sentiment higher than has ever before prevailed. It is the expression, morbid perhaps, of something in itself commendable, an aroused public conscience. Let the iconoclast break down the idols. Check his fury before he destroys the household gods and the very divinities of the Republic. These critics must restrain the madness of their denunciation. We must accept whatever is fair in their criticism.

In this spirit I would question the motives of no gentleman upon this floor, nor assume to criticise his individual action. The subject is broad enough to be considered upon its merits. It should be discussed in a manner not to lower the representative body before the constituency. It should be decided so as to command respect where ever the decision becomes known.

The chief argument for the measure which we are now called on to repeal is precedent. It was very ably stated yesterday by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON.] The Fourteenth Congress increased the pay from $6 a day to $1,500 a year. The Thirty-fourth Congress increased the compensation to $3,000 a year. The Thirty-ninth Congress further increased the salary from $3,000 to $5,000. In every case a retroactive clause was embodied. I acknowledge the force of these precedents; but they do not carry everything before them. Increasing the salary from $6 a day to $1,500 a year is not a precedent for raising the salary to $3,000 a year. The adoption of $3,000 as the salary is not a precedent for $5,000 a year. The last-named advance is no logical precedent for any higher figure.

Precedent does exist for a Congress adjusting its own compensation, and even making it retroactive. But precedent proves nothing about the justice of the salary actually established.

The actual situation of the country does throw some light on that question. Enterprise has been checked; industry lies almost paralyzed; capitalists hesitate; thousands of workmen are idle; factories are still; the fires of furnaces have gone out; incomes have been wiped away; wages have been reduced or hours of labor curtailed; the revenue has fallen off, and expenses have increased until large monthly deficiencies stare us in the face. Is this the time for us to be asserting our claim to salaries higher than ever before paid? Considerations such as these afford abundant reason for honorable gentlemen to retrace their steps.

Those who always opposed the increase may rely on the arguments which convinced them in the spring.

The public service should not be a place for money-making. Men should not serve here on sordid and mercenary grounds. In no department, legislative or administrative, should the emolument be the chief reward. The Government cannot and ought not outbid banks and railways, enterprise and speculation, in the salaries which it pays. To those who seek wealth, the path leads elsewhere. Patriotism, even ambition, is yet a motive of action.

The nation should, by paying the expenses of its servants, open every position to all its citizens, even the poorest. Congress is a representative body. Its members need not live in better state here than they do at home amid their constituents. And it is only that average expenditure that the Treasury should be called to meet. If more is desired, it ought to be paid for by the individual. The country cannot pay for the luxuries and display which private wealth may justify. As long ago as in the Fourteenth Congress it was argued that the Representatives should live like gentlemen. So they ought, and so ought the constituents. But not out of the public treasury ought more be drawn than frugality requires.

If certain entertainments have an official or State character, let them be paid for as such. Let not the rest of us base on such exceptions a claim for expenditures which are incident to society everywhere.

The nation does not pay for business interrupted, nor does it proffer heavy retainers. It would be invidious to ask how many of these members ever earned for personal services, without the investment of capital, $7,500 or even $5,000 a year. I would venture to say, not every one. A notable few may have earned four or five times as much. But the proposition rests on no such comparison. It is only the expenses of the average member that the country expects to meet.

Be assured that here, as everywhere else, expenditures will increase more rapidly than salaries. If danger existed that the nation could not have the choice of its best men for its service, that danger would be aggravated by establishing a more costly régime in this capital. The true method for opening these doors wider to all classes, is to show that a simple, modest, inexpensive style of living is possible; and that wealth, and the signs of wealth, confer no special distinction. This has been and is the real situation here. I desire to testify that nowhere have I known of more chivalrous regard for duty, of a more earnest and devoted patriotism than among some of the members of this House: and nowhere does wealth or its display, confer less fictitious eminence than in this capital.

This is the value of the action which the House now proposes to take. It will be a declaration for economy and for retrenchment. It will correct the impression that Congress seeks to clothe itself in shoddy and purple luxury. When Congressmen voted money into their own pockets, it was regarded as evidence of demoralization; of weakness, if not of corruption. Let us now vote money out of our own pockets, and the act will command attention and respect. It will do something to restore confidence in legislators. It may be said we yield to the clamor of the people; it will be clear that we rise above the clamor of self-interest.

I trust that the gentleman from Maine, who has charge of this bill——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise with reluctance to speak on this question, even though the debate has taken a wide range; but having introduced a bill which has been adopted mainly by the special committee in its report to the House, I feel that I ought, perhaps in justice to myself and the position I occupy as a member of that committee, to say a few words. It is well known to all of those who have given any attention to the records of gentlemen on this question, that I very earnestly opposed the increase of salaries, not only because I thought it carried the back-pay principle farther than it had ever been carried before, and by so doing set a dangerous precedent on the part of this House, but because I thought it made the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, and the other officers embraced in the bill, greater than any exigency of the services required or justified. My observation, sir, as a Representative upon the floor of this House, my connection with political life—now embracing a period of more than twenty years—has impressed me with the firm belief that everything you pay to the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates more than a fair compensation, including legitimate expenses, is simply so much additional money toward the current partisan politics of the country.

It is scarcely possibly for gentlemen, if candidates in each succeeding two years for the position of members of this House, to resist the importunities which will be made to them, when they have any spare funds either arising from salary or from any other source which may possibly be spared or disposed of. Therefore it is that I have come to this conclusion, that the increase of salaries made at the last session of Congress in effect will really make the contest for seats here more sharp, more bitter, more expensive than heretofore under the old system. At the end of each recurring termination of Congress, members of the House will find themselves in the position of spending more money under the present than they did under the old system. As to that matter I may be wrong, but so far as my observation goes, so far as my own experience has extended, that is the conclusion at which I have arrived.

I performed, Mr. Speaker, some part in regard to the increase of salary which was made in 1866. I was a member of the committee of conference which reported the change in the compensation of members of Congress which took place that year. I also voted for it. I did so because I thought the circumstances by which we were then surrounded justified the change. I believed we were then entitled to some increase. I believed the old system of forty cents a mile as mileage to members had grown to be an abuse. We rather equalized the pay at that time without increasing it in the aggregate. There was some increase I confess. Criticism was made at the time of our action, but that action the country generally acquiesced in. I believe the people generally approved what was done by Congress on that occasion. Having gone to that extent at that time, when the price of living was as high as now, and perhaps higher, nothing has occurred which, in my judgment, should induce us to vote for any substantial increase of the pay fixed in that year. I would vote, and would have voted at any time during several years past, to still further reduce the mileage, so as to make it equal to the actual expense, or a little beyond that, perhaps. But I will not occupy the time of the House further in discussing this question than to say, if this were an original proposition, free from the embarrassments surrounding it now, I would insist upon the reduction of the mileage now. Believing the increase made at the last session to be unnecessary, impolitic, and therefore unwise, and in consideration of the excitement which has been raised throughout the country in the minds of the people generally, I think the most graceful thing we can do, under all the circumstances, is to reinstate the old law as nearly as we can, and leave all these other questions to be settled hereafter on some more appropriate occasion.

Now, I say the bill last winter carried the back-pay feature farther than it was ever carried before; and I invite special attention to that remark. Those compensation bills to which my attention has been directed, while they have had some retroactive features, never went to the extent of the one of the last Congress. In all previous legislation upon the subject it has taken place during the first session of the Congress. But the increase last session, which included this back-pay feature, took place in the last hours of the third session of that Congress. We allowed two sessions to go by without any proposition to increase our pay, but in the expiring moments of the third or last session the proposition was presented, and finally embodied in the law which we are now seeking to repeal. Hence I say there was no precedent, as claimed by some gentlemen, both here and elsewhere, for the peculiar features connected with the bill of last session. Believing the compensation was higher than necessary, at least to secure the services of the ablest and best men of the country as members of the Congress of the United States, I opposed the bill in all its essential features; and I have felt it to be my duty, and have always intended, ever since the adjournment of last Congress, on the first opportunity, to introduce a bill for the purpose of repealing that law, and substantially reinstating the provisions of the old law. I prefer the bill reported by the committee, so far as it goes, to any other proposition which has been submitted to the House on the question. It is, in my judgment, one upon which the House is more likely to harmonize than any other.

For one, however, I am willing to go further; and, if the proposition shall be submitted to a separate vote, I shall vote to repeal the law as regards several other officers whose salaries were increased by it. But I have never claimed, and do not claim to-day, that the increased pay given by the act of the last session is in all cases too high. I think the members of the Cabinet ought to receive at least $10,000 a year; and, considering the circumstances by which they are surrounded now, and will be in the future, I am not sure but that this increased compensation is smaller in proportion than that already received by many officers of the Government.

The increased pay of some of the Bureau officers is not too high as fixed by the law of last session. Nor do I regard the increased pay of judges of the Supreme Court as too high, everything considered; though if it were now presented as an original question, the salary is more than I would vote, in view of the present financial condition of the country.

But, the law having fixed that as their compensation, we cannot diminish it so far as the present incumbents are concerned. This is well understood by everybody who knows anything about the Constitution of the United States. Hence, as has been well remarked by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] the only effect of fixing a lower compensation for the future, as regards justices of the Supreme Court, would be that members of that court who may be hereafter appointed would receive a smaller compensation than those already upon the bench—an inequality which would be unjust, and which, I suppose, none of us could anticipate would be permanent.

As to the office of President of the United States, I say very frankly that I think the salary of $50,000 is out of all proportion to other official salaries, even under the increased compensation allowed last winter. To give the President of the United States five times as much as we pay a member of the Cabinet or a justice of the Supreme Court is, I think, out of all proportion, in view of the services performed and the duties and expenses necessarily devolved upon these several officers. If this question were now under the control of Congress, I should vote for a reduction of the presidential pay, to take effect immediately. But we have not the power to make an immediate reduction. Any law we might pass on this subject could take effect only at the expiration of the present presidential term, so far as the salary of the Chief Executive is concerned.

The proposition, however, is submitted in the bill presented by the minority of the committee, to compensate somewhat for this increase of the President's salary by requiring that officer to pay, out of his salary, certain expenses connected with the Executive Mansion which have heretofore been borne by the Government. This, I submit, attempts to accomplish indirectly what we cannot do directly; and on that ground the proposition may be somewhat objectionable. I might, however, be induced under some circumstances to vote for such a proposition; but before consenting to do so, I must be so fully satisfied as to the scope and effect of the proposition as to feel assured that no injustice will thereby be done. For one, I have had no opportunity to make a computation as to the amount of reduction which this proposition would practically make in the compensation of the President of the United States; and therefore, not being sufficiently informed upon the subject, I prefer not to vote, in the present position of the question, for a bill containing a provision of that sort, preferring to defer that matter to some other and more appropriate occasion, when we can give the matter separate and more thorough investigation than we have done now. As to the naked question of the pay of the President, I repeat that I shall vote to reduce the present pay whenever a suitable opportunity shall be offered.

For some of the reasons which I have thus given, I declined to act with the minority in presenting the bill which has been offered by the gentleman representing that minority as a substitute for the pending bill, believing that the object I desire to accomplish can be best attained by first enacting the present bill and afterward taking into consideration, in detail, these other reductions which are proposed. In presenting the bill which I had the honor to introduce last week,

I purposely omitted everything but the reduction of the pay of members of the two Houses, including Delegates, for the reason that to go farther at the present time would, it seemed to me, bring up some collateral questions which we could not so readily consider as we can the plain proposition in regard to our own pay. Hence I felt it better that we should repeal the increase as applicable to ourselves, (which was much the most important feature of the bill of last session,) leaving these questions as to the propriety of other reductions to be determined with greater deliberation when we shall have more time than we can now command for the consideration of that branch of the question.

In the part I have taken in this matter—in opposing the increase of salaries last session and in asking their reduction now—I have not sought to build up, either here or elsewhere, any cheap reputation for economy upon questions of this sort. In this respect I am content to rest upon the record I have made up during my period of public service. As a rule, upon all these questions of compensation I have first endeavored to ascertain what salary was right, and then, so far as practicable, my action has been governed by my convictions in that respect.

And, I repeat, in the act of Congress of last winter I have never pretended, nor do I now pretend, that all the increases have been improper, but have insisted that the main features of this bill were extravagant, providing for a higher rate of compensation than was necessary; and that that was peculiarly the case in regard to the members of the two Houses of Congress, and next to that, perhaps, was the compensation of the President of the United States.

I shall vote, if the propositions are submitted separately, for most of the sections of the bill reported by the minority. I am not willing to vote for all of them. If it is submitted, therefore, as a substitute for the majority report, I will have to vote against it as a whole.

If I have any time left I will yield it to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. DURHAM. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Indiana for yielding to me a few moments. I have nothing to say as to the action of the last Congress in increasing the salaries of its own members. I have not a single word to say upon that subject. I am one of those who believe that all public servants who serve the public faithfully and honestly ought to be fairly remunerated; and I am here to-day to state in my place that I do not believe that the compensation as now fixed by law is one cent too much. I do not believe that the man who is competent to serve his people in the Congress of the United States can afford to do it for a less sum than $7,500.

That is my honest conviction about it. And yet, sir, while I make this statement on this floor, I must admit that, like a great many other men, I have to yield to what is the popular clamor or popular demand. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that the demand of the country is that this salary shall be reduced; and not only that the salaries of the members of this House and the members at the other end of the Capitol shall be reduced, but, sir, there is a greater and a higher clamor in regard to the large increase in the salary of the President of the United States than there is about the increase of the salaries of the members of either of the two Houses. And so far as that matter is concerned I shall vote for the minority report.

It was said this morning by the distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAINE,] who stands in the same attitude to this House that I do, never having occupied a seat here before, that it was honor enough to occupy a position here without having such a large salary. If this is true as far as the members of Congress are concerned, is it not equally true as far as the President of the United States is concerned? And if, sir, in the purer and better days of the Republic $25,000 were sufficient for the President of the United States, is it not sufficient now, taking into consideration the honor there is in being elected to that high office?

Sir, as far as I have investigated this matter I prefer the old bill to the new one; and what I desire to say is simply this, that I shall vote in obedience to public sentiment, because I believe that my people require it, because I believe they demand it, for the reduction of the salaries of members of Congress to $5,000. But at the same time I believe that my district demands, and I believe that the good of the whole country demands, that the franking privilege should be restored under a modified form.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, I believe this unhappy measure which was passed by the Forty-second Congress, and which was passed under the innocent title of "An act making appropriations for the executive, legislative, and judicial expenses of the Government," was wrong. I believe that the people of these United States, in every way in which they could express their will, have declared that they thought it was wrong. And I should be content by my simple vote to declare to my constituents that this was my belief, did I not think that I might in an humble way contribute to the progress of business before the House if I called its attention to what I think is our precise duty, which it seems to me may be expressed, in simple and exact phrase, as a union of the repeal bill for the past and the substitute for the future. This, I think, would be at once agreeable and satisfactory to the private conscience and to the public sense.

I have here before me on this subject a number of bills, a number of substitutes, and a number of amendments, and I find among them all but one substitute that, in my opinion, answers the demands of the occasion. I should like to vote for the report and resolutions introduced by my honorable friend from Maine. I should like to do that because it is a report of a committee of this House, and on this committee were wisely placed the names of those who, by their experience and character, it was justly thought were able to offer what would be satisfactory, wise, and patriotic. But unfortunately this committee, having made the start to run straight, went off their course. In so far as this report of the committee says "repeal," it is right. For, as my eloquent friend from New York has said, the people have told us to repeal—and we are their servants to obey—by every method that was in their power, by the resolutions of their Legislatures, by the resolutions of their conventions, by the editorials of their press, whether democratic or republican. Therefore the report of the committee is right as far as it says "repeal."

The report of the committee, in my opinion, is also right in so far that it provides that the measure of repeal shall take place only from the present time. Mr. Speaker, I did not belong to the Forty-second Congress. I belong to the Forty-third, and coming here as a member of the Forty-third Congress, I find an act by which my compensation was fixed by the Forty-second Congress, and under which to the present time I have drawn my pay. The Forty-third Congress is not responsible for the past, and will not meddle with it. The people do not demand it, and it is not right to touch the past. I say that the people do not demand it, for I claim that every citizen who was not a member of the Forty-second Congress, who was not a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress, and who, therefore, listens to the voice of the people with intelligence and not with fear—that every such intelligent citizen recognizes the voice of the people as proclaiming its indignation against "back pay," and not as against an increase of salary.

Now, if gentlemen wish that this bill shall retroact, they wish that which I admit is conspicuous; they wish to do that which I admit may give them temporary popularity. But I claim that to do it is doing that which, for a temporary benefit, works a lasting fault. I submit that to do this, while, as I allege, it is conspicuous and will be popular, is as unnecessary as it is unwise; and as the French general said when he saw that foolish charge at Balaklava, "it is magnificent, but it is not war;" so I claim that any such measure, unasked for by the people, not demanded by our own consciences, is a foolish attempt to win distinction and a popularity which is short-lived.

Now, no man yields to me in admiration for that self-sacrifice which is most honorable in human nature, but that self-sacrifice which is honorable is that which proceeds from the conscience and not from the desire of praise. That self-sacrifice, however, which in order to make itself conspicuous would force others to partake of your suffering is, in my opinion, not commendable, and I say to those honorable gentlemen who introduced the minority report that if they wish the distinction and popularity of self-sacrifice, let them go and take it; it is their right; do not let them force it by an act upon the House, for that is wrong. They need no act if they wish to set this example of self-sacrificing economy. The Treasury is open, and my experienced friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] or my eloquent friend from New York [Mr. TREMAINE] without any act, without building up on the sacrifices of others a splendid self-exaltation, may walk into the room of the Sergeant-at-Arms and deposit all the pay which he thinks is in excess of his merits.

For these reasons I am satisfied with the bill of the committee, so far as the measure proposed in it is to take effect from the present time, and we shall go back to our constituents and tell them just what were the facts; that a law of the Forty-second Congress, to which we did not belong, fixed our salary, that it was payable monthly, and we took it; that as soon as we met here, and had the opportunity and power we diminished our salaries, and set that example of economy in public expenditures which is essential to party as it is essential for the national welfare.

But one more feature of the bill reported by the committee meets my approval. The committee is willing that the actual expense of travel to and from the capital shall be paid to each member. Now I would much prefer, and I think it much wiser, that all the pay which each member of the House receives should be aggregated and represented by a single sum of money, so that our constituents may know exactly what we receive. But I recognize here an inherent difficulty, that those of my friends who come from the Pacific coast travel two weeks to come here and two weeks to return, and therefore, together, give one month of time to the public service in a laborious and painful way which we do not give. If this is the case give a compensation. For excess of labor we can make no reward, but for excess of expenditure by reason of their journey we can make compensation, and we are bound to make it. All of us, whether from the Atlantic or Pacific slope, should stand here paid an equal remuneration, as equals in every respect as far as possible before the bar of the House.

But while I have found satisfaction in the report so far as it covers those three points, I ask something further. I remind members that there is an abuse which existed before the abuse of an increase of salary; that there is the mileage bill, which my people hate, and justly hate, more than any increase of salary; and this bill of the committee is unsatisfactory to me and to many of my friends, because, having started to reform and gone a step, they pause. If we want reform, let us reform altogether, and, therefore, I want not only to repeal the salary bill, but I want also to repeal the mileage. And I want something more, which I do not find in the bill as reported by the committee. I want, as I said before, that the compensation we receive shall be a definite amount of money, not a certain amount of money plus so much stationery, plus so many newspapers, plus so much mileage.

The people do not know what these various additions amount to. What they would prefer, what I would prefer, what is simple, what is in analogy with private business, and, therefore, commendable, is one sum that should represent adequately and fairly the compensation of the Representative. And I want this sum, not that I think the people are niggardly and demand it, but because I wish to show the people that we are ready to practice economy ourselves—I want this salary fixed, and the aggregate to be nothing more—and I want it to be no less—than it was in the Forty-first Congress, and as it should have been in the Forty-second Congress.

I believe that if we take these various allowances and additions, so hateful to the public sense of justice, and change them into money, $1,000 will not more than adequately represent their pecuniary value to the member. This would make the salary $6,000, free from all allowances, and as near as possible the same salary which was paid members of the Forty-first Congress, and which, I say again, ought to have been the salary of the Forty-second Congress. Therefore I want the bill which shall pass this House to contain, in addition to the reformation of pay which is proposed in the report of the committee, also a repeal of the mileage and other allowances, so that the salary of members shall be fixed at $6,000 a year.

There is one other thing which, it seems to me, is wise and desirable; the increase of the salary of the President of the United States should be permitted to stand. I submit to that because I have to, though I prefer that he should fall with the rest. But what we can do, and what I think is right, is that there should be no alteration in the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court, of the Speaker of this House, or of the Vice-President of the United States; for the reason, so well and frequently urged, that in their conspicuous positions there are circumstances of social entertainment and otherwise which make it necessary for them properly to expend more than the private members of either House.

And now, to sum up: in the bill which, I believe, is technically called the substitute, which was introduced by my honorable friend from Pennsylvania, and which is spoken of in the House as the "Townsend bill," I find in the very fewest words, concisely and satisfactorily, ready for enactment, all that I claim is right. By that bill it is proposed to repeal the obnoxious features of the salary bill, the repeal to take effect immediately. It provides that the actual expenses of traveling to and from Washington shall be paid. I find it repeals that old abuse of the mileage. It leaves intact the salaries of the President, Vice-President, Speaker of the House, and judges of the Supreme Court. But, best of all, I find that it cuts off all those odious allowances and expenses to which I have referred, and makes the salaries of the members hereafter what they have been in the past, so far as the pecuniary equivalent goes; that is, $6,000 for each member of Congress, payable monthly.

Now, I say that if we pass this substitute of the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] which covers all the points necessary to be covered, in my humble judgment it will be that measure of repeal which combines in satisfactory union all that will be satisfactory to the private conscience and public sentiment.

SPECIAL COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER announced the following special committees ordered by the House:

Select Committee on the Mississippi Levees—Messrs. Morey, Hurlbut, Stanard, Pierce, Lewis, Randall, and Lamar.

On the Centennial Celebration and the Proposed National Census of 1875—Messrs. Kelley, Hawley of Connecticut, G. F. Hoar, Shanks, Woodford, Butler of Tennessee, Smith of Ohio, Fort, Clayton, Wells, Young of Georgia, Harris of Virginia, and Standeford.

The SPEAKER. Some misapprehension exists in the minds of members in regard to the appointment of the Select Committee on the Reform in the Civil Service. They apprehend that that committee was not authorized by the House. Yet before the announcement of the committees by the Speaker a bill or bills had been referred to that committee. The Clerk will read the rule applicable to this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

A select committee is created either by resolution, when resolutions are in order, or upon motion to refer, when the subject to be referred is before the House.

The SPEAKER. That is not only the direct rule of the House, but it has been frequently adjudicated that whenever a bill is referred to a select committee it does ipso facto revive and reconstitute that committee.

Mr. COX. Then I think that rule should be reformed in that regard. It gives to one man in this House the power to recreate a special committee on one motion. I never believed that was the rule.

The SPEAKER. That has been uniformly ruled in very many instances.

REPEAL OF INCREASED CONGRESSIONAL SALARIES—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the salary bill.

Mr. DAWES obtained the floor, and yielded to—

Mr. FRYE, who said: I am profoundly grateful to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] for his kindness and favor to me in this regard, not because I desire to make a speech, but simply because I wish to enter a caveat right here. If this debate continues two or three days longer and one or two hundred more speeches are made, all of them in favor of the repeal of the salary bill, my constituents will certainly come to the conclusion that it requires an immense amount of powder to bring me to.

Now, sir, I simply wish to say right here, not to the gentlemen of this House, but to my far-off constituents, that I shall not make a speech, that there is no need of my making a speech; that these speeches are not for my conversion, because I have always been in the faith, and need no conversion. Simply desiring that my constituents may understand this, I again thank the gentleman for the opportunity to say it.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the remark of my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] bears quite as hard upon me as anybody else. [Laughter.] It was not my purpose in seeking the floor to ask the attention of the House to anything further than the reasons which shall guide me in the votes I shall give upon the various propositions before the House. Those reasons, sir, are the reasons which I gave to this House when the measure under consideration was proposed. Nothing that I desire to say now did I fail to say then. Nothing that I said then do I desire to change now. I lay no claim to the gift of prophecy; but if I predicted anything then, it is history now. Whatever reasons I then urged why that measure should not become a law, the people of the country as well as the condition of the country have pronounced upon the soundness and validity of those reasons.

I did not impute any wrong motive to any gentleman who differed with me upon that occasion. If I have since had occasion, publicly or otherwise, to criticise that measure, I have impugned the motives of no man who was instrumental in the passage of that law. I believed it then to be unwise. I now believe it still more strongly, if possible, to have been an unwise measure. Those who supported it thought differently from me, and no reason I was able to urge then could convince them of what I thought their error. But they were responsible alone for their convictions, and I have no business to arraign them.

I stated then that the proposition to impose for all coming time an annual burden of $2,500,000 upon the Treasury of the United States was inopportune and unwise. At that very time the revenues of the country for the very quarter in which that action was taken had fallen off $3,500,000, and the expenses had increased in about the same proportion. To-day, sir, we meet a deficit of three times that amount in the revenues of the country, while there is more than a corresponding increase in the estimate of expenditures for the coming year.

If there was, as I admitted, occasion for some revision of the compensation of persons in the civil service of the United States, I thought then, and I think still more firmly now, that it was unwise for us to begin the increase of salaries with ourselves and with those officers of the Government who were best compensated for their services. I stated then (and every day since has more and more developed the truth of the statement) that there were officers of the Government upon whose responsibility and integrity the very revenues of the country depended who were eking out a scanty subsistence upon a mere pittance of compensation; and that it would be well for us, if there was any disposition or effort to increase salaries, to begin with them. But I maintained that just after a Presidential election that had placed us in power as a party of economy, to tolerate in this House and to permit to become a law a measure that would single out, for increased compensation, ourselves and those here in the capital who were best paid for their services, while those upon whose integrity the collection of the revenue depended were demanding in vain sufficient pay to keep them from temptation, was unwise. And, sir, while I was speaking there were Treasury officials in custom-houses receiving more than one hundred thousand dollars a year for their services, while there were appraisers, measurers, and other officials who could get but $1,600 a year for their services. I had then the figures at my command; but I could get no hearing here upon a measure for adjusting such salaries upon something like an equitable basis.

The reasons I then submitted are the reasons that now urge me to the undoing of everything we then did, so far as the Constitution of the United States will permit us. Sir, we are mistaken if we suppose that anything short of this will meet either the public expectation of to-day or the fair and honest judgment of the future upon our acts. We must undo all that we did then, so far as the Constitution of the United States will permit. There was no more reason why we should raise the salaries of the other officers mentioned in this bill than there was for raising our own.

Sir, the Constitution of the United States has wisely guarded the Executive against any encroachment upon his compensation. We can, therefore, talk freely about his salary, because nothing that we may do can reach the present Executive. And, thank God, he stands before the country as one who never sought the place as a position for the attainment of wealth. But, sir, such are now the compensation and perquisites of that office that when the present Executive shall have vacated the position, we shall, unless the law be changed, proclaim to the country that the highest office in our Government is a place for the attainment of wealth.

Sir, if we content ourselves with the idea that the public condemnation is confined to so much of the act of last session as affects our own salary, we misjudge. Along with the $200,000 which, unless the law be changed, the President is hereafter to receive during his term as salary, there come perquisites that vary very little each year from $50,000; so that under the existing law the salary and perquisites of the presidential office for a single term will amount to $400,000. I submit, that while we can act upon this question without having our motives impugned—while we stand so far from any person whom our action can affect—while we can act upon this question under such circumstances that no person can say that we reflect upon him, it is our duty to meet this question, and to meet it fairly and squarely. The salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court were only two years before that made $8,000 a year, by the addition of $2,000, with the addition of a pension for life. We cannot now touch their salaries, but there was no propriety, in my opinion, after we had fixed their salary at $8,000, with a pension for life, in adding $2,000 to their salary. That is covered by the Constitution, but there are executive officers embraced in the law with a salary increased to $10,000 a year.

I submit, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the people understand that the measure we passed not only embraced our own compensation, putting it at an unreasonably high figure, but that there are others in the same position. It put them there, too, at a largely increased pay, while there were other officers of the Government demanding, in terms and under circumstances requiring our attention, that their compensation should also be increased, but to whose appeals we turned a deaf ear.

I wish to call the attention of the House to another feature of the bill of the majority of the committee that was never before in any other compensation bill. Hitherto we have put the salary of the President of the Senate and of the Speaker of this House to just double the compensation of members. Up to the last increase it was just double the compensation of a member. At the last increase, however, when the pay of members was made $5,000, instead of making the salary of the Vice-President and the Speaker of this House $10,000 each, it was put just where the compensation of the members of the Cabinet was put, at $8,000 a year. Now, in your majority bill, it is proposed to bring the salary of the President of the Senate and of the Speaker of this House down to $8,000 a year, while the salaries of the members of the Cabinet are left at $10,000. You put the salary of the Vice-President and Speaker below the double rate at which it has always been, leaving the increased pay of members of the Cabinet to remain as it is. And while I hold it should remain there, I hold the salaries of the members of the Cabinet should also be put where they were a year ago when we introduced this measure. I think it is just as easy for us to pass such a bill, so far as the Constitution will permit, as it will be to pass the bill reported by this committee.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAWES. In a moment. Mr. Speaker, it is no sound argument, no answer to make to the people of this country that we have time only to pass this partial measure. We have ample time; we have time enough to do it, and I tell the people of the country, unless it is done in this bill it never will be done. And the attempt to put through this bill so circumscribed is an attempt, Mr. Speaker—I do not mean to say it was so designed on the part of those who reported it, but the country will so read it, and will have a right to so read it. I say it is an attempt to shield the remainder of the officers embraced in the law from any reduction of their compensation. The members of the present Congress, under the present burdens of the Government, with the revenues of the country falling off, with your committee charged with the unpleasant duty of looking around among the industries of the country to see where some new tax may be imposed to meet the current expenses of the Government, have got to answer for it to the people of this country, how in this way they allow this increase of salary which is confessed to be too high to remain with some officers, while it is taken away from all others.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, as the leader of the House, and the chairman of the chief financial committee of the House, whether in his judgment, leaving the voice of the people aside for a moment, whether in his own judgment, as a member of the House, he considers the salary of $10,000 and inordinate and extravagant salary, either for the head of a Department or a justice of the Supreme Court?

Mr. DAWES. In a country that prides itself upon the simplicity of its institutions, in a country where no place in the gift of the people ought to be sought for the money it offers, I say to my friend from New York, [Mr. HALE,] what he will find in the records a year ago, that I believe it will be a sorrowful day for this country when we pay such compensation to our officers that the offices will be sought only for the money they will bring. And I say, therefore, it will be better for every one of these men that their compensation should be what it was before the passage of this law.

Mr. MAYNARD. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question in that connection, whether he thinks it would or it would not be a sorrowful day when a man would be constrained to decline a place that was tendered to him upon the Supreme Bench, or any other place, because the salary of the office was insufficient to support him, and his private estate did not give him anything with which to increase his salary?

Mr. DAWES. I think the greatest and the best man in the country who could be paid by the money of an office, had better decline it in the beginning.

Mr. MAYNARD. That is not an answer to my question. The gentleman has failed to understand the point of my inquiry, for he certainly has not met it. I ask the gentleman whether he would not believe it would be a public calamity when a man suited and fitted to hold such a place would be compelled to decline it because the pay was insufficient to support him?

Mr. DAWES. With all frankness, I say, Mr. Speaker, it would; but if you have had here and there in the long life of the Republic such an instance as that, I want to know of my friend whether he would think it a calamity if such offices were sought by inferior men all over the country for the pay they would give them.

Mr. MAYNARD. Undoubtedly. Therefore we want to see what would be an adequate sum.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I wantto ask my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means a question in regard to his statement of fact, for a statement coming from him in regard to the President's perquisites would necessarily have great weight. He said that the perquisites of the presidential office have reached $50,000 a year, making his salary during the presidential term $400,000. I wish to ask him if in making up that sum he has not done the same as if in stating what it cost to run this Capitol he added the interest of the money which the Capitol originally cost; and, if that be so, whether his calculation is a correct or fair one?

Mr. DAWES. I have shown these facts; I have taken from the appropriation bills what has been appropriated for the President's household and his house, just what would be expended by any other official who hired his own house—not the cost of that house, but the yearly appropriations for the carrying it on and keeping it in order and repair.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Maintaining the state in that house which pertains to receptions and other expenditures of the office? That cannot be considered a salary personally received by the President.

Mr. DAWES. It is an expenditure which, if he were put on the footing of other officials, he would otherwise be obliged to pay.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. If he did not have it he would not spend it.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, it is not my wish to occupy the attention of the House more than a very few moments. If, indeed, I had felt certain that I should have had an opportunity of voting upon an amendment which would be submitted to the House so as to give a full and fair expression of my views upon this question, I should not have sought the attention of the House at all in this way and should have been content to express my views as I usually do upon questions which arise here by a silent vote placed upon the record.

The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] who has just taken his seat, has in the main expressed my views in regard to this measure much better than I could do myself, and I shall not attempt the repetition of the arguments which he has presented. The bill as it passed at the last session of Congress was, in many respects, a very unfortunate measure; unfortunate in that it was not called for by any public sentiment, and has alarmed and aroused the indignation of a considerable portion of the people; shaken their confidence in their public servants generally, and especially in some, in either branch of Congress, who are, in my judgment, among the most valuable and faithful of the people's representatives.

In all that I shall say here I desire neither to judge nor condemn any of my fellow members here. Some of the very best men that I have known in public life, in this House and in the other House, men who have almost uniformly favored economy in the public expenditures, opposed corruption in all its forms, and always stood manfully by what they believed the interest of the people and the honor of their country, put on record their votes for the bill which passed last session of Congress. And I do not question that they were as honest and upright in doing so as I claim to have been in my opposition to the measure. And I believe that the country has done these men great injustice in branding them with opprobrious epithets fit only to be applied to a felon in his cell. The press, I fear, has done injustice to itself, an injury to the country, and great injustice to many true men, by the clamor which has been raised against them.

But the act was not alone unfortunate. It was in my judgment wrong, because, as I think we can never err, and especially in a time like this, by favoring economy and opposing all extravagance of expenditure in the administration of the Government, not only in regard to all ordinary expenditures, but in regard to the salaries to be paid to all its public officers. I do not believe that in republican governments high salaries are promotive of the public good. And I believe, although I shall not dwell upon that, that if we were to go even further in the direction of economy than has been suggested by any member on this floor, that the public service would not be injured thereby.

The other day I introduced a bill, which was referred to the special committee for their consideration, which proposed a more radical reduction than has been proposed, I believe, by any other member. Perhaps, if considered worthy of being made the basis of our legislation now, it ought to be considerably modified. It proposed substantially the re-enactment of the law of 1856, which fixed the salaries of members of Congress at $6,000 for the entire Congress, or $3,000 per annum; but I frankly admit that this salary would not, in my judgment, be fair or sufficient, unless with its enactment we restore the franking privilege, and give at least a portion of the mileage allowed by that law. I have proposed in said bill a modification of the mileage, and while I am referring to that subject I may say, briefly, that I do not agree in the sentiments expressed by gentlemen all around me, that there is no equity in this thing of mileage paid to members. It is not true that the member whose home is on the Pacific, or the member whose home is in the far West or the South is on an equality with the members from Virginia, Maryland, and other States immediately surrounding us. When members from these distant States come here they are a thousand miles, or more, away from their homes and business; they can give no personal supervision over or attention to their business, and if they are called home at any time by sickness in their families, or otherwise, or wish to go home during the holidays, heavy burdens are imposed upon them for traveling and other expenses. Members here immediately near the capital have the opportunity, and avail themselves of it, to give attention to their business, many of them devoting a considerable portion of their time to the practice of their profession, or to attending to their farms or business, and this advantage is not permitted to members who live upon the Pacific coast, or in the far West or South. I say, therefore, there is equity in the provision for mileage to members, although probably not the amount heretofore paid. I would not favor the amount that was allowed by the law of 1856; but I do insist there is reason and equity in the principle.

Mr. Speaker, I believe, and if I had voted for the bill of last session I should still so believe, that we ought now, promptly and without hesitation, to repeal the act of last session increasing the salaries of members and other public officers. Upon a question of this kind the will of the people ought to be omnipotent. We may disagree among ourselves here about what ought to be a fair compensation for our services as members of Congress. Some can afford to come here for much less than others. Some, who have large fortunes, are not content to remain away from their families, but must have them here, and such men even, who are economical in their habits may, with their families, expend more than the salary allowed under the existing law. But still it is unquestionably true that, under the salary as provided by the law of 1856, members lived here during the time of the very highest inflation of the currency that has been known to our country; lived here during the whole time of our late civil war on that salary, and it was only since the close of the war that the salary was established which the last Congress repealed. The country does not now, I suppose, demand any such radical change as that we shall go back to the salary as it was before 1866, and I will not now, whatever might be my own views of its propriety, advocate a measure which I am sure is wholly impracticable. We have drifted so far away from that that any one who should advocate a return to the salary paid members prior to the Thirty-ninth Congress would doubtless be charged with demagogery for the purpose of affecting the people at home. I have no wish to subject myself to any such imputation by advocating what I know it would be impossible to pass.

But I do insist upon the repeal of the act of the last session, and the restoration of the law as it then was. We should repeal it, if for no other reason, because the people of the country demand it. Because, sir, however much it might be our duty on a great constitutional question that might arise here, to defy the clamors of a misled populace, and to stand out against popular denunciation rather than sacrifice the Constitution of our country, and the honor and glory of the nation—whatever might be our duty on a question of that character, I insist that this is a matter which they have a right to control. It is a question peculiarly for their decision. When their will is known, when their voice has been distinctly expressed, as I think it has been on this question, the voice of the people should be to us as the voice of God. And if there are any gentlemen in the public service who cannot afford to leave their possessions at home and devote their talents and energies to the service of the country at the salary the people are willing to allow, it is always within the power of such gentlemen to resign and let the people send public servants here who are willing to serve them on the terms indicated by the will of the people.

Now, in these remarks I wish it to be understood—and I repeat it—that I have no intention and no desire whatever to reflect upon the motives of any gentlemen who have differed from me heretofore and who differ from me now, in regard to our duty on this question. As I said before, some of the best men that have in recent times honored these halls gave their voices in favor of the law of last session; and I believe they did so from unselfish motives and with an honest conviction that they were doing that which was right and proper for promoting the best interests of the country. But I repeat, while that is so, that those gentlemen who have come to the conclusion that I have that the voice and judgment of the people are against the measure; that the great mass of the people think that Congress did itself no honor in passing it, and that this Congress ought at the earliest possible day to repeal it, ought to obey the voice of the people. I shall therefore give my vote, if I have an opportunity to do it, in preference to all the other measures now pending before the House, for the bill prepared by the minority of the committee and brought before the House by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.] I believe that it, more nearly than any other, embodies the wishes and purposes of the country. It makes the salary to which we return applicable to this entire Congress. I think that meets the demands and expectations of the country, and is what is decent and proper to be done.

If a majority believe that the salary, as it existed before the passage of the act of last session, is inadequate, and that, in consideration of the repeal of the franking privilege and the withdrawal of other perquisites, it ought to be increased, and that the people will justify them in placing it at a higher sum, be it so; but whatever it may be fixed at, let it apply to this Congress from the time of its commencement. The bill which was passed at the last session made the salary, as then fixed, applicable to the Forty-second Congress; and all previous bills passed on the subject of salary were applicable to the Congresses that passed them. Now, if we see proper to modify and reduce the salary as now fixed, it seems to me the fair, manly, honest thing to do is to make it applicable to the whole Congress. If members have generally drawn their pay under the provisions of the law as it now exists, as I suppose is the case, let what has been received be deducted from the salary as we now fix it, and the residue only be paid them. This will be fair, straightforward action; and nothing short of this will, in my judgment, meet the demands and expectations of the country.

Another word and I have done. The bill I introduced the other day, following the enactment of the law of 1856, provides that no portion of the salary shall be paid to any member until he takes his seat and is sworn in; that he shall not draw pay during the recess of Congress, or at any time until he has appeared and qualified. I believe, although we have departed from it, that that was the practice from the commencement of the Government until a few years ago. I think that is the proper course; and if he, from death or for any cause, fails to take his seat or render any service, no salary shall be paid to him or his representatives. If I have a proper opportunity, I will present for the consideration of the House an amendment to the bill, proposing that change; and if I do not have opportunity, I hope some other gentleman will do it; and I trust that it will receive the favorable consideration and action of the House. I have said all that I desire at this time, and yield what time I have remaining to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SOUTHARD.]

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman from Ohio would as soon proceed in the morning I suggest that we adjourn.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I shall only occupy a few moments. Mr. Speaker, I rise not to criticise the action of others, but simply to say a word upon the bill before the House. I concede to others the right of exercising their individual opinions without questioning their integrity or their wisdom, and without impugning their motives. The object of the measure before the House is, retrenchment and reform. If that is the real purpose, and such should be the only purpose of this bill, let it be complete. If it be the sense of the people that this law should be repealed, and if that sense as expressed through the press and through the people means anything it means that then the whole of the law should be repealed, and not a part only. The bill as proposed by the majority is good pro tanto. It is one step in the right direction, and one step only. Why, Mr. Speaker, repeal the law so far as it applies to Senators and Representatives in Congress, and leave it unrepealed so far as it applies to the Chief Executive and other officers of the Government? The increase, taking into consideration the withdrawal of the franking privilege, and stationery, and mileage, is not equal, in regard to members of Congress, to that of the other officers of the Government. Fifteen per cent., I believe, was the general increase in the pay of employés; and, when we take into consideration the facts I have mentioned, not more than that increase was given to members of Congress.

The Chief Executive is paid a salary increased by 100 per cent., and the perquisites and allowances in addition to that. The allowances for the President, executive mansion, and grounds, now amount to more than sixty-nine thousand dollars a year. Over thirty-one thousand dollars of that allowance may be considered personal to the President himself. Now, if we are going to move in behalf of retrenchment and reform, (and I will go as far in that direction as any man on this floor,) let us go in this matter so far as the Constitution will not intervene and prevent. And if in these days of panic and of want, when there are hundreds and thousands of laborers and operatives throughout the country thrown out of employment entirely or are working upon limited time and at reduced wages, we are to begin the work of reform and the practice of economy, then let us begin by repealing the whole act increasing salaries.

If gentlemen believe that the sentiment of the people goes only so far as the members of Congress are concerned, then they greatly mistake that sentiment as expressed through the press and in conventions. In my own State both parties have resolved that this increase of salary should be repealed unconditionally, not merely as to a part.

When we take a little retrospect of the fiscal transactions of the Government, running back from June 30, 1873, to June 30, 1865, a period of but eight years, and find that the receipts of the Treasury amount to the enormous sum of $3,300,000,000, and that the whole of this amount has been expended, while the public debt has been reduced only about $450,000,000, and now stands confronting the people in almost its original colossal proportions, we may form some idea of the extravagance that has been practiced in the expenditure of the people's money, and the consequent necessity of greater economy.

Therefore I say that the bill reported by the minority of the committee better meets the views of the people on this subject. I am willing to vote for the bill reported by the majority, if I am compelled to vote for that alone. But let us, in the first place, amend it and make it complete and perfect. Let the minority report be adopted, except as to the mileage provision, and let that be equalized, so that we may fix the compensation of members of Congress and other officials of the Government at the old rate, as far as may be practicable.

Mr. POLAND obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, in order that we may have some understanding as to the disposition of this bill, and the time when the debate upon it shall be closed. If the House will consent to it, I will propose that the debate shall run to-morrow until three o'clock, the last hour to be devoted to five-minute speeches; and then at three o'clock I will call the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman proposes that the last hour to-morrow shall be for five-minute speeches. The five-minute speeches are provided for under the rule.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Yes; but if the House should sustain the previous question there will be no opportunity for speeches after that. I make this proposition in deference to certain gentlemen who do not want to speak twenty minutes, but who may speak, perhaps, for five minutes each. That will give an hour to-morrow for speeches under the twenty-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that, as there is no committee to report to-morrow, therefore the morning hour to-morrow can be omitted for the call of committees, and the consideration of this bill might be resumed immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Then upon that suggestion——

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope this House will be willing to consider and act upon the bill reported this morning from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. That will not be in the morning hour, and therefore can have nothing to do with this question.

Mr. GARFIELD. The House can consider it in the morning hour, as it can this bill, by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The majority of the House can go into Committee of the Whole at any time they choose.

Mr. MAYNARD. The previous question will cut off all amendments but two.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That is so, if the House shall sustain the call for the previous question. I could call the previous question now, but I do not choose to do so, because there are gentlemen who wish to speak. Upon the suggestion of the Chair in regard to the morning hour, I will modify my proposition so that the debate may go on to-morrow until half-past one, under the twenty-minute rule, and from that time till three o'clock it shall be limited to five-minute speeches; after which I will call the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does in that form. When the order was made in regard to the bill, it precluded the right of the majority at any time to cut the debate down to five-minute speeches.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood, when the arrangement was made, that we were to have the opportunity to vote upon the various amendments.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. No, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. That was certainly my understanding. If it was not the understanding, I hope we will make it so now.

Mr. DAWES. I hope members of the House will understand that if they desire to vote upon amendments they must decide the matter for themselves, and not rely upon getting such an opportunity from the committee, who have clearly indicated that they intend to allow no amendments.

The SPEAKER. If the House by a majority vote should second the demand for the previous question on the bill, and thereby cut off amendments, no member can object to this exercise of the right of the majority. But if a majority of the House do not choose to do that, the bill will be open to amendment. The matter, therefore, depends upon the will of the majority of the House, not upon any unanimous consent or any arrangement which may be made by any individual or committee. The matter is wholly within the control of the majority.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] who is known to be in very feeble health, came in here this morning with the hope of getting the floor and making some remarks upon this bill to-day. He was, however, taken ill and was obliged to leave. When he left he expressed a desire that he might have an opportunity to submit his remarks to-morrow morning upon the convening of the House. I hope he will have that opportunity, and that the matter will be settled now so that he may come here in the morning with that understanding.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia. There is no necessity for any understanding about the matter.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] have the goodness to state whether by "five-minute speeches" he means the ordinary five-minute debate by the introduction of amendments, to be discussed pro and con, five minutes on each side.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. If the House will hear me a moment, I will state the position of the committee upon this subject. The proposition I have just submitted was made in good faith, in order, as I said, that members desiring to speak might have more opportunity than is given under the twenty-minute rule adopted yesterday. As my effort to reach an agreement on this subject was fruitless, I can make no other proposition that would not probably meet with some objection. As to shutting off amendments and debate, the committee has no desire to do that. At a proper time, when, so far as I can gather the views of members, the debate seems to have run long enough, I shall ask an expression of the House as to whether the bill shall be voted upon without amendment. Over the decision of that question I shall have no control. I shall not, as I have been pressed to do, select one amendment that I will admit in preference to another, but shall ask the House to decide upon a single vote whether it wishes to act upon amendments or not. As the proposition which I submitted in good faith has been objected to in different quarters, all I can do is to yield the floor, giving notice that at about three o'clock to-morrow (I cannot say it will be precisely at that hour) I shall seek the floor for the purpose I have indicated. Meanwhile, I presume, the debate must proceed under the twenty-minute rule, allowing comparatively few members the opportunity to speak.

Mr. MONROE. I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, whether it is assumed that there is to be no morning hour to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is to be none.

Mr. MONROE. There are committees anxious to report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information to that effect; but if there are, the committees had better be called. Will the gentleman indicate any committee that is ready to report?

Mr. MONROE. The Committee on Education and Labor are ready to report a bill, and desirous of an opportunity to do so.

Mr. ORTH. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] who holds the floor, yields to me to make the motion that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly, (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes, p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. COBURN: A petition of the citizens of Bridgeport, Indiana, for a currency reserve to be exchanged for bonds.

By Mr. DAWES: The petition of the Sun Mutual Insurance Company, of New York; the Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company, of New York; the New York Mutual Insurance Company, of New York; and the China Mutual Insurance Company, of Boston, Massachusetts, for a rehearing of claim for loss of bark Caldera, &c., and payment for same out of surplus of said fund.

By Mr. EAMES: The petition of Daniel Joolin and 205 others, merchants, manufacturers, and other citizens of the city of Providence, Rhode Island, and vicinity, for widening of the draw near the southern end of the Long Bridge, in the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HAMILTON: The petition of John L. Everitt and 95 other citizens of Sussex County, New Jersey, asking sundry alterations of the postal laws.

By Mr. HENDEE: The petition of Samuel Bailey, of Elmore, Vermont, for an invalid pension.

By Mr. HOWE: The petition of William M. Compton, J. M. Stone, and W. C. McAlexander, praying for relief from liability upon the bonds of the late B. B. Emory, late collector of internal revenue.

By Mr. McKEE: The memorial of John A. Ragan, of Hinds County, Mississippi, concerning Mississippi levees.

By Mr. MYERS: A petition of 77 citizens of Erie, Pennsylvania, for an increase in the pay of letter-carriers.

By Mr. PIERCE: A petition of merchants, manufacturers, and other citizens of the city of Boston and vicinity, for the widening of the draw near the southern end of the Long Bridge, in the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STARKWEATHER: The petition of the Board of Trade of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, showing that the draw of the Long Bridge over the Potomac obstructs navigation, and asking that the same be widened.

Also, the petition of sundry captains of vessels trading with Georgetown, on the same subject.

Also, a petition of citizens of Georgetown and Washington, on the same subject.

By Mr. SWANN: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Baltimore, in favor of a speedy return to specie payments, and protesting against any further inflation of the currency.

By Mr. WALLS: A petition of 164 colored citizens of Levy County, Florida, petitioning Congress for the passage of the Sumner civil rights bill.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 11, 1873.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., of Washington.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The Secretary (Hon. GEORGE C. GORHAM) called the Senate to order, saying: In the absence of the Vice-President of the United States, the Secretary calls the Senate to order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Secretary, I move that, in the absence of the Vice-President, the Hon. MATTHEW H. CARPENTER, of Wisconsin, be elected President pro tempore.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Secretary, I nominate for President of the Senate pro tempore Hon. ALLEN G. THURMAN, of Ohio.

The SECRETARY. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the ballots shall be counted by tellers? The vote is to be by ballot, under the rules.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is the best way, I suppose.

The SECRETARY. And if so, how are the tellers to be appointed?

Several SENATORS. By the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. The Secretary appoints Mr. ANTHONY, of Rhode Island, and Mr. STEVENSON, of Kentucky, tellers. They will please advance to the desk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms will prepare the ballots for Senators.

The ballots having been cast, were counted by the tellers; and the result was proclaimed, as follows:

The SECRETARY. By the report of the tellers it appears that Mr. CARPENTER has received 32 votes, and Mr. THURMAN 16 votes, and there are two blank ballots. The whole number of votes cast is therefore 48; necessary to a choice, 25; of which Mr. CARPENTER has received 32, and Mr. THURMAN 16. Mr. CARPENTER, being duly chosen President pro tempore, will please take the chair.

Mr. CARPENTER took the chair as President pro tempore, to which he was escorted by Mr. THURMAN, and said: Senators, please accept my grateful thanks.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that, in the absence of the Vice-President, the Senate has chosen Hon. MATT. H. CARPENTER, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, President of the Senate pro tempore; and that he make a similar communication to the House of Representatives.

JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 480) to provide for enlistments in the Navy; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 16) providing for a change in the name and title of the agent and consul-general of the United States at Alexandria.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of General Gillmore, and a petition of Henry S. Wells, in regard to the improvements in Savannah River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I present the petition of the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance of the State of New York, which numbers 52 subordinate temples, with a total of 1,562 members, asking that a commission be raised to inquire touching the evils of intemperance. At the request of the highly respectable gentleman who forwarded this petition to me, I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer a similar petition, signed by George W. Wheeler and 205 other citizens of Worcester, Massachusetts, asking the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, presented four petitions of citizens of Mason and Oceana Counties, Michigan, asking the enactment of a law providing that all lands the title of which remains in the Government and located in the Indian reserve in those counties, be and remain subject to entry and location by actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead act, and that those lands be not put upon the market or offered for sale during five years; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Daniel C. Taylor and others, praying that a certain piece of ordnance, formerly belonging to Battery B, First Rhode Island Light Artillery, understood to be now in possession of the United States Government, may be delivered to the battery for preservation, to be placed in the custody of the State of Rhode Island; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Charles E. Carpenter, president, and Rev. J. W. Willett, and Rev. H. W. Conant, secretaries, and other officers of the Rhode Island State Temperance Union, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of F. C. Flint and 51 other citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Edward Jarvis, praying to be compensated for services in preparing the census report of 1850, and papers in support of the claim; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM presented the petition of Morris K. Jessup, president, and R. R. McBurney, corresponding secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of the city of New York, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE presented the petition of John Edgar, president, and other officers of the State Temperance Union, and of the Good Templars of the State of Minnesota, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented the petition of the Wilmington, Delaware, Friends' First Day School Association, signed by William Hoopes and Emma Worrell, superintendents, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a memorial of citizens of the States and Territories west of the Missouri River, asking Congress to grant to them one-half of the arid lands within their borders, not mineral, the proceeds thereof to be devoted to the construction of irrigating canals and reservoirs, for the purpose of reclaiming said arid and waste lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of Eugene Smith, late of Company F, First Nebraska Veteran Volunteer Cavalry, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Israel Ober, of Kansas, praying to be allowed a pension for services rendered in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DENNIS presented the petition of Francis A. Gibbons, of Baltimore, Maryland, praying compensation for oats furnished to the Government under a contract with Captain C. H. Thomas, assistant quartermaster; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HITCHCOCK, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of John P. Thomas be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HITCHCOCK, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Macoudray & Co., and others, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HITCHCOCK, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the Milwaukee and Rock River Canal Company be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill (S. No. 151) in relation to the consul-general of the United States at Alexandria, Egypt; which was read and passed to its second reading.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 43) to provide for the better protection of the northern and northwestern frontier, and to facilitate commerce and diminish the expense of the exchanges between States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 46) for the construction of a custom-house and bonded warehouse at Portland, Oregon, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; which was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of William Thwing, of Boston, praying the return of duties paid by him in August, 1862, have instructed me to submit an adverse report on the petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to inquire what disposition is necessary to be made of the report, in order to prevent this claim being presented again? I suppose it should be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report must be agreed to, the Chair supposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I move that the report be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-ROUTE IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 474) to establish a post-route from the village of L'Anse, in the county of Houghton and State of Michigan, to Huron Bay in said county and State, to report it back with a recommendation that it pass, and I ask for the present consideration of the bill. It merely provides for the establishment of a post-route. There will be no objection to it, I apprehend.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CURRENCY—SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yesterday morning, during my temporary absence from the Senate, two resolutions were introduced from the Committee on Finance on the subject of specie payments. As I was necessarily absent, and could not be here at that time, I desire to say now just one word. While I do not concur in either of the resolutions offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] or the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] I consented to the resolutions offered by the Senator from Ohio being reported for the purpose of getting the question before the Senate; but I do not wish to be concluded by that resolution any more than by the other. I do not for myself feel the necessity of haste in our legislation touching the subject of specie payments. I am in favor, rather, of an addition to the circulation; not inflation by any means, but such addition as I think the condition of the country, in view of our increased population and wealth, demands.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SUMNER. On the first day of the session I introduced a bill contemplating specie payments, entitled "A bill to authorize compound-interest notes to be substituted for legal-tender notes." At that time I stated upon its reference I should like to make a brief statement. If there is no other business of the morning hour now, I should like to ask that the bill be taken up that I may make a statement.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to present a bill.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Chair will be good enough to put the question on taking up this bill, I will give way cheerfully for any further morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to suspend the pending order of business before the Senate and to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. SUMNER. I will not object to any morning-hour business going on.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to offer a resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. That may be done, but let my bill be put in order. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive bills and resolutions.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CLAYTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 152) extending the time for selection of swamp and overflowed lands in Arkansas under the act of Congress approved March 12, 1860; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 153) for the relief of Silas J. Field and others, of Little Rock, Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 154) to amend an Act for the relief of certain tribes of Indians in the northern superintendency, approved June 10, 1872; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GORDON. I was in the act yesterday of introducing a bill for the free transportation of periodicals, magazines, and newspapers through the United States mails, when I was notified that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] had introduced a bill on that subject in accordance with previous notice, which had preference. On reading his bill, however, I find that there are material differences between the one that I proposed to introduce and his. I therefore beg leave to introduce this bill, with a view to its reference to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 155) to amend the act of March 3, 1873, in relation to the transmission of periodicals, magazines, and newspapers through the United States mails; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WINDOM (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 156) for the relief of Joseph Nock; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WRIGHT (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 157) for the relief of Joseph Nock; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 158) for the relief of Thomas Hughes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 159) in relation to the practice in the courts in the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOGY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 160) to authorize the payment of duties on imports to be made partly in legal-tender notes and national bank notes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 161) to provide for the appointment of a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 162) confirming the grant of certain lands in the State of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 163) for the extension of time to the Saint Paul and Pacific Railroad Company for the completion of its roads; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 164) amending and construing an act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act to amend an act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts, approved July 27, 1866;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CROZIER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 165) for the relief of the settlers on the Osage ceded lands; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 166) to incorporate the Twelfth street and South Washington Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer a resolution in regard to the compensation of Senators, which I ask may be read, laid on the table, and printed.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate all information in his office relating to the fixing of the salaries of Senators and Representatives in Congress from the formation of the Government; in what cases provisions for salaries were made retroactive; how long a time in each case was covered by retroactive provisions; the names of Senators who drew their pay under such provisions; the amounts drawn by them respectively, with the dates of payment; the names of Senators who covered into the Treasury amounts due them under such retroactive provisions, and the date of such action; and also a comparative statement of the total compensation and allowance of Senators under the acts of July 28, 1866, and of March 3, 1873, respectively.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW OF JOHN M. MORRIS.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM submitted the following resolution; which wa referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Ex penses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to the widow of John M. Morris, deceased, late executive clerk of the Senate, $150 for his funeral expenses, and a further allowance equal to two months of his annual pay.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. WEST. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That when the two Houses adjourn on Friday, the 19th instant, they adjourn to meet again on Tuesday, the 6th day of January next, at 12 o'clock, noon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. MORTON. There is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

TRANSPORTATION COMMITTEE.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board to present the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board be authorized to sit, at such places as they may designate, during the holiday recess, in case one shall be ordered; and to investigate and report upon the subject of transportation between the interior and the sea-board; that they have power to employ a clerk and stenographer, and to send for persons and papers; and that the actual and necessary expenses attending such investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to

EFFECT OF ABOLITION OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 3.

Mr. GORDON. One moment, if the Senator from Massachusetts pleases. I wish to offer a resolution; and ask that it be read and printed.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the abolition of the franking privilege was intended to economize the expenditures of the Government; and

Whereas its abolition prevents the general distribution to the people of improved field and garden seeds, thus defeating in a measure the benefits which otherwise would accrue to the agriculture of the country from the establishment of the Agricultural Bureau, and also discourages the distribution of public documents which afford important information, and are an educator to the people; and

Whereas, to compensate the people for these losses, there should be important reduction of the expenditures in the postal service of the Government: Therefore

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to report, for the information of the Senate:

First, what amount of expense, if any, has been saved to Government by the abolition of the franking privilege.

Second, how many employés in the mail service, if any, have been discharged; and how much less, if anything, is charged by the railroads or other carriers for the mails since the abolition of the franking privilege.

Third, how much less appropriation will be required for the postal service by reason of the abolition of said privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection; and that bill will be considered as before the Senate, and reported in full.

Mr. MORTON. Before the Senator from Massachusetts proceeds, I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator from Georgia, to so amend his resolution as to separate the franking privilege of members of Congress from all other free mail-matter.

Mr. GORDON. I did not hear the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest that the Senator so amend his resolution as to make the report relate to the franking privilege of members of Congress, as distinguished from the franking privilege by heads of the Departments and other free mail matter.

Mr. GORDON. I accept that amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. If I may make a suggestion to the Senator, I wish to add the propriety of his asking the Postmaster-General to particularize. When he states what the reduction is, it would not be very satisfactory that we should hear in lump that it was so much, but let the resolution call upon him to give the particulars and items in which expense had been saved.

Mr. GORDON. I take it that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Indiana will meet the wishes of the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all, if the Senator will pardon me. The first call of his resolution is for information in response to this question, how much has been saved by the abolition of the franking privilege, or, as the Senator from Indiana now suggests, by the abolition of the franking privilege in respect of members of the two Houses. My suggestion to the Senator is that he add to that a request to the Postmaster-General to point out the items and the particulars in which this expense has been saved.

Mr. GORDON. I appreciate the request of the Senator, and agree with him fully. I suggest, however, as the resolution is to be printed, and I am notified by Senators around me that there are a number of amendments to be offered, that he can to-morrow, when the resolution is called up, move such amendments as he may deem proper.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that he also include what additional expense has been imposed upon the different Departments in consequence of requiring postage-stamps to be placed on letters and documents by the Departments; how many additional officers are employed, and the cost of printing the stamps for the several Departments; also, whether it is more expensive for any of the Departments to send out their documents through the post-office than it would be through the expresses; and also whether the documents that are sent out by the Post-Office Department are charged with stamps as well as all those sent out by the other Departments.

Mr. GORDON. I have only to remark that the resolution lies upon the table until to-morrow, and that these suggestions can be better made when it comes up for final action.

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly. I now call up my bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts insists on proceeding with his bill. Before that bill is taken up, the Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 480) to provide for enlistments in the Navy was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 16) providing for a change in the name and title of the agent and consul-general of the United States at Alexandria was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES—A SUBSTITUTE FOR LEGAL-TENDERS.

Mr. SUMNER. I now call up my bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 3) to authorize compound-interest notes as a substitute for legal-tender notes; which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to prepare for circulation compound-interest notes, equal in amount to the outstanding legal-tender notes and fractional currency of the United States, and in all respects similar to those heretofore issued under the act approved March 3, 1863, entitled "An act to provide ways and means for the support of the Government."

SEC. 2. That these notes, of different denominations, to the amount of $20,000,000, shall be dated on the first day of each month, commencing with the 1st day of July next ensuing, when the amount named shall be ready for issue, and then afterward on the first day of each month until the requisite amount has been furnished.

SEC. 3. That the notes thus provided shall be paid out for all disbursements of the Treasury, except those due in coin, so long as they are sufficient for the purpose; and if the whole monthly installment is not thus disposed of, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the surplus for the present legal-tender notes, so far as practicable, that the full sum of twenty millions may be put in circulation each month.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the destruction each month of legal-tender notes to an extent equal to the notes issued under this act.

SEC. 5. That the notes issued under this act shall, at the option of the holder, be convertible, at the end of two years, in sums of $100 or its multiple, into bonds of the United States, not having less than 10 nor more than 40 years to run, and bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent.; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue such bonds.

SEC. 6. That whenever these notes, or the bonds into which they may be converted, can be sold at par in gold, the Secretary of the Treasury may sell them in such sums as may be called for, and apply the proceeds in gold to cancel legal-tender notes as they are paid into the Treasury.

SEC. 7. That the notes issued under this act shall constitute no part of the legal currency reserve required of the national banks.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, the present measure is a humble contribution to the efforts now making for the relief of our country from an inconvertible currency. Whichever side we turn are ills from this omnipresent scourge, which is the unhappy legacy of a terrible war. And now there is a general movement for relief. The bill introduced is one of many having the same important object. I feel confident, that if adopted, it will be effectual to secure what is so much desired, with as little pressure or stringency as is incident to such a transition. I cannot doubt that it will be a good-working agency. But I do not assert that it is the only way; and I begin by declaring my anxious wish to harmonize with the Senate in any measure promising the same result. I am for specie payments at the earliest day and for any bill by which they can be advanced.

I am glad to believe that there is a disposition in Congress to approach this question seriously. The derangement of trade, the lawlessness of speculation, the check to honest business, the high scale of prices, private losses, the bankruptcy of great houses, and general anxiety—such are the witnesses to an intolerable grievance coextensive with the country, and not to be contemplated without an earnest prompting and longing for relief. Though the grievance is many-headed and many-handed, there are few who do not see that it is traced directly to the present condition of our currency.

Though happy in many respects, and enjoying an absolute equality in all parts of our wide-spread country, the currency is artificial rather than natural, and, therefore, local when it should be universal. Being local it is necessarily limited and without adaptibility. It cannot travel abroad, nor can it receive help from abroad. All that it is and all that it can be are contained in itself. There it is—nor more nor less—the same at all times, in great exigencies of commerce as when business is idle. In this unchangeable rigidity, sometimes called want of elasticity, there is an evil of the first magnitude. But this can be relieved only by making our currency cosmopolitan, so that it will be aided by the currency of the world.

Not less pernicious is the example of dishonor set by the National Government in persistently refusing to pay its notes. The nation teaches the people the lesson of bankruptcy; the nation teaches that promises to pay are mere words without present force except according to the convenience of the promisor. How naturally do others imitate the great teacher! In the demoralization that ensues the old mercantile honor, which was like a sensitive leaf, is thrust aside, while men with brazen front openly change business into a game or a lottery. Wall street, in its worst orgies, and in its saloons of speculation which are so many "hells" to be detested always, is quickened and helped by the national example. And here the country suffers not only in business but in good name.

For all this there is one remedy. Make our currency as good as gold, and the gold of the world will come to our assistance helping all the demands of business and adapting the currency to the occasion. Make our currency as good as gold, and the national example will be above reproach, while the wantonness of speculation will give place to the just transactions of an honest commerce. The same familiar paper will circulate, but changed from a lifeless corpse to a living soul, recognized and honored wherever credit is known.

To accomplish this beneficent transition I offer a measure, which by an easy process, must bring paper and gold to par. I do not see how the result can be doubted. It seems certain.

Speaking briefly, there are three different methods of remedy for the present financial credit; one by inflation, another by contraction, and still a third by substitution. These terms I use compendiously to denote processes with regard to legal tenders.

Inflation is the method of the exhausted inebriate, who would cure his delirium by fresh draughts of the fatal poison. Inflation is death to business—death to character.

Contraction is the heroic method, begun by Secretary McCulloch and sure to produce the just result, but requiring courage and the capacity to resist pressure and intimidation.

Substitution is the gentler method, as efficacious as contraction, hardly less seductive than inflation, by which the existing expansion will be slowly graduated to the standard of gold. The bill I offer comes under this head. In bringing it forward I am encouraged by the support it has already received from experts in finance and from commercial bodies. I refer especially to the president of one of the largest banks in New York, who wrote: "The plan is not only a good one, the best that has been brought forward, but the only plan that will ever be adopted." I refer also to the Boston Board of Trade, which, after long and careful consideration, gave this plan its approval, which was confirmed by leading presses at the East and West.

The bill creates interest-bearing notes at 6 per cent., payable in three years, and convertible in two years from date into ten-forty 5 per cent. bonds—twenty millions to be issued monthly and dated the first day of the month, to be paid out for all Government dues, except interest on bonds, and to be legal tender as greenbacks now, but not to be allowed as part of the bank reserves; and the monthly issue of interest-bearing notes to be a substitute for an equal amount of legal-tender notes, which are to be destroyed forthwith.

The operation of this measure as a substitute would be prompt in proportion to the monthly issue of the interest-bearing notes. Thus at five millions a month the object would be consummated in six years; at ten millions in three years; at twenty millions in eighteen months; and at twenty-five millions in fourteen and a half months. In the present bill the monthly issue is put at twenty millions, which would assure specie payments in eighteen months.

Studying the operation of these issues, it is easy to see that they will be necessarily in all parts of the country according to the current obligations of the Government; they will be in the hands of the people in small sums, and cannot be monopolized or manipulated by speculators. For a brief period they may circulate, but their increasing value will cause them to be laid by or hoarded. This process will be gradual but certain, as we know, from the nature of the case and also from experience when similar issues were made in 1863. Of course they will be laid by only when not needed by the holder. They will be a temporary form of surplus money. But just in proportion as this is done will the currency approach to par with gold.

This substitution will be in the nature of contraction, but without taking a dollar from the people. By an easy, natural, and gradual process, superseding all crisis or panic, the currency will adapt itself to the actual condition of things and the changing exigencies of business. The interest-bearing notes in the hands of the people will be in the nature of a reserve ready as a relief against financial pressure. Bearing only 6 per cent. interest, they will naturally reappear under the temptation of higher interest.

Meanwhile our present fitful currency will become more steady and certain. As par with gold approaches, business will be more healthy and natural. Money will become more plentiful and the present exorbitant rates of interest will fall to a normal amount. The average market interest during these latter years has been, probably, double what it was before the inflation of the currency, constituting an immense tax on business and a disturbing influence impossible to measure. Relief from this painful condition will be only one boon in the new order of things.

The influence on the banks will be important. As the substitution proceeds, they will be constrained to retain all accumulating gold as the "lawful money" required by their charters, thus increasing the reserve of gold, and gradually preparing for specie payments. With the completion of the substitution will end the period of trial. Our currency will be as good as gold, and being much more convenient, it will supersede the latter, except so far as needed in the expansion required by the exigencies of business.

I would not be too confident; but I cannot doubt that the adoption of the present measure would be the beginning of a happy change by which business in all its departments and the whole country would be benefited. Where now is uncertainty would be certainty, and this alone would be an infinite good. In the open vista the end would be clearly visible, and all would govern themselves accordingly. The trade of speculation would be arrested; prices would become natural; interest would cease to be oppressive, and money would flow in the regular channels of business.

It is difficult to say where the benefit would be most conspicuous, City and village, town and country, street and highway, would all bear witness to the change. But beyond the general sense of ease and comfort manifest everywhere, there are three special concerns that would throb with new life—agriculture, manufactures, and commerce. It is easy to see how each would be improved.

Agriculture must at once become more profitable, because the prices of its products will decline very little, while the incidental expenses are largely diminished. The ruling price of agricultural products is fixed by the foreign market, which continues the same amidst the vicissitudes of paper at home, but the articles used by the farmer including labor are subject to these vicissitudes. Thus, mess pork, which in 1860, before the inflation of the currency, averaged in New York $17.15, was quoted during the present autumn at $13.50, and wheat, which in 1860 was $1.45 to $1.54, was quoted at the same time at $1.47 to $1.50. But the boots and shoes which the farmer uses are 50 to 75 per cent. higher now than in 1860, and other articles have risen in the same proportion. As there cannot be two prices for the same product, the price for export determines the value of the whole crop, whether consumed at home or abroad; so that a western farmer is driven to sell by one standard, and to buy by another. But with currency at par with gold this costly anomaly must cease, assuring to the farmer a constant and solid prosperity.

Manufactures, like agriculture, will be quickened. As the articles entering into their production are cheapened, they will again take their place among exports, competing with foreign markets. In 1860, before inflation, our exports of domestic cottons amounted to $11,000,000, but in 1872 to only $2,300,000. With a sound currency I see not why we may not soon export cotton goods to the amount of $25,000,000 annually. But at present prices determined by an inflated currency how idle to compete with England! Even high protective duties are neutralized by the cost of production. But let the currency be at par with gold, and our manufactures will renew their life.

And commerce also will share the prevailing blessing. That historic marine, so long the pride of our country, as it whitened all seas with its sails, will assert once more its mastery. But so long as our inflated currency continues, farewell to this aspiration. According to testimony before a congressional committee five-eighths, or 62½ per cent., of the cost of an ocean steamer is in the labor required to build it. But this very labor has advanced latterly 50 to 60 per cent., thus adding a large increase to the expense of construction. And when the ship is ready for her voyage, the outfit, the wages of officers and men, and all incidental charges are in the same ratio. How can such a ship, built under such forlorn circumstances, enter into competition with the cheap vessels of the Clyde? As a remedy for this condition of things we are invited to vote subsidies. With one hand we are to uphold an inflated currency, and with the other vote subsidies to repair the mischief. There is something much better. Make the currency as good as gold, and subsidies will not be needed; or rather an improved currency will be a universal subsidy without cost to the country.

Therefore, for the sake of agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, all suffering from the existing financial condition, do I insist upon specie payments as the essential remedy.

The present disordered currency owes its origin to Congress, by whose authority it was created and is now continued. It was Congress that, under the terrible exigency of war, gave the word of command by which inconvertible paper was substituted for gold—vitiating contracts, deranging prices, and disturbing business. Of this great change Congress was artificer and architect. And now, in time of peace, a solemn duty presents itself, not to be postponed. The exigency of war has ceased, and Congress must be again artificer and architect, rebuilding the financial structure. In this work the motto of Goethe should be fulfilled, "Without haste, without rest;" and all so harmonizing that gold will take the place of paper with no apparent effort. Beginning quietly and without demonstration, the system will proceed in the same way to its consummation. There is the story of an ancient city whose walls rose to the music of a lyre. Those days are past; but the tranquil sway of irresistible influence is kindred to this music. The present bill is an attempt to bring our currency into this harmony. If anything further is needed to illustrate its character, I would call it, Return to specie payments made easy.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to take up for action the bill reported yesterday from the Committee on Finance to authorize the organization of national banks without circulation. It is a short bill, and I presume will not take long.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask the Senator from Ohio to indulge me in calling up and securing the passage of the bill I introduced the other day for the removal of political disabilities of certain gentlemen.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will give way to that, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 130.

Mr. SUMNER. What is that bill? Let the title be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. No. 130) to remove the disabilities of Thomas S. Bocock, E. J. Harvie, and Daniel Trigg, of Virginia, and John H. Reagan, of Texas,"

Mr. SUMNER. I shall not object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. THURMAN in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present agreeing thereto.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that, when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BANKS WITHOUT CIRCULATION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 71.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 71) to authorize the organization of national banks without circulation.

The bill provides that banks without circulation may be organized under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 30, [3,] 1864, upon the deposit with the Treasurer of the United States of not less than $10,000 of United States registered bonds, as provided in section sixteen of that act; and national banks already organized without circulation are authorized to withdraw their bonds in excess of $10,000; and national banks may withdraw their bonds on deposit as security for their circulating notes in amounts of $10,000, upon returning to the Comptroller of the Currency lawful money, to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, for the redemption of an amount of circulating notes of such banks equal to the amount issued upon such bonds.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this bill is, in substance, the same as a bill that was passed by the Senate at the last session. It contains two amendments of the national banking act. By section 16 of the national banking act, banks without circulation may be organized at any time; but the minimum deposit of bonds required is $30,000. As they receive no circulation and really get nothing from the Government but an organization, that limit is found to be too oppressive, and therefore it has been recommended two or three times by the Comptroller of the Currency that the amount should be reduced to $10,000, the Government deriving all the benefit of the organization and the banks receiving no circulation. That is one modification.

Then there is a modification of the twenty-sixth section of the act, which provides that any bank may reduce the amount of its circulation by surrendering a portion of it and taking up a portion of its bonds; but it is found in practice impracticable to gather in the circulation of a bank. Its circulation is so widely diffused that it is practically impossible for a bank to get in any specific amount of its notes in order to reduce its circulation, when prepared to do so. This bill, therefore, authorizes them to pay in an equal amount of legal-tender notes, to be deposited in the Treasury for the redemption of their circulating notes. I will ask to have read and placed on the record a letter from the Comptroller which will explain the matter a little more, if it is necessary.

The Chief Clerk read the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, December 4, 1873.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a bill to authorize the organization of national banks without circulation. This bill was considered and reported by your committee and passed the Senate during the last session. I have added an amendment to the original bill as it passed, providing that national banks already organized without circulation be authorized to withdraw their bonds in excess of $10,000, and authorizing banks to withdraw their bonds in amounts of $10,000 upon returning legal-tender notes in amounts equal to the amount of circulating notes issued upon such bonds.

I have on file a number of applications for the organization of national banks without circulation, and the passage of the inclosed bill will give me the opportunity to authorize the organization of such institutions.

As there is no objection to the passage of the bill, so far as I am aware, I trust that you will be able to report it from the committee and obtain its passage previous to the holiday recess.

I am, very respectfully,

JNO. JAY KNOX,
Comptroller.

Hon. JNO. SHERMAN,
Chairman Finance Committee, United States Senate.

Mr. MORTON. I ask to have the concluding portion of the bill read again.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And national banks may withdraw their bonds on deposit as security for their circulating notes, in amounts of $10,000, upon returning to the Comptroller of the Currency lawful money, to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, for the redemption of an amount of circulating notes of such banks equal to the amount issued upon such bonds.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest that that clause be amended so as to read, "and national banks may reduce their stock and withdraw their bonds," for this reason: it may not be considered that the simple withdrawal of the bonds and the reduction of their circulation is a reduction of their stock. They are taxed by the States on the amount of their stock. I simply desire to make the bill explicit on that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator propose an amendment?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir; I suggest that as an amendment. I suppose there is no objection to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see any objection; but this bill follows the language of the present law, and only authorizes the banks to withdraw their bonds upon depositing United States legal-tender notes instead of their own circulating notes. The amendment now offered would change somewhat the existing law. I do not know that there is any objection to it; but they might have the right in that way to reduce their stock below the minimum provided by law. The bill does not affect the question of valuation, because the taxation is not on the stock, but on the value of the stock.

Mr. MORTON. So far as the States are concerned, the taxation is on the amount of the stock, and hence when the banks withdraw their circulation and bonds, they ought to be allowed to reduce the nominal amount of their stock in the same way, so as not to be taxed on a thing that only exists in idea.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was in line 13, after the word "may" to insert the words "reduce their stock and;" so that the clause will read: "and national banks may reduce their stock and withdraw their bonds on deposit," &c.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I trust this measure will not pass the Senate hastily and without due consideration. Here is a proposition, indefinite, to create a large number of small banks without circulation, banks entirely of deposit. Where comes the power in the Congress of the United States to charter in this wholesale manner institutions for banking, totally disconnected with your currency? You have the power to coin money, and under that have declared that you found the power to stamp paper; but where is your power under the Constitution to be chartering wholesale a class of banks for deposit merely?

I am not an admirer or friend of the present banking system of this country. I do not think it is wise that it should be further extended. Already the country has been placed under the control of a central power, through its finances, which has worked most unhappily, and which I think the people of this country are disposed rather to withdraw from the Government than to permit to be encouraged and increased. It is far better that we should be allowed to go back to the great principle in finance, as in all other questions of government, of letting the people of the locality, through the exercise of local self-government, remedy the evils under which they suffer by the light of their own experience. I had much rather see the tax upon the State issues removed and the facilities for banking given by those local institutions restored. I trust that before this session closes some such proposition may be favorably considered by Congress. But I do not desire to see this wholesale creation of a class of small banks, under what may at least be termed a very doubtful exercise of power by Congress. I trust that this measure will be allowed time for a greater discussion, and that it may not now be pressed to a vote, although the Comptroller of the Currency may have an idea in his mind of granting some relief to banks whose capital is engaged to a greater extent than they desire under the present national banking system. I believe we already have legislation which enables them to withdraw their bonds. Is not that the fact?

Mr. SHERMAN. I stated before—perhaps the Senator from Delaware was not in the Chamber—that there is a provision in the twenty-sixth section of the banking act by which a bank can reduce its circulating notes and withdraw its bonds; but it must do it by surrending its own circulating notes; and in practice, from the wide circulation of these notes, it is found impossible for a bank to collect together, say, $10,000 of its own circulating notes. I doubt very much whether it would be possible for a bank having a circulation of $100,000 to collect together in one year $10,000 of its own notes, because neither banks nor brokers will assort them. The only way they can get their own notes back in order to return them to be canceled is by paying a considerable premium for them. In fact, some banks that have desired to withdraw their own circulating notes have found it impossible to do so, and the premium has gone up to 5 per cent. This bill simply authorizes the surrender of an equal amount of legal-tender notes instead of their own circulating notes. As a matter of course, it does not vary the amount of circulation among the people. It simply authorizes the surrender of legal-tender notes to the same amount as there is outstanding of the circulating notes.

Mr. BAYARD. That leaves the national currency outstanding; and I do not understand that this bill provides any new machinery for getting back the circulation of a bank other than is now provided by law. It simply provides for the return of the bonds which they have deposited, on their paying in legal-tender notes instead of national currency; but the full amount is still outstanding in circulation.

Mr. MORTON. Where is the difference to the Government in that case?

Mr. BAYARD. The difference to the Government is nothing; but the Government still remains the sponsor for the circulation outstanding.

Mr. MORTON. It has got the $10,000.

Mr. BAYARD. I admit that it has been paid in its own notes, legal tenders; but this bill provides no machinery for enabling a bank that desires to retire in some degree from its business to get in the circulation delivered to it under the act of Congress, and which has been issued upon the basis of its bonds.

Mr. President, I am not prepared at this time to give my views, nor is the Senate in a condition in its fullness to hear my views on this subject—which is a very broad subject—of the national banking system. I only wish to state my opposition to the further increase of the national bank system. I wish to see another system restored—not too hastily, not by breaking away from the habits, the rights, the duties, and the obligations that have gradually grown up with the present system; but I desire to see a currency which is to be the localized currency; which will stay near the point of its issue by being discredited when it gets far from it. I desire to see some such currency restored, for the benefit of the rural sections of this country, and not as now; when currency leaves the counter of the bank, it flows off in a rapid current to the money centers of the country, whence it is only to be returned by the payment of a premium. The question is a broad one. I feel that I am discussing it, not with want of respect, but with want of that preparation which is due to it; and I can but express the hope that this bill will not hastily become a law. There is no need for it before the holidays. Let it be considered more fully than it has been yet. It came, I think, but yesterday from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE. I rise to ask a question of the Senator from Ohio. I understood him to say that the bills of banks which have thus retired command a premium of 5 per cent. I ask what is the advantage of that class of paper which enables it to command that premium?

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said that sometimes where banks were desirous of retiring their own circulation, and winding up, in order to get it in, in order to induce bankers and brokers to sort out their particular bills from the great mass of circulation, they had to pay as high as 5 per cent. premium, simply because it is so inconvenient, practically, for a person to sort out the bills of a particular bank. They are so much alike that it would take an expert a very long time to sort out a small amount of the bills of a particular bank. If any bank in the United States should seek to retire its circulation, it could only do it by employing brokers to sort out from all the national banks bills that come into their possession, the bills of their particular bank. In that way, possibly, they could get possession of them and retire them.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator does not mean that it requires an expert to distinguish between the bills of one national bank and those of another?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; but I say if you attempt to select the bills of one bank out of the bills of the 1,600 or 2,000 banks now, you would only get one bill out of a package of 2,000 bills. That would be a very slow process, and the broker, or anybody who undertook to do it, would have to be paid for it.

Mr. HOWE. But would the broker charge for that simple service a commisssion as high as 5 per cent?

Mr. SHERMAN. Sometimes as high as 5 per cent. I have often seen advertisements in the public prints from banks going out of circulation, winding up, and seeking to return their own notes, offering 2, 3, and 4 per cent. to get their bills back, so that they might surrender them.

Mr. HOWE. Offered by the bank?

Mr. SHERMAN. Offered by the bank itself.

Mr. MORTON. To get its own notes back. The banks cannot get them hunted up in any other way.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a very common thing.

Mr. HOWE. I do not understand how it would be worth a premium of 5 per cent. to collect them. It rather occurred to me that they commanded that premium in the market because they were so desirable as the basis of new bank circulation.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is true to some extent, but in many cases where banks desire to retire their own circulation they would have to pay a premium to get it back.

Mr. HOWE. But when it is retired, it is at the disposal of other banks; other banks can have it. I can understand how parties wishing to organize a new bank and obtain circulation for it might pay a very high premium, inasmuch as the business of national banking now is confined to a limited number of banks.

Mr. SHERMAN. The whole question is this: These banks have their notes outstanding. They desire, as they have a right to do under the law, to reduce their circulation. They find it very difficult or very expensive for them to get back their identical bills. They say to the Government of the United States, "We desire to diminish our circulation and receive back a certain quantity of our bonds; we will pay into the Treasury of the United States an equal amount of lawful tender money, in which these bank notes are redeemable." Now, what objection can there be to that?

Mr. HOWE. I am not objecting to that at all, Mr. President, but I am objecting to the feature of the banking system which makes it a monopoly, confines it to a limited number of parties, and makes really the notes of a closed bank—a failed bank, if you please, a broken bank, if you please—worth a premium in the market above United States notes. It seems to me the Legislature could contrive some way of retiring this circulation, because it stands in the way of legitimate banking enterprise, evidently.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not draw in all the questions that relate to the banking system in the consideration of this bill. This bill is confined to two simple propositions. There are many things in the banking law that I do not exactly like, and I hope that during the present session, since public attention is called to the subject, we may reform them; and this thing of limiting the bank circulation by a rigid, inflexible rule is one of them. But that is not the question now before us at all. And so with the question raised by my friend from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] He says there is a doubt about the constitutional power of Congress to authorize banks without circulation in the States. It is hardly worth while to raise that question, because it has been done under the national banking act. Anybody has a right to start a bank without circulation, under the law as it stands. That law has not been questioned in the courts, and there are several leading banks in the United States now that have no circulating notes and are transacting business daily under the working of the currency act. If the Senator desires to raise the constitutional question, it ought to be raised in connection with existing organizations.

The only effect of this bill is to diminish the minimum of bonds filed in the Treasury to procure an authority to start a bank of this kind. Now, Mr. President, what a great advantage it would be to the people of the United States if all the bankers and brokers of this country, who are receiving deposits from the people, could be placed under the restrictions of the national banking act? The advantage would be enormous; and if I could, by any power that I possess, compel every broker in the United States, every person who sets himself up to receive the deposits of the people under the name of a savings-bank, or any other kind of bank, to come under the restrictions of that act, I would certainly do so. The national bank act confers no privileges except circulation, and if, now, all brokers, bankers, and saving-fund banks were compelled to come under the restrictions of that act, we should have ample information as to the amount of their deposits, the security of their deposits, and all of them would be required, to some extent, to secure their deposits, first by a reserve, and next by the deposit of bonds. In that way we should have information, given to us in an official shape, which would enable us to know how much deposits are in these banks.

The singular fact was made known to us by the report of the Comptroller, and, indeed, it was known before, that there is more money deposited in the deposit banks, savings-banks as they are called, in the New England States than in all the national banks; and it is utterly impossible, with the strictest scrutiny that the Comptroller can exercise, for him to find out how much money has been deposited with savings-banks alone in any State of the Union outside of the New England States and the State of New York. He sent letters to the governors of all the different States, but was unable to find out the amount of money deposited in the savings-banks throughout the United States. Now, how important it would be to have this information. If all the banks, brokers' shops, and savings institutions were compelled to organize under the national law, I can see a very great advantage to be derived from it, a great good, and no possible evil, because the banking law confers upon these institutions no authority whatever which they have not the right to possess as simply private citizens. A national bank started under this act, without circulation, has no right conferred upon it whatever, except to be called a national bank, that any private citizen of the United States may not exercise at this moment.

Mr. HOWE. Do I understand, then, that this organization as national banks is sought so eagerly to secure the privilege of reporting the amount of their deposits?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it is sought to secure the name and authority of a national bank organization, because a national bank is known to be surrounded by such restraints, and to be required to make such reports, and to give such information, and to file such securities, that it has a popular credit, which it gains from the very existence of these restrictions, that a private bank has not. Therefore, many of the leading bankers of the United States do voluntarily come under the restrictions of this act, and do comply with the terms of the act, merely to obtain that reputation.

Mr. HOWE. What are these restrictions that they come under?

Mr. SHERMAN. They have to maintain a reserve of 25 per cent. in the leading cities, and of 15 per cent. in the interior cities of the country.

Mr. HOWE. Twenty-five per cent. on what?

Mr. SHERMAN. On the amount of their deposits and circulation. A bank starting in any large city under this law has to maintain a reserve of 25 per cent. of its deposits and circulation, and now there are a thousand banks in the country that have not got a reserve of five per cent., organized under State law.

Mr. HOWE. Then I understand the two privileges that this class of bankers covet are, first, the privilege of making reports to the Treasury of the amount of their deposits; and, secondly, the privilege of keeping a reserve of 25 or 15 per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator does not state it fairly. They will assume the burden of doing those things for the privilege of the credit they will derive from the name of a national bank. A national banking organization, known to be under these restrictions, has credit, and can obtain deposits that it could not obtain ordinarily except by complying with the conditions of this law.

Mr. HOWE. All I have to say is, that I should think they were paying all that that credit would be worth.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I think it was the expectation of at least a portion of the Committee on Finance, when this bill was reported, that it would not be taken up for early action; and unless there be some urgent necessity in the existing state of affairs calling for early action on this bill, I would venture to express the hope that it may not be acted on at once. I had not looked so fully at the bill with reference to the last clause as I have done since it has been under consideration, and I find one objection, which I will here state, to it, that may perhaps be worthy of consideration. It authorizes national banks upon deposits for their circulating notes in amounts of $10,000, or on returning to the Comptroller of the Currency lawful money to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States. It is not confined to one deposit of $10,000; but successive deposits may go on until they have deposited legal-tender notes to the full amount of their entire circulation. I find an objection to that, for the reason that if there is to be any change in the character of our currency I would rather have it the other way, and instead of retiring all the legal-tender notes and keeping out all the national-bank notes, I would prefer that we should have more of the legal-tender notes and less of the national-bank notes; and while we have the two existing I am not willing to adopt any policy by which the amount of legal-tender notes in circulation will be made largely below the amount of national currency authorized. They ought to be as nearly together as possible; and being now one at $354,000,000 and the other at $356,000,000, I think the policy embodied in the last clause of the bill, whatever may be said about the first part of it authorizing the establishment of deposit banks, is very questionable.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I should like to ask my colleague on the committee if the tendency of this bill will not be to reduce the number of national issuing banks, and thus relieve many banks of the burden of issue and redemption? Will not this be right in the line of the policy suggested by the Senator, by retiring the national circulation and in its place putting the legal-tenders issued directly by the Government?

Mr. SCOTT. Well, Mr. President, I am not sure that the national banks consider their circulation a burden. The privilege of drawing interest on their bonds and putting out their circulation also upon discounted bills I do not think they consider very much of a burden; and so far as that is concerned I am not sure that the establishment of banks of deposit would have a tendency to diminish banks of issue.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I merely wish to say in this connection that I have received letters from bankers stating that they would be very glad to surrender the circulation in order to be relieved of the burden of redemption; not the burden of the interest which they receive on the bonds deposited for the security of circulation; that could possibly be no burden; but, taken as a whole, they would prefer to surrender their circulation, draw back their bonds, hold their interest, and be relieved from the apprehensions growing out of redemption.

Mr. SCOTT. Be that as it may, there are other things to be considered, and which I had hoped we should have time to consider, before this bill was urged.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to ask the Senator a question. If my memory serves me correctly in regard to the law—I have not time now to look for it—if a bank desires to wind up entirely, to go into liquidation, it may do so by depositing with the Secretary of the Treasury an amount of legal-tender notes equal to its circulation; but if it only desires to retire a part of its circulation, it has not that privilege, but must produce its own notes; so that there is an inconsistency in the law. If a particular bank wants to go out of existence altogether, it may do so by paying into the Treasury an amount of legal-tender notes equal to its circulation; but if it desires to reduce its circulation one-fourth, it must furnish its own notes, and perhaps it cannot procure them. So there is an inconsistency in the law. It seems to me there ought to be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. In answer to the Senator from Indiana, I would state that, while that is the provision, that legal-tender notes may be deposited by a bank desiring to go entirely out of existence, those notes may be reissued. My recollection of the banking law is, that the provision is express that they may be reissued; but here—and that was the point I wished to call attention to when I was diverted by the question of the Senator from Michigan—here is a provision making a special deposit of these notes to the amount of $10,000; and, unless the general law will cover it, I doubt whether under this bill the notes thus deposited can be reissued, for they are put there in place of the bonds which are made a specific deposit for the redemption of the national currency. The chairman suggests that they may be reissued. While there is a doubt about that, I trust the bill will be deferred until the question of whether they can be reissued or not can be provided for, if it is doubtful.

I rose, Mr. President, more to suggest that I thought it was the anticipation of a portion of the committee that action upon this bill should not be hastened, and that we should have time to look at it, in view of the probable modification of the whole national banking system at this session.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Delaware to say that he desired to look further into this subject and to give the Senate his views. I hope that we shall all award him that privilege, and that the vote may not be taken on this bill now. I think that it is a very bad system of legislation on this subject to be acting by piecemeal. Here is a bill which, if I understand it, authorizes an unlimited number of national banks. Anybody who can raise $10,000 can have a national bank. You can have one at every corner grocery, and bring the whole name of national bank into disrepute. It is true they have no issue, and so it does not produce any inflation; but I want to hear this subject discussed, and see what particular benefit there is to the community and to the Government in having these banks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to correct my friend in regard to the operation of this bill. It does not diminish the amount of capital required to establish a national bank. It does not change in any degree any provision of the act, except simply that it authorizes a bank without circulation to deposit with the Treasury of the United States $10,000 in legal-tender notes. It does not change the provision of law as to the amount of capital required, and so on. I have no objection at all to the wish of Senators to have further time to consider the bill. I called it up at the request of another Senator, who was very anxious to secure its passage.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that the amount of circulation which the Government is authorized now to put forth does limit the number of banks; but the provision of this bill is, that banks without circulation may be organized under the provisions of the banking law; and therefore there is, as I see, no restriction as to the number of these banks that may be organized, the only restriction in the original law being the amount of circulation.

Mr. DAVIS. I should be glad to have the attention of the Senator from Ohio for a moment. I understand that national-bank notes are signed by the cashier and the president of the bank issuing them. I understand further that the present bill allows any national-bank notes to be presented at the Treasury, in amounts of $10,000, and the bonds deposited as security for them to be withdrawn. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SHERMAN. The present law authorizes a bank to surrender any portion of its circulating notes and lift a certain amount of its bonds.

Mr. DAVIS. But I understand the bill now under discussion allows the notes of any circulating national bank to be presented—not its own necessarily.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. It must bring notes of the United States—legal-tender money.

Mr. DAVIS. That is the same in effect. The notes of the national bank are still out. That bank must be still liable for them. When the day of redemption comes who is to redeem those notes? The notes of a national bank are presented for redemption; it had $50,000, perhaps, out, and redeems $40,000 of them. Who is to redeem the notes outstanding of that national bank?

A word further as to the reserve. The reserve now of the country banks, as we call them, is 15 per cent. Fifteen per cent. of their deposits and of their circulation, called their reserve, must be kept, either at home or elsewhere. In the cities where there is redemption it is 25 per cent. Now, if a bank has taken up its bonds, it still has its circulation out. How about holding the reserve? Is there not a difficulty there; because the circulation of that bank is still out, and it is presented, perhaps, in a bunch for redemption, when we come to redeem in gold or greenbacks?

It appears to me that there are difficulties in the way. If the bank was required to present its own notes, then, of course, the main difficulty would be remedied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.]

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, I hope this question will be postponed. The whole subject of the reorganization or reconstruction of the banking system must necessarily come up at this session, and I should regret very much, coming from the portion of country I do, to see anything done here hastily which would in any way prevent the banking system from being adapted to the country in a wider sense than it is now. I have read this bill with some care, and, although I do not propose at this moment to mention any objections to it specifically, I would much prefer that that particular branch of the subject should be made a part of a whole system of free banking; that the whole question should come before the mind of the Senate as one system; for we must certainly very much modify the arrangements now existing.

I am one of those who believe that the whole trouble of the country at this time grows out of a vicious banking system. I know that my State, and I may say the section of country whence I come, is suffering enormously for the want of money—and there is no money excepting legal-tender notes and national bank notes. The national banking system has an existence of so limited a character, that we are deprived in the West of all the benefits of it.

I would be happy indeed if this matter were postponed until a time when the whole subject of the reconstruction of the national banking system shall come before the mind of the Senate. I am not prepared to act on it at this time.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, to show that the clause of the bill which has been referred to is merely intended to correct a defect or inconsistency in the law, I will read the present law:

That every bank that has heretofore gone into liquidation under the provisions of section 42 of the national currency act, shall be required to deposit lawful money of the United States for its outstanding circulation within sixty days from the date of the passage of this act; and every bank that may hereafter go into liquidation shall be required to deposit lawful money of the United States for its outstanding circulation within six months from the date of the vote to go into liquidation.

Now, a bank desiring to wind up entirely need not return one of its own notes, but may deposit the whole amount of its circulation in legal tenders and wind up. But if it wants to reduce its circulation one-fourth, then it must produce its own notes. There is a distinction without any reason at all. It, perhaps, is impossible for a bank to secure one-fourth of its own circulation; it is scattered all over the country; and why not allow a bank desiring to retire one-fourth of its circulation to do it by depositing that amount of lawful money, when, if it desires to retire the whole circulation, it may do so by depositing that amount of lawful money?

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYARD. As the entire circulation of the bank, is out and as there is no ear-mark on the notes to signify which portion of them shall have been redeemed by $10,000 of legal tender, how is the holder of those notes presenting them for redemption and prepared to insist on his remedy of compulsory redemption under the general act of Congress—how by this bill will he be able to say whether the bank has redeemed the particular note he held by the deposit of money, or whether the redemption applies to another and equal amount of notes which are still in circulation? A bank, in other words, which is called upon to redeem under the general compulsory act by paying greenbacks over its counter when the demand shall be made upon it, will answer, for instance: "I have redeemed this note of yours by paying into the Treasury $10,000 of lawful money, and have received my bonds! I have contracted my circulation so much." How can that answer be met? There is no ear-mark on the currency; there is nothing to show that the $10,000 paid in was paid in as security against the identical notes then presented.

Mr. MORTON. It seems to me that would be wholly unimportant. If the bank retires one-fourth of its circulation by depositing an equal amount of legal tenders in the Treasury of the United States, the Treasury of the United States gets that much money in advance. If the bank is called upon to redeem its circulation in the ordinary way under the law, it must go on redeeming until it has redeemed 75 per cent. If notes after 75 per cent. have been redeemed are presented, then it may say, "the Government of the United States itself has assumed the redemption of the balance." If the bank retires all its circulation, as it may do by depositing legal-tender notes, then when the first of its notes are presented, it may say, "We have made an arrangement that the Government shall take up all these notes and the holder is referred to the Treasury of the United States." There is no particular note that is to be paid at one place or any particular note to be paid in the other.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator will allow me. The Senator asked the question what is the difference—why not throw the three-fourths away as well as the whole? I answer that when a bank retires entirely, there is but one place for the holder of its notes to go, and that is the Treasury of the United States. Where there is a bank with one-fourth of its circulation out, there are two places to go.

Mr. MORTON. I would ask the Senator what particular bill is to be redeemed. The Government receives pay for one-fourth of this circulation. It is bound to provide for that itself. The bank is still liable for 75 per cent., and it is bound under the law to go on redeeming until it has redeemed the 75 per cent. So there can be no importance whatever attached to that distinction.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The suggestion of the Senator from Delaware is a very proper one. When one-quarter of the circulation is redeemed out of the public Treasury, the question comes—and he puts it very well—how can the bank distinguish between the bills which the Treasury ought to redeem and those which it ought to redeem itself? It would be for the interest of the bank to see that the Treasury redeemed its full 25 per cent. Therefore it would be for the interest of the bank to redeem the bills as they were presented, and send them forward to the Treasury for redemption.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, this bill contains three distinct propositions which have no necessary connection with each other. They may be considered as wholly independent, and one adopted and another rejected according to their respective merits. The first proposition of the bill is to authorize without limitation the organization of any number of national banks without the privilege of issuing a circulation, and it requires of them a security of $10,000 in registered bonds, which, I suppose, is a security for their deposits. That is the first proposition, and it is wholly independent of what follows.

The next proposition is that national banks already organized without circulation, are authorized to withdraw their bonds in excess of $10,000. That is simply a proposition to allow them to reduce the security for their depositors which now exists, down to the sum of $10,000.

Then comes the third proposition, which is that national banks may withdraw their bonds on deposit as security for their circulating notes, in amounts of $10,000, upon returning to the Comptroller of the Currency lawful money to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States for the redemption of an amount of circulating notes of such bank equal to the amount issued on such bonds. That, if I understand my colleague correctly, is simply a provision to allow them to retire their bonds upon the return of legal-tender notes, instead of upon a return of their own notes.

It is obvious, then, that these three propositions are distinct; there is no necessary connection between them; and, although they may all relate to one general subject, there is no reason why they should all be in one section of a short bill like this.

In regard to the first proposition, I have heard no answer to the suggestion of my friend from Delaware; and that is where is the power in the Constitution of the United States granted to Congress to charter banks that have no connection whatever with the currency, with the circulation of the country; and if there were that power, where is the good policy in entering upon any such field? If you are to charter all the men who deal in money in the United States, by a national charter, all the men who receive deposits, buy and sell exchange, discount notes, and do all that bankers do except issue currency, why not upon the same principle pass a national manufacturing incorporation act, supersede the various acts of the States in regard to manufacturing corporations, and provide that they shall be chartered under national authority? And when you have done that, why not go into every other branch of industry or of business in the country in the same way? What particular reason is there for selecting out dealers in money and in exchange, a business that is now carried on very largely indeed, if not to one full moiety of its extent, by private individuals under individual responsibility? What is the reason for selecting that particular industry or business, and making it the subject of congressional legislation, and placing those who exercise it under the necessity of obtaining congressional charters or inviting them to obtain congressional charters?

It seems to me that this is a very grave question, and one that we ought to consider. I want in the first place to know, better than I now know, where is the authority for it. I have not heard any one suggest anything but that there is some such provision in the banking law now. That is no answer. If Congress has assumed but a few years ago in the enactment of the banking law the exercise of such a power as this, it is quite too recent an assumption of power for any one to say that it is settled by the practice of the Government, that stare decisis applies to the question.

I hope, therefore, that this bill may go over, in order that there may be more time to consider it. It seems to me that it is a large subject. It also seems to me, in regard to the third provision, relative to withdrawing bonds and substituting legal tenders for them, that there is something more necessary in order to meet the objections suggested by the Senator from West Virginia, and also by the Senator from Delaware. It may be that there is not; it may be that upon a more careful consideration it will be found that there is not; but that is the way it strikes me now. I therefore, without arguing this matter any further, or attempting to argue it, in fact, or expressing any decided opinion of the merits of this bill, express the hope that it may not be acted upon to-day, but may go over.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate on this bill more than a few minutes longer. I have no objection that the bill shall lie over until every Senator has had an opportunity to examine it. Indeed, I called it up to-day with some hesitation, stating before I did so that we could not have any bill mentioning the name of a national bank brought before the Senate, however simple might be the proposition, but that every question connected with the currency, the banking act, and all the multiplied forms of financial propositions presented to us, would be discussed.

Now this bill, on the face of it, which was passed by the Senate at the last session of Congress, makes very slight changes in the existing law. The first clause, which my colleague and my friend from Delaware find it so difficult to vote for, only differs from the present law in one respect. By the present law no national bank can be started except with a capital of $100,000, paid up in a certain way, unless it be in a city of less than 6,000 inhabitants, when it may have a capital of $50,000. That is the law organizing national banks, and it is not changed in the slightest degree by this bill. But under the sixteenth section of the law as it now is, a bank may be started, without circulation, with a capital of $100,000. The purpose was, when the banking act was passed, to induce the banks to invest a portion of their capital stock in Government securities. When the banking act was passed the great object we had in view was to induce capitalists to loan money to the United States; to invest their capital, or a portion of their capital, in Government bonds; and, therefore, we required of a bank that had nothing from us except a simple name and organization to put one-third of its capital stock in our bonds; and in every case every national bank must buy at least $30,000 of bonds of the United States, in which, to that extent, it has to invest its capital.

That was the motive, the object, one of the inducements, of passing the national bank act—to compel the national banks, before they could avail themselves of the privileges and benefits of the law, to invest in our bonds. That necessity has passed away. We do not care now who buys our national bonds. Our credit is so good that we do not have to induce anybody by any provisions of law to buy our bonds. Our bonds are bought in all the nations of the earth. Hence, if the same object can be accomplished—if a good object can be accomplished—by reducing this restriction, so that a national bank, instead of investing capital in our bonds, may invest it in bills receivable in the neighborhood where the bank is located, and may in that way increase its power to loan to the people of the neighborhood, it is wise and good policy to remove that restriction. The reason of it has disappeared. There is now no occasion for requiring a bank starting without circulation to invest $30,000 of its capital in our bonds, because we do not care whether they do or not. We would rather now that they should loan that money in the community where the bank is located than invest it in our bonds. There is no longer an object in the Government seeking purchasers for its bonds. The only effect of this first clause—there is nothing more or less of it—is simply to reduce the amount which a national bank is required to invest in the bonds of the United States. The minimum under the old law was $30,000. The minimum under this proposed bill is $10,000. That is the whole provision; and yet my colleague and my friend from Delaware see in this something which involves the whole constitutional power of Congress to pass a banking bill, or a manufacturing bill, and all that sort of thing. Sir, there is nothing of that in it. It is simply a modification of an existing law.

Now, in regard to the next provision, I believe there has been no exception taken to that; but the third provision my friend from West Virginia, who is a practical banker, sees trouble about. Now, suppose a national bank, being somewhat pressed, finding itself somewhat involved, desires to wind up its business; suppose it is organized in a community where the business has faded away, and where less banking capital is required; or that, for any of the multiplied reasons that we may imagine would induce a bank to desire to reduce its circulation, it wishes to do so. The present banking law provides for that. It provides that a bank may go out of existence and deposit legal money of the United States to the amount of its circulating notes, and there is the end of it. It provides next that any bank may reduce its circulation by the amount of $10,000 at a time; and, doing it, it must surrender its notes and lift its bonds. When the banking act was passed, it was supposed these bank notes could be easily had at any time. No one dreamed then of the wide diffusion, the universal credit of this paper money—that it would be so extended that the banks would not be able to get back their notes. Here is a provision of the law that is practically nugatory. Then, instead of surrendering their circulating notes, which we are bound to redeem, which are in effect and in law our notes, we say they may surrender lawful money of the United States to the amount of 10 per cent. of their capital, $10,000; and we undertake to redeem the outstanding circulating notes, when presented, with this lawful money of the United States, or with some other money that may be in the Treasury. Is there anything strange or out of the way in that?

My friend from West Virginia says there is a practical difficulty, and he asks how can the United States tell which notes it will be bound to redeem. Why, sir, it is bound to redeem the first of the notes of that bank that are presented at the counter of the Treasury of the United States. When the redemption of these bank notes begins to be called for, and when the notes begin to flow in for redemption, $10,000 of them are to be redeemed at the Treasury of the United States—the first $10,000 of those that are presented. An account is opened with the particular bank. It appears that this bank has to its credit $10,000, and the United States undertakes to redeem $10,000 of its notes. The first presented will be redeemed. The bank itself may present them. This identical bank may present its notes at any time, and to the extent of the $10,000 deposited the United States is bound to redeem those notes, and that is the end of it. If they are presented at the counter of the bank, the bank is bound to redeem. It is true that to this extent there is a double liability; but that double liability now exists. The United States is bound to pay every dollar of the national bank notes now outstanding. The United States Government, therefore, assumes no new liability. Perhaps the bank assumes the terrible liability of being responsible that the United States will redeem this $10,000 outstanding, but that is all the liability it assumes.

Mr. THURMAN. But now the Government is only bound secondarily.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know the Government is only bound secondarily; but it holds in its vaults bonds of the United States in the first place, and then for this particular $10,000 it holds in its hands the actual money of the United States and becomes liable primarily.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The bonds of the United States always bring par in this country now, and the greenbacks they may return are below par. Would it not be, therefore, an advantage given to these banks by allowing them to exchange greenbacks, which are below par, below gold and silver, and take up bonds that are at par value?

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend from Delaware must know that these very notes are now redeemable in legal-tender notes, and the holder of a legal-tender note has no right to demand more than a United States note. That is the answer to it. There is no increased liability.

I simply have taken a little time to explain this bill more fully than I did in the first instance, to show Senators how easy it is to get up a debate on a little proposition of this kind, extending to a great variety of topics not embraced in it. Now, so far as this particular bill is concerned, in ordinary times it would pass without comment. There is no objection to it, in my judgment. The Comptroller of the Currency has two or three times recommended it, with the sanction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senate passed the same bill at the last session. It is now pending and will probably pass the other House. It simply modifies in two unimportant particulars two provisions of the banking act which have become somewhat burdensome in practice. That is all there is of it; but, as a matter of course, I have no objection to its going over. The bill is sent to me, with the letter I have already read, by the Comptroller, and Senators around me desired to have it passed to relieve cases that have been brought to their attention. I will probably call it up at an early day, and hope then this debate may be remembered so that I shall not have to go over the ground again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill had better just lie on the table for the present. I have no objection to the amendment being adopted first, however.

Mr. MORTON. The amendment is a verbal one.

Mr. SHERMAN. Senators around me say I had better not move to lay it on the table. If any one desires to speak further, I do not wish to cut any one off.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after one hour and thirty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at three o'clock and fifty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 11, 1873.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. WOOD. I desire to have a correction made in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday. In the report of some remarks I made on Tuesday, I am made to say that of the $44,000,000 held in reserve by the Secretary of the Treasury he had been obliged to use $33,000,000. What I did say was that he had been obliged to take $13,000,000, not $33,000,000.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I call for the regular order.

G. W. STANDEFER.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the indulgence of the House for one moment while I invite attention to an error in the enrollment of a bill passed on the 1st day of March, 1872, for the relief of G. W. Standefer. That bill was passed by both Houses and became a law; but by an error in the enrollment it appears on the statute-book in the name of P. W. Standifer. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution for the purpose of correcting the error.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman to put the proposition in the form of a bill instead of a joint resolution.

Mr. MAYNARD. That will suit me just as well. But I thought the case an eminently proper one for a joint resolution.

Mr. DAWES. It would be, under the old usage.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will ask the Clerk to change the joint resolution to a bill.

There being no objection,

Mr. MAYNARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 482) to correct the enrollment of an act entitled "An act for the relief of P. W. Standefer;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that the act mentioned in the title be amended by striking out from the body of the act and from the title the name of P. W. Standefer and inserting the name of G. W. Standefer.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will have the original act itself read at the desk.

Mr. MAYNARD. Here is the bill as it passed the House under the certificate of the Clerk of the House, and I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act for the relief of G. W. Standefer.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officer of the United States be authorized and directed to audit and allow the claim of G. W. Standefer, for services rendered as a telegraph operator by direction of the military authorities of the United States in the war of the rebellion, for a period not exceeding six months, at the rate of one hundred dollars per month, and that the same be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That it shall be satisfactorily proven that such services were actually rendered.

Passed the House of Representatives March 1, 1872.

Attest: EDWARD McPHERSON, Clerk.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now ask that the act be read as it appears upon the statute-book.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose it is the same as the act just read, with the exception of the name.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is the same, except upon the statute-book it is P. W. Standefer, when the real name is G. W. Standefer.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act for the relief of P. W. Standefer.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officer of the United States be authorized and directed to audit and allow the claim of P. W. Standefer, for services rendered as telegraph operator by direction of the military authorities of the United States in the war of the rebellion, for a period not exceeding six months, at the rate of one hundred dollars per month, and that the same be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That it shall be satisfactorily proven that such services were actually rendered.

Approved March 3, 1873.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now move that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE REFUND OF DUTIES.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform this House as to the amount of money refunded since March 4, 1873, on account of customs duty and internal taxes previously paid into the Treasury, the names of the persons to whom paid, and the amount to each respectively, and upon what articles the said refund was made, together with a recital of the reasons for said payment and the laws under which the same was made.

Mr. DAWES. That resolution should go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that, but will only ask that the committee shall have leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. That will be the understanding.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, with leave to report at any time.

EXPATRIATION.

Mr. E. R. HOAR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session, together with the accompanying documents, as relate to expatriation, the election of nationality, and the status of American women married to foreigners, and of children born of American parents residing abroad, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MICHIGAN AND WABASH SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. ORTH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Railways and Canals be directed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for a survey to ascertain the practicability of constructing a ship-canal connecting the waters of Lake Michigan with the Wabash River at or near the mouth of the Tippecanoe River.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS, ETC.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution to go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The SPEAKER. There is no such committee in the House.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Then I make it the Committee on Elections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be, and are hereby, instructed to examine and report, at as early a day as practicable, upon the most practicable method of electing the President and Vice-President, and providing a tribunal to adjust and decide all contested questions therein.

The resolution was adopted.

IMPROVEMENT OF HINGHAM HARBOR.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to cause an examination or survey of the harbor of Hingham, in Massachusetts, with a view to the removal of sunken wrecks and other obstructions to navigation, so as to afford greater protection to steamboat navigation therein; and that he report upon the feasibility of making such improvements, and the probable cost thereof, to the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Very well.

The resolution was so referred.

POSTAL SAVINGS-BANKS, ETC.

Mr. BECK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, directed to inform Congress how many employés of all grades it will require to carry on the postal savings institution in the United States and Territories, as recommended by him in his report; and that he furnish like information as to the postal telegraph system which he recommends, when the same is in full operation.

Mr. BECK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the resolution to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of the General Land-Office be requested, as early as practicable, to inform this House as to the number of acres of land within the limits of the State of Missouri now unsold and belonging to the United States.

Second. The number of acres of the sixteenth-section or school lands that have been set apart within said State for school purposes.

Third. The number of acres within said sixteenth-section or school lands that have not been appropriated to school purposes, or which have been lost to the schools by paramount title of New Madrid claim, Spanish or French grant, or otherwise.

Fourth. The entire number of acres of land within the territorial limits of the State of Missouri.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that that resolution be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] and of other gentlemen, to this: the direction in this instance should be to the Secretary of the Interior, and not to his subordinate officer. The House deals with heads of Departments. The Commissioner of the Land-Office is a subordinate officer. The Chair will direct that change to be made. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has suggested that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands for examination. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been demanded, the morning hour begins at eighteen minutes past twelve o'clock, and reports are still in order from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There was no further report from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

EDUCATION OF THE PEOPLE.

Mr. G. F. HOAR, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 477) to establish an educational fund, and to apply the proceeds of the public lands to the education of the people.

The bill was read. It provides in the first section that the net proceeds of the public lands are forever consecrated and set apart for the education of the people, provided that the act shall not have any effect to repeal, impair, or suspend any law now authorizing the preemption of public lands, or the entry of public lands for homesteads; nor as limiting in any manner the power of Congress to alter or extend the right of homestead upon such lands; and provided, further, that nothing contained in the section shall be held to limit or abridge the power of Congress over the public domain, or interfere with granting bounty lands to the soldiers and sailors of our late war.

The second section provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause an account to be taken upon the close of each fiscal year, and ascertain the total receipts from the sale or other disposition of the public lands of the United States, including all fees received at the general and district land-offices during such year, and the amount of expenditures during said year incurred or occasioned by the survey, sale, location, entry, or other disposition of such lands, including appropriations for the expenses of the said offices for said year, and shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of the net cash proceeds from the sale, entry, location, or other disposition of such lands, after deducting such expenses and expenditures.

The third section provides that upon the receipt of the certificate the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause one-half the amount so certified to be invested in bonds of the United States, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, which said amount so invested shall constitute a perpetual fund in the Treasury of the United States, to be known as the national educational fund; and the Secretary of the Treasury, on or before the 31st day of July of each year, shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Education the amount so paid into the Treasury to the credit of the educational fund, the amount of said educational fund, and the amount of interest due thereon at the close of the fiscal year last preceding such certificate.

The fourth section provides that upon the receipt of the certificate of the Secretary of the Treasury, as provided by section 3, the Commissioner of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall proceed to apportion, to the several States and Territories and to the District of Columbia, upon the basis of population of the said States and Territories between the ages of four and twenty-one years, one-half of the net proceeds of the public lands for the previous year, together with the whole amount of the income of the said educational fund so certified, such apportionment to be according to the last preceding general census of the United States; provided that for the first five years the distribution of the said fund to and among the several States and Territories, including the District of Columbia, shall be made according to the numbers of their respectivepopulation of ten years old and upward who cannot write, as shown, from time to time, by the last preceding census published of the United States.

The fifth section provides that each of the States and Territories and said District shall be entitled to receive its share of the first distribution under such apportionment, which shall, before the 1st day of January, 1875, or within two months of the first meeting of its Legislature thereafter, have, by its Legislature, engaged that it will provide by law for the free education of all its children between the ages of six and sixteen years, and will apply all moneys which it shall receive under this act in accordance with its conditions.

The sixth section provides that a sum not exceeding 50 per cent. of the amount received from the United States by any State or Territory, or by the District of Columbia, the first year of such receipt by it, and not exceeding the amount of 10 per cent. in any year thereafter, may be applied, at the discretion of the Legislature thereof, to the maintenance of one or more schools for the instruction of teachers of common schools; said sum, after the first year, to be apportioned wholly to the payment of teachers of such schools.

The seventh section provides that each State and Territory, and said District, shall be entitled to receive its share of every apportionment after the first, which shall have complied with the following conditions: First. That it shall have made the provision for the education of its children required in the fifth section of the act. Secondly. That it shall have applied all moneys by it previously received under the act in accordance therewith. Thirdly. That it shall, through the proper officer thereof, for the year ending the 30th day of June last preceding such apportionment, make full report of the number of public free schools, the number of teachers employed, the number of school-houses owned, and the number of school-houses hired, the total number of children taught during the year, the actual daily attendance, and the actual number of months of the year schools shall have been maintained in each of the several school districts or divisions of saidState, Territory, or District, and the amounts appropriated by the Legislature for the purpose of maintaining a system of free public schools.

The eighth section provides that on or before the 1st day of September, in each year, the Commissioner of Education shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, as to each State, Territory, and District, whether it is entitled to receive its share of the apportionment under this act, and the amount of such share, which shall thereupon be entitled to receive the same. If the Commissioner shall withhold a certificate from either, its share of such apportionment shall be kept separate in the Treasury until the close of the next session of Congress, in order that it may, if it see fit, appeal to Congress from the determination of the Commissioner. If Congress shall not at its next session direct such share to be paid, it shall be added to the general educational fund.

The ninth section provides that the superintendent of public instruction of each State and Territory, and of said District, or such other officer as shall by the laws of such State, Territory, or District be required so to do, shall, immediately upon the receipt of the certificate provided in section 4, proceed to apportion the amount so certified to his State, Territory, or District, to the several school districts therein which shall have maintained for at least three months during the preceding year one or more free public schools for all the children of such school districts between the ages of six and sixteen years, which apportionment shall be upon the basis of the population of such district, or of the number of children of school age therein, or of the attendance upon said schools during the year preceding, as may be by law determined by such State, Territory, or District; and the amount so apportioned shall be solely applied in payment of teachers' wages.

The tenth section provides that the amount apportioned to the school districts of any State or Territory or of the District of Columbia, and certified as therein provided, shall be paid upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the State, territorial, or District treasury, or to such officer as shall be designated by the laws of such State, Territory, or District to receive, account for, and pay over the same to the several school districts entitled thereto under such apportionment, which treasurer or officer shall be required to report, on or before the 30th day of June of each year, to the Commissioner of Education, a detailed statement of the payments made and balance in his hands withheld, unclaimed, or for any cause unpaid. The term "school district," as used in the act, shall include cities, towns, parishes, or such other corporations as by law are clothed with the power of maintaining schools.

The eleventh section provides that in case any State or Territory shall misapply, or allow to be misapplied, or in any manner appropriated or used other than for the purposes therein required, the funds, or any part thereof, received under the provisions of the act, or shall fail to comply with the conditions therein prescribed, or to report, as therein provided, through its proper officers, the disposition thereof, such State or Territory shall forfeit its right to any subsequent apportionment by virtue thereof, until the full amount so misapplied, lost, or misappropriated shall have been replaced by such State or Territory, and applied as therein required, and until such report shall have been made; and all apportionments so forfeited and withheld shall be added to and become part of the principal of the educational fund thereby created; and the officer or officers, person or persons, willfully so misapplying, misappropriating, squandering, or embezzling such funds, or knowingly consenting thereto, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine in double the amount so misapplied, misappropriated, squandered, or embezzled, or by imprisonment not less than one nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court; provided that the conditions therein prescribed may be subject to such modification or addition as Congress may hereafter deem necessary for the better accomplishment of the purposes of the act.

The twelfth section provides that the circuit courts of the United States shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all offenses committed against the provisions of the act, and shall have power and authority, by the proper writ, to compel the performance of the duties therein required by any officer therein mentioned, and to restrain any undue and improper performance of such duties.

The thirteenth section provides that nothing contained in the act shall be so construed as to affect in any manner the existing laws and regulations in regard to the adjustment and payment to States, upon their admission into the Union, of 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands within their respective limits.

The question was on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MONROE. Our committee are earnestly besought to give way this morning for the discussion of questions pertaining to the repeal of the salary bill. I suppose the House is so much interested in that question that it will not perhaps be possible to give a very attentive hearing to the bill which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] has reported and has proposed to discuss to-day. I am therefore willing to yield the hour, provided we lose nothing of our rights to the floor by doing so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry: whether this bill was referred to the committee, or, if not, whether proper notice was given of its introduction?

The SPEAKER. The bill comes up on the regular call of committees, and is now in the morning hour. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE,] the Chair will state that it must remain in the morning hour till disposed of, whether it be proceeded with this morning hour or go over till Tuesday next.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to interpose a motion that the bill be not considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. That it be rejected?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. MONROE. Is that debatable?

The SPEAKER. It can go over with the bill. It need not interfere with the arrangement which the gentleman from Ohio desires to make for this morning hour.

Mr. MONROE. Does it take me off the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman being on the floor, it would not take him off it.

Mr. MONROE. I have not yielded the floor, further than allowing the gentleman from Indiana to ask a question if he wished.

Mr. HOLMAN. I supposed that I had a right to make that motion. If I have not that right, I do not press it.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The gentleman can give notice that he will make that motion when the bill next comes up.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw the motion for the present if the bill goes over.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection to the arrangement proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE,] the bill goes over till Tuesday and the House resumes the consideration of the salary bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It was my purpose to enter a motion to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be considered as entered.

REPEAL OF INCREASED CONGRESSIONAL PAY.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 471) to repeal the increase of certain salaries and to regulate the same, and to cover undrawn and returned balances into the Treasury. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, I should not have occupied any of the time of the House on this subject had it not been that I have introduced a substitute for the bill reported by the committee for which, and in behalf of which, I desire to say a word or two. A few days since I was in company with a considerable number of gentlemen—I think over a hundred—when the subject of the salary bill and what ought to be done with it was the sole topic of conversation, and a number of them expressed their views in relation to it. They all concurred in saying that it had been utterly condemned by the public judgment of the whole people of the United States; that the thing had been discussed and considered and adjudicated by the sovereign people, that authority to which we all owe allegiance, whose commands and whose judgments we are bound to obey. Gentlemen declined to discuss the question whether or not the bill was itself wrong, whether the provision for raising salaries from $5,000 to $7,500 was right or wrong. They said it was a non-essential question, now that the people had considered it and had passed judgment upon it, from which there was no appeal, and by which judgment we were bound; that our sole duty now was to execute that judgment. They said it was as idle now to discuss whether it was right or wrong as to discuss what a man might have proved in a case that had already been tried and gone to final judgment. And, Mr. Speaker, such has substantially been said by almost every gentlemen who has discussed the question before the House.

My friend from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] while maintaining here that the increase was just, and right, and proper to be made, and justifying his vote in favor of it, says it is too late to stand upon that; that it has been decided the other way, and decided by a tribunal that we are all bound to obey. Now, Mr. Speaker, I owe as much allegiance and obedience to the public judgment upon this and upon all subjects as any gentleman upon this floor; but I do not agree in the conclusion that is to be drawn. The people have decided that this increase of salary—increased in amount, and going back and making it apply to that Congress which had almost expired—was wrong. So, gentlemen, all say. Now, what does the bill that has been reported by your committee propose to do? Why, it proposes that that bill shall be left to stand; that all the increased pay that was received by members of the Forty-second Congress, they shall be allowed to keep; and that all the increase of pay which the members of this Congress have so far received they shall be allowed to keep. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me ask you, and ask the gentlemen on this floor, whether that is conforming to the public judgment on this subject? Is that what the people have decreed?

Is this going to satisfy the demands of the people on this subject? When the people have resolved in conventions, and when they have said through the public press, that the law is to be repealed, what did they mean by it? That we were merely to change the law now and take a different and lower rate of compensation hereafter? Not at all; what the public judgment has demanded and now demands on this subject, if it demands anything, is that this thing shall be utterly wiped out. That no benefit or advantage that any man has derived under it shall be kept and retained by him. That, and that alone, will satisfy the public demand and the public judgment on this subject; and, sir, it was for that purpose and with that view that I introduced a substitute for the report of the committee. Why, those very gentlemen who said, upon the occasion that I refer to, that the public judgment had so pronounced against this thing that nobody was at liberty to say a word in favor of it, now come in here with this lame and impotent conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, while I agree with these gentlemen in their premises, I utterly disagree to their conclusions. I propose for one to vote for a bill which shall carry out the decision of the people upon this subject, and utterly wipe out all the effects, consequences, and benefits that have been derived by members of Congress under that bill. And, Mr. Speaker, I must do upon this subject as many gentlemen have done, because we are all personally interested; I must state my own personal experience on the subject and how I stand in reference to it. I voted against the bill. In reference to whether it was right or wrong as to the amount, I was governed, I suppose, in my vote very much as other gentlemen were. I voted to retain the $5,000 because it was enough for me. Before I came to Congress, I had been for a considerable time in public office in my own State, where salaries are very small, and had become accustomed to live upon a very small salary, and habits of simple and plain economy that I had acquired in that way I could well enough preserve here. Five thousand dollars was an ample compensation for my services, and furnished me ample means to live in the manner in which I chose to live. Therefore, so far as I was personally concerned, that was the consideration that affected my vote.

But more than that, Mr. Speaker, I considered it an exceedingly unfortunate time to make this increase. Various things that had taken place last winter had greatly excited the public mind with reference to corruption in public office; the whole country was agog upon that subject, and I knew that this increase of salary at that time, and especially the retroactive feature, would excite public condemnation, and draw down the censure of the people upon it, as it has done, and therefore, sir, I voted against it. But notwithstanding my vote, it passed, and then came the question of what was to be done. The press of the country immediately began to say that every man who took that pay, that was given to him by law, was a grabber and a thief. The idea that I held an office, the salary of which was fixed by law, and was to be called a thief for taking that salary, was not one that was very palatable to me. It did not commend itself to my judgment nor to my conscience; nor did I propose to be actuated or influenced by any threat of that sort, and therefore, sir, I took the money and still retain it. Other gentlemen's consciences were more tender and susceptible than mine. They began to be affected differently, and one after another they returned this back pay into the Treasury. Well, what was the result of that? Why, people immediately began to say they were cowards and hypocrites, and that they did it merely for the purpose of pacifying the press; making a show of honesty they did not possess; courting public favor, and commending themselves in that way to the people. That brought me to commune with myself, with my own judgment and conscience, in relation to what I ought to do; whether I were more amenable upon the one side to be called a grabber and thief, or whether, by pursuing a different course, I should subject myself to be called a coward and a hypocrite, who was, by false pretenses, endeavoring to curry public favor. Well, now, the result of my communing with myself was—(and I do not intend by this to cast any reflection on the motives of other members)—the result of my own reflection and judgment was, that I should be altogether more amenable to the latter charge. That in point of fact it would be much better proved, so far as I was concerned, than the opposite charge, that by keeping the money thus given me by law, I was a grabber and a thief. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I chose to retain what I received under the law, and make my endeavor here to have the law so modified and changed that I may be allowed to return the money to the Treasury, if that is the will of the people, without subjecting myself to the charge of being a hypocrite and a coward, and of doing it because of the clamor of the public press upon the subject.

And inasmuch as I found that my conscience upon this subject was a little obtuse, and not easily moved by the threats and denunciations of some portions of the press, and that a majority of the gentlemen who stood in the same position with myself had consciences equally as torpid as my own, and equally, perhaps, needed the quickening of law to help them, I propose that we regulate this thing by law; that by law we wipe out all the consequences of that act by which the salary was raised and given to members of the Forty-second Congress and to members of the Forty-third Congress.

Now, sir, is there any doubt in relation to the power of this House to do what I propose? And if gentlemen believe what they say as to the popular judgment on this subject, that should be the only question for them to consider. If gentlemen have given any attention to the substitute that I have introduced, they will see that I propose that against the salary of every member upon this floor shall be reckoned the increase of compensation he has received by the law in question, not only since the 4th of March last, but also any additional sum he received under the provisions of that law for his salary as a member of the Forty-second Congress.

Now, this is an important question to be decided. If we have not the legal power to do this, if there is anything in the Constitution, either expressed or implied, that prohibits our doing it, then we ought not to attempt to do it. But I insist that there is not anything in the Constitution against it; I say that we have a perfect right to do it. We cannot, of course, go back and regulate the salaries of the members of the Forty-second Congress. But we have full power over the salary of every member of this Congress, a perfect right to regulate it by law as we choose.

Now, the bill that was reported by the minority of the committee, and which has been proposed as a substitute for that of the majority, goes to the extent of saying that members of the Forty-third Congress shall account for what they have received since the 4th of March last. Nobody has questioned, and I think nobody can successfully question, the power of the House to compel them to account for what they have received under the law since the 4th of March last. Now, is not the question of our power precisely the same in relation to what they have received as members of the Forty-second Congress?

A gentleman, a friend of mine, with whom I was conversing on this subject a day or two since, and for whose opinion I have very great respect, said that by my bill I proposed to make the salaries of members unequal, and therefore it was not proper to pass such a bill as I proposed. Now, I do not propose to make the salaries of members unequal. I propose to obliterate and wipe out that law just as far as it is possible for us to do, and when we have done that we have a right to say to every member of the Forty-second Congress who is also a member of this House, "You have so much of our money in your pocket that in equity and good conscience you have no right to retain; therefore, whether we have a right to provide a legal remedy to recover it back by a suit at law, (which, in my judgment, we have not,) we have a right to say that we have obliterated that law, we have wiped it out, and you have so much of our money that in equity and justice you ought to account for, and we will make you account for it, if you are a member of this Congress, and thus within our control, so that we have a right to determine what your salary shall be."

But, suppose that I am wrong in this; suppose it be true, as was suggested by my friend, that my bill will make salaries unequal; what is there to prevent our making salaries unequal if we choose? Is there anything in the Constitution that requires that each member of Congress shall receive the same salary? The Constitution provides generally that Senators and Representatives shall have a compensation, to be fixed by Congress. Now, suppose Congress shall say Senators shall receive $10,000 a year, and Representatives shall receive $5,000 a year; is that contrary to the Constitution?

Mr. KELLOGG. Allow me a question. Does the gentleman, as a lawyer, claim that members from Vermont might receive $3,000 a year while those from Massachusetts in the same House might receive $5,000?

Mr. POLAND. I might think it very unwise and unfair, but if Congress shall see fit to so determine, I am not aware of anything in the Constitution that would be violated by it. Suppose that Congress should pass a law providing that every member of this House over seventy years of age should have $7,000 a year, and every one over sixty and under seventy shall have $6,000, and so grade down to the lowest constitutional age; is there anything in the Constitution that prohibits our regulating the pay of members of Congress in that way?

And suppose we should regulate the pay of members of Congress as the pay of Army officers is regulated. Certain of them—I am not aware whether the rule applies to all of the officers of the Army—but with regard to a very large portion of them, a provision of the law is that their salaries shall be fixed at a certain sum, and for every five years of service they shall be entitled to have 10 per cent. added to their pay. Now suppose we were to make the same provision in reference to members of Congress, that every man who had served here five years should have 10 per cent. more than men who have not served so long, and 10 per cent. for every additional five years of service. Whether it would be wise to do so I am not asking, but that we have the constitutional power to do it I have no sort of doubt whatever. Therefore, if my substitute is open to the charge that by providing that every man shall account from his present salary for what he received of increase to his salary in the last Congress—if that shall make the salaries of members of this Congress unequal, it is no violation of the Constitution. It is, therefore, in my judgment, entirely clear that we have the power to do what I propose. If gentlemen honestly believe in the popular judgement as they profess, and their duty to obey it, they should vote for my proposition, for nothing else meets exactly the claims of that judgment. If gentlemen refuse to do so, I fear the people will say, it is not because they doubt the power, but because they prefer to keep the money. I fear they will be accused, like the unfortunate pair of old, "with keeping back part of the price." I trust they will not be so severely dealt with. Those gentlemen who have been so forward and urgent on this subject, demanding action with such hot haste, ought not to content themselves with half measures. The people will see and believe they are thinking more of benefiting themselves than of righting any grievance of the people. Their loud proclamations and promises are kept only to the ear. It is said that those who have drawn and retained this increased pay, whether for the last Congress or this, have spent or invested it, and they now cannot pay or have it deducted without great inconvenience, and perhaps suffering. But this is their own fault. This popular judgment was early declared. Every member, as he has been drawing his $625 per month since last March, knew then, as well as he knows now, what the view of the people was, and he was as much bound to notice it then as now. The right, both in law and equity, to compel a deduction of this increase from the salary of every member of this Congress is as perfect now as if every dollar of it was still remaining in the Treasury. I confess, Mr. Speaker, I have some jealousy of great pretensions to public virtue and honesty. They are exceedingly apt to be empty, and my experience is that those who make them are apt to show about as much selfish intent as other people. For myself, on a question that is and always must be a question to be settled by law, I desire to stand on the law, and be governed by it. I will do what I can to have the law right, and then if it is made wrong, it is not my fault. My twenty minutes will not allow me to say more, though I have much more I would like to say. From the lofty patriotism and the stern devotion to the will of the people which gentlemen manifested in the beginning, I had high hopes that they meant what they said, and that my substitute would meet general favor. I begin to see that much of it was mere "sounding brass." and that this much talked of popular judgment is likely to be beaten on the execution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks upon this subject now under debate. They will be general, as I do not know whether my strength will enable me to extend them so far as I would like to. For as little as members of the House may think of this subject, in my judgment it involves a great principle; and I shall speak mainly to the principle.

As was remarked by the gentleman from New York, who opened the debate yesterday with so much eloquence, [Mr. TREMAIN,] I am utterly disconnected with that branch of the subject, the "back-pay grab," as it is called, which has so entered into and pervaded this discussion, but upon that branch I have something to say. Therefore my remarks will be confined, first to the moral principle involved in the question, and then to the political expediency and policy of the increase of salaries adopted by the last Congress.

Now as to the moral aspect of this case, a vast deal has been said, and very loosely said as I think, in the papers about the salary grab. But I believe I have not heard any gentleman upon this floor make or apply any such epithets or cast any imputation upon those members who took this retroactive back pay. I refer to what has appeared in the press generally and of both parties. Of the press I would say nothing in derogation of its character, power, and usefulness. The position of a journalist in this country is, in my opinion, one of the highest in the land. The "fourth estate" does in this age do a vast deal, and rightfully too, in the control of public sentiment; but I would in all earnestness say to the press and its conductors that nothing is more important than that in treating subjects for the masses of the people they should look well to the truth and correctness in principle of what they say. Even partisan journalists should consider this well, for no permanent good can be effected by urging a false or unsound issue.

Now, sir, very broad and severe denunciations have appeared in many of the newspapers of the country against the morality of taking this back pay. I read them at my home soon after the passage of the bill, charging, in substance, those who voted for the bill as thieves and robbers, and using like epithets against those who took the pay allowed under it. And I saw one caricature, or parody in rhyme, the wit of which was much better than its wisdom or justice, representing this raid upon the Treasury, as it was called, very much like the charge of the "six hundred" at Balaklava. The wit of this, I say, was, as I thought, much more to be admired than its logic.

In treating of this subject my remarks will be desultory; and here I will take occasion to allude to another point presented yesterday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] in speaking of demagogism. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that there never was a statesman who was not a demagogue. In the original and primitive meaning of that word, demagogue means a leader of the people, being derived from demos, the people, and ago, to lead or direct. Pericles was a demagogue, if you please. Mr. Speaker, there are two kinds of demagogues—the sham and the genuine. The genuine or true demagogue is the man who does indeed lead the people, but leads them in the paths of virtue, truth, and honor. This is the province of intellect, combined with courage and all those ennobling qualities which should secure the confidence and trust of those whose pursuits in life do not enable them to be so well informed on public questions.

Under all democratic institutions it is the high duty of men of superior intelligence and ability to lead and guide the people upon all questions involving their rights and interests. The difference between the real demagogue and the sham is that the sham demagogue, the mere politican, seeking his own ends, panders to the errors and the prejudices of the people, and contents himself with following instead of leading, and is satisfied with seeming to lead by "following in front," as boys seem to lead the drum and fife in the streets by keeping ahead in all the turnouts. The real demagogue, the statesman, does not fail to consult the people; he is with them and of them. He cannot be a statesman unless he understands their wants, their errors, and even their weaknesses and infirmities. The real statesman is the political Melchisedec of humanity. He feels all the changes of the people's pulse; and if it is feverish he administers the proper remedy as the good physician watches and administers the physical body's remedy. This is the real demagogue, or the statesman. The sham, the man who merely courts popular favor to get the spoils of office; feels the pulse of the people that he may know how to pander to the patient's whims or caprices, giving him whatever he wants, even though he knows it may destroy him. He either does not care for the patient's real welfare, or does not know how to advance it.

Now, sir, of all the real statesmen who ever lived in England, Chatham was, perhaps, the first, the ablest; and there was not a man in England, from him down to John Wilkes, who gave more close attention to the popular feeling than he did. In one of England's greatest emergencies, during the Spanish war, it is related of him (whether correctly or not I do not know, but it illustrates the principle) that when he made up his "budget," his financial scheme for the next campaign, (and Chatham was a man who, in the financial government of England, paid as he went, or provided a proper sinking fund)—when, I say, this great statesman, or demagogue if you please, had perfected his "budget," on a memorable occasion, while leader of the Commons, ready to be brought into the House—that "budget," by which he had to raise large taxes, extending even to the taxing of window-lights, which had never been resorted to before—he was uneasy. One member of the administration was not present on that occasion. Chatham, or Pitt as he then was, missed him, and asked where the absent member was?

The answer was, "O, it makes no difference whether he is here or not; he is a fool, and his opinion amounts to nothing." "That is the very reason," replied the premier, "why I want him here, because the way he thinks about this subject is the way the majority of the people may think; and I want to know his sentiments." He wanted the sentiments of that man as an indication of the sentiments of the people, not that he might pander to the popular views, but that he might go before the people (and his voice was heard as no other man's ever was in England) and rouse them to an understanding of the propriety, the necessity, the justice, of the measure. That was his object. It was to know, and to elevate if need be, the sentiment of the English people to an appreciation of the importance of the measure, that they might come up and sustain the credit of the country. No doubt there were sham demagogues at that time ready to go among the people and say to them, "It is all wrong to tax our lights;" but when the great commoner—the true leader of the people—appealed to their intelligence, their virtue and patriotism—to honor, to truth—the mind and heart of the English masses recognized the rightfulness and the justice of the measure, and it was sustained. That was statesmanship.

So much for this episode upon demagogism in connection with the business before us.

I stated that I should speak first upon the moral principle involved in this question. Sir, I was utterly astonished the other day when some gentleman undertook to speak of this question as a party question. In my opinion neither party is responsible for the measure of the increase of salary at the last session. I believe that the democracy, in the proportion of votes, according to the analysis I have seen, are as much responsible for it as the republicans. Perhaps some of our republican friends at the time the bill was passed were a little shy—a little timid—anxious to have the measure pass, but at the same time not wishing to take what they deemed the risk of popular disfavor by voting in accordance with their personal convictions.

But, sir, to come at once to the gist of the morality of the act. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] yesterday made some important admissions which cover the whole case. He admitted that by the Constitution of the United States each Congress for itself is empowered to fix the pay of its own members. This, sir, is a wise provision of the Constitution, which the States, after its ratification, refused to change. This provision of the Constitution has been acted on from the beginning of this Government. Congress has repeatedly increased the pay, and at every such increase the back pay was considered as legitimate as the front pay. This the gentleman also admitted. This saves me from going into historic details. I therefore confine myself to principle. If it was not immoral to take it on all former occasions, how can it be on this? The principle is the same. Whenever the pay has been increased it was necessarily retroactive and extra. Were the men who did this thing in the last century and in the early part of this century, the brightest ornaments in our history for intellect, for talents and for virtue—were they "salary grabbers?" Were they "thieves" and "robbers," for doing just what was their constitutional right to do?

Mr. Speaker, one of the first great things to learn in this life—in Greece it was taught in the schools, according to Xenophon in his Cyropœdia—is to discriminate in morals between the seeming and the real—between what may appear to be right and that which is right in itself. Upon this depends everything pertaining to true reputation—everything pertaining to honest trade, to character in its every phase—to everything pertaining to the proper organization of society, from which civilization springs. Most people are much more sensitive as to what the multitude may think, than as to whether the thing itself, is right.

Now, sir, if there is anything wrong, anything immoral, anything dishonest, anything which would reflect disgrace upon a man's memory for taking this legal appropriation, I must confess I do not see it. One gentleman said that he returned it because it was too much pay, and the inquiry was promptly made, how much he thought would have been admissible.

If it is wrong to take the whole it was wrong to take a single cent of it. The principle is the same; and if it is wrong for the present House to take what the law allows them to take, where are we to make the distinction between right and wrong? During my life I have endeavored to pursue the right, and whenever I am acting in pursuance of the right I do not consider I am committing any offense whatever which would subject me to the charge of "grabbing" what did not rightfully belong to me.

These remarks, as I have said, do not apply to me, for I was not here, but as a citizen of Georgia, and thus a citizen of this great Federal Republic, I feel a deep interest in the dignity and character of this Congress of the United States. In this assembly are the Representatives of the greatest peoples on earth, the guardians of the common American character and American institutions—what, then, have the Representatives of the peoples of these thirty-seven States, forming the grandest galaxy ever seen in the firmament of governments, done in this matter of pay which should subject them to the charge of being "grabbers," "robbers," and "thieves?"

Sir, I feel an interest in the public character of this House and of its members.

I say, Mr. Speaker, when Congress passed the retroactive law at its last session it was their right to do it—their constitutional right. I am not now saying whether it was expedient to do it, but I do say that no blot should rest upon the name of any man or be cast upon that of his children or upon his memory if, after it passed, even against his vote, he took what the law gave him. I have nothing to say of those who, after taking it, returned it, for that is a matter with themselves. All that I mean to say is, that if I had been here, whether I voted for it or not, I would have taken it, and I should have felt I was justly entitled to it, just as though it were eight dollars a day or one dollar a day, if the Congress voted it.

It was a constitutional law, constitutionally passed, and those who are entitled to it are as much entitled as at any other time to the pay then fixed. If there were those who thought it was too much, it was, of course, their right to refuse to take it. I would not attempt to cast a slur upon any gentleman who saw fit to return it; I am only speaking for myself. So much for the morality view.

My strength is failing; but I wish to say something on the other branch, on the expediency or policy aspects of the question, and I conclude the first view by repeating that there is no immorality in it. It is well known that every Congress which has ever increased the pay increased it from the beginning; and I think I may say that every Legislature in the United States which has increased its pay increased it from the beginning. There is not a single case of exception that I know of; and therefore I trust that the press, that the men who attempt to lead the masses of the people, will perceive where the right is, and not attribute wrong where there was none.

If they think it was inexpedient let them discuss it from that point, and not allege there was any immorality.

This brings me to the second view which I proposed to present to the House. I am not going to state what I deem my services here worth, but I do intend to state what I think the services of a Representative of any people in any district in the United States ought to be worth; and perhaps I will go far above the figure of any law which has ever been passed upon the subject. I will say this: that Representatives in this Hall ought to be men of that mental caliber, that moral caliber, that information, that education, that virtue, of that trustworthiness—of all the qualities that make men fit for the highest pursuits of life. The Representative ought to be of that character which would entitle him to the highest amount of wages, if you choose to call it so, which is given to the highest grades of skilled labor in the country. There are, Mr. Speaker, various kinds of labor, skilled and unskilled, and there are various kinds of power—water-power, steam-power, muscle and mind or brain-power.

My standard of wages for a member of this House would be that amount which the higher grades of skilled labor, combined with brain-power and virtue, usually commands. And I am satisfied that when the people of this country understand the nature of the duties and proper character of a member of Congress, when they understand the importance of government, and good government, and wise government, there are none throughout the length and breadth of the country who will dispute this proposition.

Why, sir, the salaries of managers of railroads reach $25,000. There is hardly a master-mechanic in any of the machine shops who does not receive $10,000 as a compensation for his skilled labor, his brain labor. There is hardly a town in which there are not merchants who make from $10,000 to $15,000. There is hardly a district in the United States, I suspect, where there are not one or more lawyers whose income is not as much as $10,000 or $15,000. There is hardly any place or district where the most eminent physicians do not make $10,000 or $15,000. There is hardly any business of life requiring skilled labor or brain labor which does not command that compensation; the income of many journalists greatly exceeds it.

Now, sir, when you teach the people what government is, the science of government, the nature of the duties of a member of Congress, the interest that everybody in the community feels and every member of society has in good government, in the laws we pass here within the sphere of Federal limited power, touching more or less the interest and the pocket of the humblest human being now within the jurisdiction of these States, they will say that legislation should be in the hands of men of character, of virtue, and integrity, who understand their duties—men who understand the science of government. This requires study, it requires labor, it requires an immense deal of thought; and, therefore, if the government is maintained rightly in the Senate and in the House, the rule of fixing the pay under the Constitution should be such as to afford an arena in these halls for the virtue and talent of the highest grade in our country.

Some sham, would-be leader of the people may go to the poor man driving the plane or the plow and tell him "he is getting only a pittance for his daily toil, while a member of Congress is getting $16 a day;" and he may induce that man, in the humblest but honest walks of life, to vote for him on his promise to reduce the pay. But that same man, if he were ill, would send for a skilled physician in preference of a quack, though the former was making twice as much as the latter. So with the other learned professions; and when the people properly understand the importance of good legislation, they will have as little use for a cheap Congressman as for a cheap doctor or a cheap lawyer.

What, Mr. Speaker, is the motive power of all humanity that prompts action—I mean that inward force which stirs honest, virtuous action? It is a desire for status. It is a desire for honorable position, with its attendants. It is the desire of a man not only to provide for himself, but for his family. Status in society is the great object. What are the elements of status? Income and honor. Honest acquisitions and meritorious deeds.

Now, sir, to return to the question before the House, in fixing a salary of a member of Congress, of a President of the United States, of the judges of the Supreme Court, and of all your diplomatic and foreign servants, the basis on which the whole should be placed is, as I have said—the standard of salary should be, in my opinion, upon the basis stated and according to the grade of service. The Government in all its departments should offer fair competition for the highest virtue and intelligence with all the other vocations in life. The youth of the country in selecting pursuits should not be driven from the political field for want of those inducements offered by other kinds of employment. The political arena, with just compensation, affords the broadest, widest, and grandest field for intellectual action. With that view it is necessary that the Government should offer the highest inducements to skilled and brain labor in all its departments.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask that the gentleman from Georgia be allowed to proceed by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Georgia will proceed with his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS. I did not know that I had occupied the time of the House so long. I have a few other things, however, which I desire to say. The House has got my idea that the field should be open just as wide in the business of government as in any other department, and I will not enlarge upon it. With that view, the salary should correspond. How is it now? A young man comes from college. His father has toiled, and even his mother, spending their earnings—I know of many such cases—and using their means to educate their boy; and when he comes out of college their object is that he shall get into some business, something that will repay their sacrifices. Such young men, Mr. Speaker, do not, of course, come into this field. As long as the law offers a better opening they will go to the law. If mercantile business offers a better opening they will go there. If the profession of medicine offers an opening they will enter that. At present the mania is for engineering in connection with railroads and otherwise. Speak to them about studying government, and they will tell you that they cannot afford to go at that. Why, sir, in my own district I have known men, with families to provide for, who never could think of coming to Congress. They were among the ablest intellects in the district; but they could not think of leaving their more profitable business—when living was realy a vital question. Their means were not sufficient to support them.

I said that I would not estimate my services when I came here; but I will have this much to say of myself personally, with the indulgence of the House, that when I came here first, thirty years ago, I made it a rule, a fixed principle with me, never to make a dollar except what was allowed by law. I made it a principle never to charge or demand a cent for professional services rendered here.

I collected claims during the sixteen years I was in this House to the amount of very nearly, if not something over, $500,000, (half a million of dollars,) for constituents, and I refused to receive any commission upon any of the sums so collected. This I state only to show that my present views spring from no personal mercenary motive. But to-day there are many who could not afford to come to Congress, even at the present salary. I can, and hence I am here. But the idea I wish to impress upon the House is a general principle. Let the salary be fixed upon a principle that will enable the Government service to come in fair competition with the other enterprises of this age of progress, as it is termed.

I will state another thing. It so happened that one of the last things I ever said upon this floor, fourteen years ago, was upon this matter of salary. It grew out of a debate on a proposition to increase the salary of the judge of, I think, the western district of Virginia. I was, so to speak, delivering my valedictory to the then members of this House, never expecting to return here again, and therefore I could speak disinterestedly. I gave it as my opinion then, and I will give it to you now. At that time the expenditures of the Government were about $80,000,000 per annum, and the expenses for the whole civil, diplomatic, judicial, and legislative departments of the country were not exceeding, I think, $3,000,000. I gave it as my opinion that if the salary of members of Congress was $10,000, and of Senators $15,000, and of the Chief Justice $50,000, and of the President $100,000, and of the associate justices of the Supreme Court $25,000, and of our foreign ministers twice or three times what it was, the expenditures of the Government would be $60,000,000 instead of $80,000,000. Sir, no man—I feel almost reluctant to say it—no man, it is well known, who has not a fortune himself, can hope to represent the United States at any foreign court, even with the increased salary, and maintain the dignity of the Government. I gave that as my opinion then. It is the brain part of the Government that you should nourish; the legislative, judiciary, and executive parts of it form that brain-power that is to conduct you safely, if you attain high success in the future. In the human body the brain is the one-eleventh part of the body, and it is the brain portion that you should nourish. Sir, if we had spent more upon this department of the Government, statesmanship would have been more studied—more a matter of science. Our Government in 1859 was becoming, as I said, a sort of monstrosity—all arms, body, and legs, while the brain part was dwarfed. I included the foreign diplomatic service, and I included also the judiciary. And to-day I give it as my opinion that the President ought to have at least $100,000, the Chief Justice ought to have $50,000 at least, and the associate justices $25,000.

Now, I am not going to say what the salary of members ought to be. You have heard my ideas on the principle, and also on the expediency. Certainly I shall not vote for the bill as reported by this committee. What shape this thing may take I do not know; but my opinion is that the bill of last session, of which you have heard so much complaint, is really a reduction in fact. I know it will be to me, because of the postage on what I anticipated to do in the distribution of knowledge among the constituents that I represent. I think the amount of postage will cover $2,500, and therefore, unless gentlemen wish to reduce the pay to below what it was before, they will not reduce it. My own judgment is, that the unwisest part of the legislation of last Congress was the repeal of the franking privilege. One word upon that. Ours is a Government founded upon the enlightenment of the people. No representative government can last except where the people understand its nature, are devoted to its principles, and have the patriotism to maintain it. Those three elements are essential to the existence of all representative governments; in other words, they must depend upon the virtue, the intelligence, and the patriotism of the people. Light, political light, they must have. The Constitution declares that our public proceedings, our journal, shall be published, or given to the people.

In the view laid down by all the most eminent writers on government, the first consideration with all is the proper division of the powers of the government, so as to make them independent of each other; that is, the legislative, judiciary, and executive; and the very next one is that the people must be informed. Every avenue ought to be opened up so as to let in light to the people from every possible quarter. Let the man in his workshop, let the man at his plow, let the people—the honest, virtuous people of all classes—get all the light they can. Hence the franking privilege, in my judgment, ought not to have been repealed, and ought to be restored. It is one of those great instrumentalities in a free representative government to aid in the enlightenment of the people and add to the stability of our Government. If errors are disseminated, if it is an abuse, why, it is an abuse like others incident to life. It is like the abuses of the press, of which some people complain; and, by the way, that same bill of last session also struck a blow at the press, which I think was exceedingly unfortunate. I would open every avenue of light to the people. If there are abuses they will be just like the abuses of the press; and, after all, the people are not deceived even by the abuses and errors that are disseminated among them. As Mr. Jefferson said, early in our history, "Error ceases to be dangerous when truth is left free to combat it." Let the American people hear all sides, and if there be error here, there is truth there. And what does it all amount to? They will sift it from and easily find out the truth from the error. Here comes a ray of light which is red; here comes another ray which is violet; here comes another ray which is orange; but when they are all blended and commingled together, they form the white light, which is the truth.

I will detain the House no longer, and I thank them for the attention they have given me. They have my views upon the general question, first on the moral aspect, and then as to the expediency. The question of the franking privilege is not now before the House, but I believe its repeal was the greatest error of the legislation of last session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was communicated to the House by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate, in the absence of the Vice-President, had chosen Hon. MATT. H. CARPENTER, of the State of Wisconsin, President of the Senate pro tempore.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 474) to establish a post-route from the village of L'Anse, in the county of Houghton, State of Michigan, to Huron Bay, in the said county and State.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill (S. No. 130) to remove the disabilities of Thomas S. Bocock, E. J. Harvie, and Daniel Trigg, of Virginia, and John H. Reagan, of Texas.

SALARY OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

The House resumed the consideration of the salary bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, there was so much to admire in the speech to which the House has just listened, that it may seem ungracious to say anything in conflict with the doctrines announced And yet the distinguished gentleman [Mr. STEPHENS] has said some things so strikingly different from the views generally entertained by the American people, that I venture to offer a few suggestions by way of reply, while the subject is still fresh in the minds of his hearers.

All that the gentleman said in regard to the relation of public opinion to representative men will, I presume, be cordially concurred in by those who heard him. All that he said in the way of contrasting the true demagogue of the ancient Greeks with the sham demagogue of our time, will certainly find an echo in the breast of every thoughtful man. The real leaders of the people—they who give voice to the best thoughts or aspirations of their countrymen—are immeasurably above those who consult public passion only to cater to its worst tendencies. It is a high and worthy work to study public opinion, for the purpose of learning how best to serve the public good; but to study to learn how best to serve ourselves is base. But it is important that we understand what we mean by public opinion. It is not an infallible standard of right; for it is sometimes wholly wrong. Its judgments are frequently revised and reversed by its own consent. But it is true that after a full hearing public opinion finally adjusts itself on a basis which will be practically just and true. He greatly errs who calls all the passing and changing moods of the public mind the fixed and final verdict of public judgment.

The public opinion that teaches its most valuable and impressive lessons resembles the ocean—not when lashed by the breath of the tempest—but when seen in the grandeur of its all-pervading calm. The men who shall take the dash and roar of its wild waves on the rocks as his symbol of public opinion will not only fail to learn its best lessons, but may find themselves wrecked on its breakers. But the sea in its hour of calm, when the forces that play upon it are in equipoise—when its depths are unvexed by tempests—is the grand level by which all the heights and depths of the world are measured. And so public opinion, though it may at times dash itself in fury against events and against men, will at last settle down into broad and settled calm, and will mark the level on which we gauge our political institutions, and measure the strength and wisdom of opinions and men.

While recognizing, thus, the general justness and the almost omnipotent power of public opinion in a government like ours, it is equally important that the individual man should not be the servile and unquestioning follower of its behests. We may value it as a guide, we may accept its lessons, but we should never be its slaves.

There is a circle of individual right within which every man's opinions are sacredly his own, even in defiance of public opinion, and which his manhood and self-respect demand that he shall never surrender. But there are public questions like that which we are to-day considering, on which the voice of public opinion has a right to be heard and considered by every Representative in the national legislature.

Now, if we were legislating for the ideal republic of Plato, I do not know that a wiser plan of compensation could be found than that proposed by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS.] If we lived in a world where the highest power was the best paid, his scheme would be perfect and his argument unanswerable. But so far as I have studied life, exactly the reverse is the accepted rule. The things that have the highest marketable value in the world as we find it, are not the things that stand highest in the intellectual or moral scale.

One of the brightest and greatest men I know in this nation, a man who, perhaps, has done as much for its intellectual life as any other, told me not many months ago, that he had made it the rule of his life to abandon any intellectual pursuit the moment it became commercially valuable; that others would utilize what he had discovered; that his field of work was above the line of commercial values; and when he brought down the great truths of science from the upper heights to the level of commercial values, a thousand hands would be ready to take them and make them valuable in the markets of the world.

[A VOICE Who was he?]

Mr. GARFIELD. It was Agassiz. He entered upon his great career, not for the salary it gave him, for that was meager compared with the pay of those in the lower walks of life; but he followed the promptings of his great nature and works for the love of the truth and for the instruction of mankind. Something of this spirit has pervaded the lives of the great men who did so much to build up and maintain our republican institutions. And this spirit is, in my judgment, higher and worthier than that which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] has described.

To come immediately to the question before us, I agree with the distinguished gentlemen that we should not be driven or swayed by that unjust clamor that calls men thieves who voted as they had the constitutional right to vote, and accepted a compensation which they had the legal and constitutional right to take. I join in no clamor of that sort; nor will I join in any criminations against those who used their right to act and vote differently from myself on this subject. It is idle to waste our time now in discussing the votes of the last Congress in relation to the salary bill. We are called upon to confront this plain, practical question, "Shall the salary bill of the last Congress be repealed?" I shall argue it on two grounds: first, the just demands of public opinion; second, the relation of this repeal to the Government and its necessities; and I shall confine my remarks to these two points. I think it cannot be doubted that public opinion plainly and clearly demands the repeal; and on a subject like this the voice of the people should have more than even its usual weight.

When the public says to me, and to those associated with me, that we have under constitutional law given ourselves more pay than that public is willing to grant us, it would be indelicate and indecent in us on such a question to resist that public opinion.

It does not compromise the manhood, the independence, or the self-respect of any Representative to say that he will not help to keep on the statute-book a law which allows him more pay than public opinion thinks he ought to have. Even if he believes public opinion wrong, he ought to yield to it in a matter of such delicacy.

That is all the argument I make on the score of public opinion.

I now come to the other point, the necessities of the Government. Gentlemen must remember that only seven years ago our expenditures had risen to a volume that was simply frightful, in view of the burdens of the country. We were then paying out over the counter of our Treasury $1,290,000,000 a year as the cost of sustaining the Government and meeting the great expenses entailed by the war. What was the duty of this National Legislature? Manifestly to bring the expenditures of the Government down as rapidly as possible from the high level of war to the normal level of peace.

That work Congress was doing well and faithfully until this salary increase was made. Observe, for a moment, how we have been scaling down the expenditures from that high figure to the rate we had reached one year ago. In 1868 we had brought the expenditures down to $377,000,000 a year. In 1872 we had brought them by a rapid grade down to $277,000,000; and some of us entertained the hope and belief that we could make a further reduction of at least twenty-five or fifty millions before we should reach the new level of peace. Now, how were those expenditures made up? On this subject I wish to call attention for a moment to a paragraph in a speech which I made on this subject when the salary bill was before the House upon its passage. The reasons I then gave why the salary increase should not be made are equally strong reasons to-day why it should be repealed:

> Mr. GARFIELD, of Ohio. I desire to put one thought in regard to our expenditures into the mind of every man willing to receive it. Our annual expenditures for the year ending 30th of last June was $259,500,000 in round numbers. Of this amount $26,716,000 was for salaries, including the pay of the Army, the Marine Corps, and the Navy. This includes all salaries paid to laborers in the direct service of the Government. In other words, about one-tenth of all the expenditures of the Government is for salaries.
>
> Now, I wish gentlemen to consider this point: If you take a group of some twenty-five persons out of the seventy thousand employés of the Government and raise their salaries about 40 per cent., ought you not as a matter of equity to make a relative increase of salaries throughout the entire Government? Ought you not to make the increase general?
>
> Where can you reasonably stop if you begin with our own salaries here in the Capitol? What logic can keep you from going on through the entire breadth of the public service until you increase these $26,000,000 about 40 per cent.? I do not believe we ought to say there should be an increase.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> I do not desire to get any large or small credit for special virtue in regard to my own salary or that of my fellow-associates; I do not know that any one else does; but when we act on this subject we ought to act comprehensively, with the whole field before us, so we can say to the country we are acting on the whole civil service of the country.

So far as the necessities of the Government were concerned, this was the ground of my opposition to the increase; and on this ground I ask for its repeal.

Mr. Speaker, if we allow that law to stand, the first time any civil or military officer of the Government asks an increase of his pay, it will not lie in the mouth of this Congress to refuse to give it while we are continuing our own compensation at the rate fixed for ourselves by the act of last session. If, therefore, the Forty-third Congress intends to go forward in the work of economy and retrenchment, if it has any hope of making further reductions in the expenditures of this Government, we must, before undertaking to carry out that work, give ourselves the moral power that will result from a reduction of our own pay to the old standard. As the case stands to-day, our own salaries are the master-key in our hands by which, and by which alone, we can turn the machinery that will bring about a further reduction of expenses in the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I say all this on the theory that we are to run the Government as our fathers who made it intended it should be run—not on the principle of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] a principle that would make this the most expensive Government on the globe, but on the old principle that there is something due to the honor of the service we perform. I have no doubt that the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, if I should put to him the inquiry, would admit that the country may experience emergencies when it would be the duty of her best minds everywhere to give themselves to the service without any question as to the compensation. If we had all insisted upon the rigid rule of pay for services rendered, how could the Government, when the late war came on, have obtained the service it needed? How could we have succeeded in that contest? Will any man pretend that the paltry sum paid to our soldiers was an adequate compensation for the services they did in fact render? If they had waited to inquire how much they could make at railroading, how much they could make as skilled mechanics, how much they could make in the various vocations of life, they would never have gone into the service.

Mr. Speaker, at a time like this, a time of great financial distress, when it is our first duty to confront the expenditures and reduce them to the lowest point consistent with the wants of the Government, it is fitting that we begin by making what some gentlemen think a sacrifice. I do not deny that there are scores of men in this House whose services are worth more than the present salary—who could engage in other pursuits and obtain far higher wages than they get here. The action I advocate to-day does not necessarily imply that the services of these men may not be worth what is at present allowed them; but I insist that it is their duty to do this cheerfully, and to do it at the beginning of this new Congress. If we refuse, we shall be crippled in the most important work of the session. We shall make it impossible to do that effective service which its necessities require.

Mr. Speaker, I have but one word further to say. No one of these bills is entirely what I would prefer to have; yet I am willing to vote for several that are presented. What, it seems to me, ought to be done is simply that the aggregate amount of pay and allowances, including mileage authorized under the old law should be restored; but the mileage, should be equalized and distributed as a part of the salary, and only actual individual expenses of travel allowed. I believe if that were done it would satisfy all reasonable demands of public opinion—and no unreasonable one ought to be satisfied—and will place this Congress in a position to do effective work. I regret that the bill of my friend from Maine [Mr. HALE] does not embrace that feature of equalizing the mileage. If I have an opportunity to offer an amendment to that effect, I will do it. As I said two days ago, I think it would have been wiser to have passed the repeal without debate. And now I hope we may make a speedy end of the subject.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, in the examination of this subject I propose to speak of it in two aspects; first, in reference to the retroactive feature pertaining to the legislation of the last Congress; and, secondly, as to the adequacy of the compensation then provided for members of Congress, and, incidentally thereto, as to the justice of an equalization of the pay and mileage. I shall look at the question from a Pennsylvania stand-point, in order to see who are the men from that State who have in times past maintained the principle of back pay, and who have profited by their own voice and vote in its favor. And I do this because I have been subject to some rather severe criticisms in my own State, from which, however, I do not intend in any respect whatever to shrink; for I voted according to my sincere conviction of duty. I believed then, and still believe, I acted for the best interests of the country. I propose to recall the names of Pennsylvania representatives in both branches of past Congresses, to see with whom my name will be associated in history as an advocate of retroactive and equalized compensation to members, and as among the recipients of such equal salary.

The question of salary arose in the First Congress, which sat in the city of New York; when the compensation to members was, for the first time, adjusted. In the next place, we discover that the Third Congress, sitting in Philadelphia, increased the salary of members; and even then that increase of pay was made retroactive.

The Pennsylvania Senators in that Congress, and who were esteemed then and now as among the purest of our patriot fathers, were Robert Morris and Albert Gallatin. Both of them accepted that back pay; and yet, when the latter, in 1794, was unseated from the Senate because of non-citizenship for the requisite nine years under the Constitution, he was taken up by the people in one of the Pennsylvania congressional districts where he did not reside, and was elected to the House of Representatives, in order that his valuable services should not be lost to the State and the country. As I have said, both he and his colleague, Robert Morris, took the retroactive pay; and yet for that they lost neither the confidence nor the respect of the people of Pennsylvania.

So far as I have been able to learn from the records there was not sufficient resistance to the increase of pay in the Third Congress to warrant the ordering of the yeas and nays. So I cannot say how members voted. One fact, however, I do know; and that is that every Representative in both branches of Congress at that time took the retroactive pay, as well as the increase of pay provided for the future.

Let me give the names of the Pennsylvania delegation in this House who in the Third Congress took back pay. They are as follows:

Thomas Hartley, John W. Kittera, F. A. Muhlenberg, (Speaker of the First and Third Congress;) Peter Muhlenberg, (afterward United States Senator;) Thomas Fitzsimmons, James Armstrong, William Montgomery, John Smilie, Andrew Gregg, (afterward United States Senator;) Daniel Hiester, Thomas Scott, William Findley, and William Irvine.

The fifteenth is the next Congress in which the matter was broached; and at that time Pennsylvania was represented in the Senate by Jonathan Roberts and by Abner Laycock, men whose public record will compare favorably for purity, ability, and patriotism, with that of any in either branch of Congress before or since that day. They both accepted back pay. Of the Pennsylvania delegation in this House voting in the affirmative for retroactive pay were, William Anderson, Isaac Darlington, Joseph Hopkinson, William P. Maclay, David Marchand, Robert Moore, Thomas Patterson, Levi Pawling, Jacob Spangler, Christian Tarr, James M. Wallace, and William Wilson—twelve in all.

In the negative were Andrew Boden, Joseph Hiester, (afterward governor of Pennsylvania,) John Murray, John Whiteside—four in all.

The absentees, or those not voting, were Samuel D. Ingham and Adam Seybert.

Every man of them, however, those who voted for the retroactive increase as well as those who voted against it, and the absentees, and those not voting—all took the increased and back pay.

We next come to the Thirty-fourth Congress; in which, from Pennsylvania, William Bigler and Richard Brodhead occupied seats in the Senate, and both of them took the retroactive pay. The members of the House from Pennsylvania who voted in the affirmative on the proposition in that Congress were, T. B. Florence, John Hickman, Job R. Tyson, William Millward, Jacob Broom, Anthony E. Roberts, John C. Kunkle, James H. Campbell, Henry M. Fuller, James I. Pierce, John Covode, Samuel A. Purviance, and David Barclay. And those who voted in the negative were, John Cadwalader, Samuel C. Bradshaw, G. A. Grow, LEMUEL TODD, John R. Edie, Jonathan Knight, David Kitchen, John Allison, and John Dick.

LEMUEL TODD, I believe, is the same who is now a member of this House. Every one of them took the retroactive increase of pay at that time.

In the next place we reach the Thirty-ninth Congress, when Pennsylvania was represented in the Senate by Charles R. Buckalew and Edgar Cowan, who both voted for the then proposed increase of pay, combined with the back-pay feature. Those in the House of Representatives from Pennsylvania who voted for it were, A. J. Glossbenner, Philip Johnson, W. D. KELLEY, George F. Miller, J. K. Morehead, LEONARD MYERS, CHARLES O'NEILL, S. J. RANDALL, Thaddeus Stevens, Myers Strouse, Thomas Williams, and A. A. Barker—four democrats and eight republicans; while those who voted in the negative were, J. M. Broomall, W. H. Koontz, G. V. Lawrence, Ulysses Mercur, and Stephen F. Wilson—five republicans and no democrats. And those who did not vote were, S. E. Ancona, B. M. Boyer, John L. Dawson, Charles Dennison, GLENNI W. SCOFIELD, M. Russell Thayer, and C. V. Culver—four democrats and three republicans. Now, I have never heard that any of these gentlemen returned any portion of their back pay into the Treasury. There was, however, one gentleman in that Congress who said that he would not take it—Mr. Hubbard, of West Virginia; but I find on examination he has since recanted. I have here a certificate showing that he also subsequently took his back pay, although he said on this floor and elsewhere that he never would.

So much, then, for the retroactive principle involved. It is admitted on all sides that we had the constitutional right to vote it; and I have shown you, Mr. Speaker, whom I shall stand with in history on this question when it shall be read in the future. I certainly shall not stand alone, but with the great mass of the Representatives from every State, whose reputations have always been without stain and without reproach.

In the Thirty-fourth Congress an increase was proposed from $8 per day to $3,000 per annum, and the latter of course without reference to the number of days employed. This was the first change from per diem to a stated annual salary. The mileage compensation was not then changed, but was left as before. This bill originated in the Senate, was introduced by Mr. A. P. Butler, of South Carolina, a prominent democrat, and was referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate on the 30th of July, 1856. It was reported from that committee with amendments on the 9th of August, 1856, by the Hon. R. M. T. Hunter, a democratic Senator from the State of Virginia.

On August 13, 1856, a test vote to lay the bill on the table was defeated by—yeas 9, nays 39; and I find that Mr. William Bigler and Mr. Richard Brodhead, Senators from Pennsylvania, both voted in the negative. The bill then passed the Senate by a vote of—yeas 35, nays 11; Messrs. Bigler and Brodhead voting in favor of its passage.

On the 15th of August, 1856, the Senate bill having been messaged to the House, Mr. Orr, of South Carolina, a prominent democrat, Representative then, and subsequently, in the next Congress, the Thirty-fifth, elected to the high position which you, Mr. Speaker, administer with so much judgment and impartiality toward each side—that gentleman moved to take up the bill. Objection was made; but the rules were suspended, and the bill was declared to be before the House for consideration, two-thirds of the House having voted therefor. Mr. Orr then offered an entirely new bill, in the nature of a substitute, fixing the pay at $3,000 per annum, the mileage to continue at 40 cents per mile, as in the then existing law. The bill therefore merely involved a change from $8 per diem during the session to $3,000 per annum, being an increase of 60 per cent. or thereabouts. After various legislative motions the substitute was adopted in the House, and the bill passed by—yeas 100, nays 99. It will be observed that any one change among those from Pennsylvania who voted in the affirmative to the negative, or the vote of any one absentee being cast in the negative, would have changed the final result.

The Senate subsequently concurred in the amendment of the House by a vote of 27 yeas to 12 nays. I will state here, in justice to Mr. Bigler, that he voted against concurrence by the Senate in the House amendments, because of its retroactive feature, as he said. Still he took the pay, both backward and forward, therein provided for. Mr. Brodhead voted to concur. The bill became a law by the signature of Franklin Pierce, then President of the United States.

During that debate in the Senate, Mr. Iverson, a democrat from Georgia, wanted "brief discussion and prompt and favorable action." Mr. Weller, a democrat from California, in that discussion objected to the passage of the bill because it reduced the pay of the Pacific Coast Senators and Representatives, and Delegates from the Territories of Oregon and Washington. He wanted a real increase. He stated that his mileage at that time was $5,425 each way; $10,850 in all. My mileage is $60, a most unjust difference.

Mr. Collamer was "perfectly satisfied that the pay of members of Congress should be increased; and further, he said it was alleged that a per diem induced long sessions and bad legislation, while an annual compensation shortened the session, and, more, limited the passage of injurious bills." He said in closing:

I am in favor of increasing the pay because I think it is right and just to do so.

Then Mr. Pratt, of Maryland, said:

Personally, I do not care one fig whether this bill passes or not. I think the compensation of members of Congress is much too low, and shall therefore vote, under certain circumstances, with great pleasure for the passage of the bill; but that will depend on an extraneous matter which I now want to state, and to get the views of the other side of the Chamber in reference to it.

Past history on this subject, to which the Senator from Vermont has referred, admonishes us that this was made a topic of discussion in the political canvass which then, as now, was approaching. Now, sir, if the passage of this bill is to be made by either party a political hobby in the canvass, I do not think the money we are to get is worth the trouble of meeting this question when we go before the people in the presidential canvass. I am informed that all on the other side of the Chamber are going for it. If so, there can be no difficulty about it; but that is what I wanted to ascertain. There are three parties in the country, each represented in this Chamber. If we all know it is a matter of right that there should be increased compensation, let us go together, and then neither can complain; and if we do not go together, and either of the parties goes against it, I shall go against it too.

Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, said:

To get rid of the difficulty of having long sessions you should put the per diem down to six dollars a day. I introduced my bill for the very purpose of making a just compensation to such persons as ought to serve in Congress. If you were to reduce the pay to three dollars a day or one dollar a day, you would have members of Congress; but who would be your members? You would make an aristocracy of wealth. Wealthy men would be very glad to come for one, two, three, or six dollars, or if you did not have that class of men, you would have needy adventurers who would put their hands up to the elbow into the Treasury to make money by their seats here. Either needy adventurers would be here, or wealthy men. That would be the result if you reduced the allowance.

Mr. Toombs, of Georgia, a gentleman, who with all his fire-eating qualities, will be recognized as a man of intelligent views and strict purity of character, in this discussion, said:

The principle of this Government as established in the Constitution, is, that the members of the two Houses of Congress shall be paid; and the rule ought to be a just compensation. Certainly, if paid at all, none would require that they should be paid less than their actual expenses.

He further said:

The members of the British Parliament get nothing, and the framers of the Constitution saw that two evils grew out of that. In the first place it shut out poor men and sent in jobbers, and then if poor men got there, it corrupted them.

Mr. Bell, of Tennessee, afterward candidate for the Presidency, said he wanted it limited to two Congresses to see whether an increase of pay would not limit the evils it was intended to obviate.

Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, the father and predecessor of the present Senator of that name from that State, said:

I shall, with great reluctance, be compelled to vote against this bill; and I do so in consequence of the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana. I have endeavored to give some attention to the question of the difference between the pay of members of different sections. I do not wish to reduce the pay of any member of Congress; but as I stated before the present system of mileage was adopted, when your country did not extend beyond three thousand miles, at the most. The ratio of difference was not then too great. Since the country has become extended, it has made the difference too great in proportion to the time occupied in transit from one place to another, in my judgment—and of course every man must go upon his own judgment—and, therefore, as that principle is adopted, I must necessarily vote against the bill, and only for that reason.

Mr. Bayard voted against laying the bill upon the table, and offered it on account of a clause relating to distributing books. He took the pay under the law.

The principle of retroactive pay disposed of, we next come to the question of an adequate amount of salary. In my judgment, this can best be reached correctly by every man's experience, and I believe he should be so controlled in his action and vote here.

Members of this House need not be timid in this matter because of the action of the Forty-second Congress. Those in that Congress who voted for the retroactive feature of the act now sought to be repealed alone are responsible for its enactment into law, and must alone bear the responsibility and burden of their conduct in this respect.

The question should therefore go as against the individual members who so voted, and be settled in the districts which they respectively represented, similar in manner as the tariff question was remitted to the congressional districts by the Cincinnati and Baltimore liberal and democratic conventions of last year.

So, I am of opinion that gentlemen on this floor should legislate irrespective of any past action, and vote a sufficient compensation to enable a member, with his family, to live here in economic comfort; for I give it as my experience of ten years, that the presence of a man's family (wife and children) is an immense protection, as well as a source of much happiness, after the day has been made weary in legislation and a change of thought is necessary.

During the first two years I served in Congress I received $3,000; during the six subsequent years that I served I received $5,000, and during the last two years I received $7,500. And never till within the last two years has my salary been adequate for the support of myself and family and the maintenance of a house in the district in which I live, so as to have that abiding place which gave me the ability to vote therein. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, having voted for this proposition of $7,500, simply because I believed it to be necessary to the economical support of a member of Congress and his family with him at the seat of Government, or without his family—for they must be, if not here, at home and supported there—I shall not change my voice nor alter my vote in this regard in any particular.

In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, the halls of Congress should be, by the payment of adequate salaries, open to the poor and intelligent, as well as to the rich, ignorant, and designing; and the salaries should be such as should and will keep Representatives beyond the reach of temptation, and free from the taint of corporate and job corruption.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HURLBUT. I desire to ask the Chair whether the pending motion is a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HURLBUT. I desire to move, in amendment, to recommit with instructions, so that the motion will read in the form in which I send it to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill under consideration be recommitted to the committee with instructions to report as a substitute for the first and second sections of the bill reported by the committee the bill offered as an amendment by Mr. HURLBUT, of Illinois, on page 15 of the bill No. 471 and amendments, as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall be at the rate of $6,000 per annum, payable monthly, and in addition thereto the actual individual expenses of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in going to and returning from the seat of Government once in each session, to be certified in writing by each.

SEC. 2. That the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be at the rate of $2,000 in addition to his pay as Representative, amounting in all to $8,000; and that of the Vice-President shall be the same amount, with the same allowance for traveling expenses as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Amend the title so as to read as follows: "A bill to establish the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates."

Mr. KASSON. As the hour approaches, Mr. Speaker, when the chairman of the committee has expressed his intention to move the previous question, I desire to call the attention of the House to the provisions of the two bills. It will be found, sir, on an examination of the bill introduced by the majority that it confines the repeal of the measure known as the increase of salary act simply to the clause which affects the compensation of members of Congress alone. On this one point I desire to say that the public demand upon which we are professing to act in this House has, so far as I know, in no instance confined itself to that part of the act which related to the compensation of members of Congress. On the contrary, the people have given more credit to the Forty-second Congress for acting upon principle, than some of you are now asking the Forty-third Congress to allow. They have objected to the increase in toto. The Forty-third Congress is now asked to vote that the increase was obnoxious only so far as it affected the compensation of the two Houses of Congress, and thus to impose a censure, almost personal in its character, on the members of the Forty-second Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the expressions of public opinion to which we propose to defer have always required that the increased salary act, so described, should be repealed, and that we should return substantially upon the old basis of compensation. So far as the repealing feature of this bill is concerned, it is necessary, logically, to go further, and to make that repeal general.

In the bill presented by the majority of the committee there is a clause for covering into the Treasury the sums which have been or shall be returned to it by the persons who have received the excess of salary. That clause is also in the bill of the minority. Beyond that, sir, the bills differ. It is proposed by the report of the minority of the committee, in its different clauses to repeal the entire act so far as it effects an increase of salaries, subject only to constitutional restraint. Now the question to which I call the attention of the House particularly is this: salaries throughout our history have not merely been fixed as compensation for services. They have also been arranged with reference to a certain respective grading of the executive and legislative officers and branches of the Government. Your first-class clerk, although he works as much as a fourth-class clerk in an Executive Department has never been allowed the compensation given to a fourth-class clerk. The chief clerk, who works as hard as the chief officer of a bureau, does not receive as much as the chief officer of a bureau. You regulate the compensation, in part, by the grade of the office, and that has been the uniform action of the Government. Heretofore, in our own legislative action, we have graded the presiding officers of the two Houses of Congress with the members of the Cabinet. Each House has insisted for itself that the rank and dignity which are represented in the heads of the respective Houses are to be maintained equal in this respect to the rank of the heads of the several Executive Departments of this Government. They have for many years been thus graded. You have gone further; you have affirmed repeatedly that it belongs to the dignity of a Senator and a Representative of the people that his compensation shall not be reduced below the compensation of a subordinate officer of the Executive Departments of the Untied States. You have always maintained that no officer of a rank beneath that of the head of an Executive Department should have a greater compensation than belongs to the representatives of the people and the representatives of the States.

And I thank the gentlemen of the last Congress that in rearranging their salaries they kept this principle in view. They did not ask the representatives of the people and of the States of this Union to vote themselves a grade below that of the subordinates in the Executive Departments. Sir, I say that this question ought to come home to the members of Congress in considering their present duty. Under the bill approved March 3, 1873, the pay of some of the assistants and subordinates of the Executive Departments was raised to $6,000. You are now asked by the bill of the majority of this committee not to repeal that increase, and thus to put the pay of Senators representing the States of this Union, and of Representatives of the people in this House down below the point where those subordinates are left by the bill reported by the majority of this committee. I for one shall protest against that relative degradation of the representatives of the people and of the States below Bureau officers in the Executive Departments. I object to it as a precedent; I object to it as an act of injustice in grading the relative compensation of this first legislative authority in the United States of America. You cannot pass this bill reported by a majority of the committee without effecting the relative degradation of the offices you hold by the will of the people on this floor, and which are held by Senators at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. Speaker, I must be permitted to call attention to another subject, which, having been absent for four years from Washington, I cannot fail to see on my return, and that is, that a certain element of personal Government, of aggrandizement of executive authority, irresponsible in a great degree to the legislative branch of the Government, has crept into the administration of affairs.

And when I see also that under the so-called civil service reform rules that have been adopted, the Representatives of the people and of the States have been notified that their communications to the Executive Departments are to go into the common pigeon-holes of the respective executive offices of the Government with no more force than if they came from the most unrepresenting and irresponsible character in the United States, I think it is time for us to consider whether there is not melting away from the legislative authority of the country, and particularly from the people's Representatives, that power which they certainly had during the war and in the administration of Mr. Lincoln. And in this connection is found one great objection to the legislation proposed by the majority of the committee, to which I wish earnestly to get the attention of the House.

We find that the representatives of the people are touched from Executive sources in another direction. It is declared that the time shall soon come when for the representatives of the State at the other end of the Capitol mansions should be built at the public expense to surround the Executive authority of this government in this city. Not only this, but we also have it intimated from the Executive branch of the government, that it is necessary to amend the Constitution of the United States, in order to diminish the power of the legislative branch of the government. It is proposed, by one unconscious of its perilous results, that when Congress, the representatives of the people and of the States, shall have enacted a law embracing various subjects affecting the government of this country, power shall be given by constitutional amendment to the Executive Department to destroy, at the will of the Executive, any part of that legislation, and that any part may become law by the same Executive will. I find, Mr. Speaker, so much of this drift at Washington toward the aggrandizement of the Executive branch of the government, and to the depreciation of the Legislative, that I want no principle established by our action here to-day which will indicate our willingness to still further surrender the legislative dignity and the legislative control of the people of the United States.

Now, sir, when you come to the bills in question, you find that that reported by the minority of the committee proposes by reducing all salaries to preserve the relative gradation of rank as affected by the grade of compensation. You are asked by the majority bill to indorse the increase of executive salaries that was put in the bill of March 3, and by that act to increase relatively the dignity of the executive offices. I cannot for one consent to that, unless I am forced to do it under the previous question. The bill of the minority presents the questions in separate sections, and if the previous question does not prevail, I shall offer for the consideration of the House the substitute reported by the minority, in order that all these questions may be brought up and acted on by the House, so that they may take care that they do not destroy the relative dignity of their own body and of the two great departments of the Government. Every member may then have an opportunity to place himself upon record on the different subjects as he sees proper. If the previous question does not prevail, I shall ask the consideration of the substitute first, as offered by the minority of the committee, and in that connection also the consideration of such amendments as may be offered in the House, so that every gentleman shall have an opportunity to put the bill in better shape than it is found now, if such is the will of a majority of the House.

I beg also to call attention to the fifth section of the bill of the minority of the committee. That section, affecting the compensation of Congress, was drawn separately, with a design to facilitate action on the report of the committee. That report points out two modes of decreasing the compensation. One is by simply restoring the old law; and the other is by accumulating the salary and all allowances in one sum, which, I think gentlemen are just in supposing, might be more satisfactory to the people of the United States. In my own State, at the last session of the General Assembly, all allowances were combined with the salary, and the salary was fixed by law. The argument for that is, that in that case the people understand distinctly how much the compensation is, and all subsidiary allowances are eliminated. Consequently, any gentleman can move to strike out the fifth section of the bill, and insert what shall, under that rule, come to the same result. If gentlemen think that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on my left [Mr. TOWNSEND] accomplishes that purpose, let them move it as a substitute for the section. If they are of opinion that the reduction of pay ought not to retroact till the 4th of March, they will move to strike out the provisio of the section. The bill is so drawn and adjusted that gentlemen can get at the sense of the majority of the House without interfering with the general purport of the bill.

For that reason I venture to express the hope that the House will, by not seconding the previous question, enable us to get at these questions, including the amendments, that have been printed at the request of members on both sides of the House. I desire to make this explanation especially because some gentlemen have requested me to do it, and were under misapprehension in respect to the provisions of the two bills.

Yesterday it was remarked that the bill of the minority affected the pay of the judges of the Supreme Court. That is an error, for the reason which has been stated—the impossibility of making a reduced rate of pay to affect all judges alike. That feature of the bill of the 3d of March last, and that alone, is left unchanged; and there is nothing in the bill of the minority which affects the compensation of the judges of the Supreme Court. I hope the previous question will be voted down. I believe that I have now discharged all the duty that devolves upon me in connection with the report of the minority.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Forty-second Congress, I favored an increase of the salaries of the Executive, the Cabinet ministers, and the judges; indeed, I thought the latter were not made enough. I also favored an increase of the salary of members of Congress, but not beyond $6,500 a year; and I opposed the back-pay feature. My language in the House on this branch of the subject was as follows:

> Mr. POTTER. In respect of salaries of members of Congress the House knows very well that in my view the salary fixed by the conference committee is too high. My notion is that the salary of members of Congress should be just enough to support them plainly, to enable them to pay their way here, and yet not enough to make any one seek the office merely for the salary; and from all the attention I have been able to give the subject I have thought $6,500 was such a sum. I have thought, also, that the increase ought not to apply to the present Congress.

I voted, Mr. Speaker, in accordance with those views; by voting to bring before the House the salary measure, and by also voting for such provisions as I have indicated. And when finally the bill came back from the conference committee not in the form in these respects which I approved, by voting against it. Since then, Mr. Speaker, I have had no occasion to change the views I then held.

When I first came to Congress I thought it would be well to have members serve here without pay. My experience here has altered my opinions in that regard. I have found that a large number of the most useful and most independent members of this House were men whose salaries were their sole reliance for their support. This, indeed, is not usually true of the Representatives from the great cities. In the great cities the expense of living are so much higher than in the country, and the returns for the same labor so much larger, that men from the cities cannot well afford to give up their business and come here, unless they have other means than their salaries to live upon. It will thus be found, I think, that the Representatives from the great cities are usually men who have some independent means of their own. But I have found that men of the highest parts and usefulness are able to come here from the rural districts and give their services for the compensation which existed before the change made by the late law. Among the gentlemen with whom I served in the Forty-first and Forty-second Congresses perhaps no one impressed me more highly for his abillty, patriotism, integrity, and fairness—as tested from day to day by that most trying of tests, his conduct in this House—than a gentleman on the other side of the House, the chairman of an important committee, who, after long years of public service—the value of which I judge to have many times exceeded his salary—found himself at the close of the Forty-second Congress, as he had been during all that time, without other means than his salary for his support. Such Representatives should not be lost to the public service, as they would be, if members had to serve in Congress as they do in parliament, without pay. In such a Congress, only the rich or those having some job to effect, could afford to serve. A Congress wholly of rich men would not represent the people. A Congress of jobbers would form about the worst conceivable government.

It seems to me, sir, that the true measure of compensation for a Representative in Congress should be that sum which, while enabling him to live plainly here, would not make the office desirable to any man for its emoluments alone. It is, undoubtedly, difficult to fix exactly upon what that sum is; but in my judgment it should not—having regard to the scale of other official salaries—exceed $6,500.

Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believe that it is not the duty of a Representative blindly to follow the will or instructions of his constituents. There are times when a Representative's highest duty to his constituents and to his country may require that he should follow rather his own judgment than what may for the time be the ruling opinion of the people.

But upon the question of our own compensation, upon a question of which we are ex necessitate judges in our own case, it seems to me that we should by every principle of propriety be controlled in our action by the will which the people have expressed.

If, therefore, I had thought that the salary bill of the last session was entirely right, which I did not, I should, in view of the expressed public opinion, feel bound to now favor its repeal. I shall not only now vote to repeal it, but I shall also seek to prevent either the mileage or the franking privilege being restored. Of the various bills before the House, I therefore prefer that of the minority of the committee; and while I think that if the franking and mileage abuses are cut off, some increase in the salary beyond $5,000 and average mileage would be proper, I also think that increase should not be made operative except for Congresses that come after this.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. NESMITH.]

Mr. NESMITH. I had not the honor of a seat in the Forty-second Congress; therefore I am not responsible in any wise for its acts. But, without proposing to cast censure upon any person, I should have preferred to cast my vote for the repeal of the salary law as instructed by my constituents who sent me here, and whose instructions to me, at least, are a paramount law. I should have done so had it not been for a remark which fell from the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] in the discussion the day before yesterday with my friend from New York, [Mr. COX.] In that discussion the gentleman from Pennsylvania made a statement which implied something improper in the drawing of the salary of the gentleman from New York, inasmuch as he was here to fill a vacancy. In order to be exact, I will quote what the gentleman from Pennsylvania then said:

> For the period from June 4 to November 5 the gentleman drew from the public Treasury $3,125; and, in accordance with his own statement a few moments ago, he was only made a member by election on the 5th of November.

This statement would seem to imply that there was something improper in the member from New York drawing the salary from the period of the decease of his predecessor. Now, as there are a few of us on this floor, myself among the rest, who are in the same category with the distinguished gentleman from New York—and in saying "in the same category" I for myself specifically deny any claim to "the dew-drop"—I desire to say that as we are in the same category I think it would be proper to have read the law upon that subject, as the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania made an omission when he was called upon to refer specifically to the law, and seemed to dodge the question. I therefore desire the Clerk to read two sections of the law under which those who come in as successors of deceased members are entitled to compensation. And in this connection I desire to say that we drew our salary under a pre-existing law for which we are in no way responsible.

The Clerk read as follows:

By the joint resolution of March 3, 1859, it is provided that whenever, hereafter, any member of the House of Representatives shall die after the commencement of the Congress to which he shall have been elected, compensation shall be computed and paid his widow, or, if no widow survive him, to his heirs-at-law, for the period that shall have elapsed from the commencement of such Congress as aforesaid: Provided, That compensation shall be computed and paid in all cases for a period of not less than three months; and in no case shall constructive mileage be computed or paid. The compensation of each person elected or appointed afterward to supply the vacancy so occasioned shall hereafter be computed and paid from the time the compensation of his predecessor is hereby directed to be computed and paid for, and not otherwise.—Stat. at Large, Vol. XI, pp. 442, 443.

By the joint resolution of July 12, 1862, it is provided that in all cases of vacancy in either House of Congress, by death or otherwise, of any member elected or appointed thereto, after the commencement of the Congress to which he shall have been elected, each person afterward elected or appointed to fill such vacancy shall be compensated and paid from the time that the compensation of his predecessor ceased: Provided, That no member shall receive for his compensation more than three thousand dollars for any one year.—Stat. at Large, Vol. XII, p. 624.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker: Having been a member of the Forty-second Congress, I deem it due alike to my constituents and to myself that I should say a word on the pending bill.

The Constitution of the United States provides that "the Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law and paid out of the Treasury of the United States." Thus is given to Congress the right and thus is imposed the duty of fixing the compensation of its own members. When and how it shall exercise this right and perform this duty is a question for it alone to determine. If it exercises it unwisely, its members must answer to their constituents; but the abuse of a power is not an argument against its existence. It is directly the reverse; for there can be no abuse of that which does not exist. Nor is it here a material inquiry whether the framers of our Constitution acted wisely in committing to Congress, without limitation, the power to regulate the compensation of its members. It is enough for us to know that, after the fullest discussion, the States refused to abridge this power, or in any manner qualify its exercise. Hence it rests alone with Congress to say what shall be the compensation of its members, when it shall be changed, and, if changed, whether it shall be increased or decreased.

In the exercise of this undoubted constitutional right, the last Congress increased the compensation of Senators and Representatives nominally from $5,000 to $7,500 per annum. I say nominally, for the actual increase was much less on the average than these figures would at first indicate. The mileage previously allowed was 20 cents for each member from his home to Washington and back for each session. In the last Congress there were three sessions, and hence several members were entitled to nearly as much mileage as salary. In addition, each member was allowed $125 per annum for stationery. The bill increasing the salaries abolished the allowance for stationery entirely, and allowed no mileage for the Forty-second Congress, but in the future allowed actual traveling expenses. What the general average increase to each member would be, I am unable now to say; but I suppose, from $1,000 to $1,500 per year. The franking privilege was also abolished; but as its abolition did not take effect until last July, the additional expense which it imposed upon members should not be considered in reference to the last Congress.

Such, in brief, was the law of the 3d of March last so far as it applied to us. I voted against it from first to last, and I shall consistently vote for its repeal. But when the bill passed Congress, and became a law by the approval of the President, I accepted the salary which it declared was legally mine, and I have kept it, and I intend to keep it.

If the last Congress, instead of increasing the compensation of members, had decreased it, say from five thousand to three thousand dollars, what it was before the act of July 28, 1866, as it would clearly have had the power to do, what member would have been guilty of the ridiculous folly of demanding the old salary, and of claiming that he had been elected upon the basis of a contract, and that therefore his pay could not be reduced during his term? And yet if there is, as alleged, an implied contract that the salary shall not be increased, the same contract would forbid its decrease, and those members who have been elected since the 3d of March last would, upon this assumption, be justified in claiming the full pay allowed by law at the time of their election. The simple statement of the proposition shows its absurdity.

Some gentlemen have drawn the increased salary and donated it to religious or charitable purposes. But if they had a right to take it, they had a right to keep it; and if they had no right to take it, they had no right to give it away. If it was stolen, as has been repeatedly charged, the old maxim of the law applies with all its force, that the receiver is equally guilty with the thief.

But, Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives has been especially censured for the passage of this measure. I recognize fully the right of public criticism. I recognize not only the right but the duty of the press to hold to a strict account the servants of the people. The newspaper is an engine of tremendous power, and when conducted by intelligence and governed by a sense of justice, it is the safeguard of every honest public man and the conservator of republican institutions. Therefore no one has cause to complain of fair criticism, prompted by just motives and a desire to defend and promote correct principles. But this increase of salaries has furnished the pretext and the opportunity for the most unparalleled exhibition of personal and party malice that this country has ever witnessed. The storm of defamation of private character has raged with relentless fury; but every one, conscious of the rectitude of his own motives, can safely appeal, in the end, for his vindication, to the calm and deliberate judgment of all candid men.

Now, how was this bill passed? The House, after having emphatically refused to increase the salaries from $5,000 to $7,500, agreed to the increase to $6,500, upon the close vote of 100 yeas to 97 nays, upon the express understanding that the mileage abuse should be corrected. The bill passed the House in this form on the 1st of March, and went to the Senate, and I hold in my hand the record of that body on the bill, which I will embody in my remarks.

In the Senate the votes stood as follow:

March 1, 1873, Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, moved to strike out of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill all increase of compensation, except as to that of the President.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boreman, Buckingham, Caldwell, Casserly, Chandler, Cole, Corbett, Cragin, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harlan, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Pratt, Sherman, Thurman, Wilson, and Wright—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Bayard, Blair, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hill, Kelley, Lewis, Logan, Machen, Morton, Norwood, Nye, Pool, Ramsey, Ransom, Rice, Robertson, Sawyer, Schurz, Spencer, Stevenson, Stewart, Trumbull, Vickers, and West—38.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Ferry of Connecticut, Hitchcock, Johnston, Osborn, Patterson, Pomeroy, Saulsbury, Scott, Sprague, Stockton, Sumner, Tipton, and Windom—15.

So the Senate refused to strike out.

Mr. Edmunds moved to amend by striking out all in the House amendment that related to members of Congress.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted as follows, to wit:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Buckingham, Casserly, Chandler, Cole, Corbett, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Harlan, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pratt, Schurz, Sherman, Thurman, Windom, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Ames, Blair, Brownlow, Caldwell, Cameron, Carpenter, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Fenton, Flanagan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Texas, Hill, Kelly, Lewis, Machen, Norwood, Nye, Poole, Ramsey, Ransom, Rice, Robertson, Sawyer, Spencer, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Tipton, Trumbull, Vickers, and West—36.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Ferry of Connecticut, Hitchcock, Johnston, Logan, Osborn, Patterson, Pomeroy, Saulsbury, Scott, Sprague, Sumner, and Wilson—13.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am so well satisfied from the votes of the Senate that they are in favor of this (the House) amendment, that I move that the Senate concur in it, and we will try it that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted as follows, to wit:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard and Stockton—2.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Ames, Anthony, Blair, Boreman, Brownlow, Buckingham, Cameron, Carpenter, Casserly, Chandler, Conkling, Cooper, Corbet, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hill, Hitchcock, Howe, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, Machen, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Pool, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sawyer, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Tipton, Trumbull, Vickers, West, Wilson, Windom, and Wright—55.

ABSENT—Messrs. Caldwell, Clayton, Cole, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harlan, Johnston, Nye, Osborne, Patterson, Pomeroy, Rice, Sprague, Stewart, and Sumner—16.

So the Senate refused to concur in the amendment of the House.

March 3, 1873. The conference report fixing the compensation of members of Congress at $7,500 being up for consideration, Mr. Wright moved that the report be recommitted to the committee of conference, with instructions to strike out all except the increase of the President's compensation.

Mr. TRUMBULL raised the point of order that it was not competent for the Senate to instruct a committee of conference. It is subversive of the very idea of conference—a conference must be full and free.

The presiding officer overruled the point of order.

Mr. TRUMBULL appealed from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER said: The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted as follows, to wit:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony Boreman, Chandler, Ferry of Michigan, Hamilton of Maryland, Harlan, Howe, Pratt, Sherman, Sprague, and Wright—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Blair, Brownlow, Buckingham, Caldwell, Cameron, Carpenter, Casserly, Clayton, Cole, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Hill, Hitchcock, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, Machen, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Nye, Osborn, Patterson, Pool, Ramsey, Ransom, Rice, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sawyer, Schurz, Scott, Stevenson, Stewart, Tipton, Trumbull, Vickers, West, and Windom—46.

ABSENT—Messrs. Ames, Corbett, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Johnston, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pomeroy, Spencer, Stockton, Sumner, Thurman, and Wilson—16.

So the decision was overruled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. WRIGHT moved to recommit the report without instructions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT said: Tthe [question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa[Mr. WRIGHT] to recommit the report.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted as follows, to wit:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Buckingham, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Harlan, Kelly, Morrill of Vermont, Pratt, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Thurman, Windom, and Wright—24.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alcorn, Ames, Bayard, Blair, Brownlow, Caldwell, Cameron, Carpenter, Casserly, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Flanagan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, of Texas, Hill, Hitchcock, Howe, Lewis, Logan, Machen, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Nye, Osborn, Patterson, Pool, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sawyer, Spencer, Stewart, Stockton, Tipton, Trumbull, Vickers, and West—40.

ABSENT—Messrs. Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Johnston, Morton, Pomeroy, Rice, Stevenson, Sumner, and Wilson—9.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted as follows, to wit:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Ames, Bayard, Blair, Brownlow, Caldwell, Cameron, Carpenter, Clayson, Cooper, Davis, Flanagan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Texas, Hill, Hitchcock, Lewis, Logan, Machen, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Nye, Osborn, Pool, Ransom, Rice, Robertson, Sawyer, Spencer, Stewart, Stockton, Tipton, Trumbull, Vickers, and West—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Buckingham, Casserly, Chandler, Conkling, Corbett, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Howe, Kelly, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Thurman, Windom, and Wright—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cole, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Harlan, Johnston, Morton, Pomeroy, Stevenoen, Sumner, and Wilson—10.

So the report was concurred in, and the bill passed.

It will be seen, from this record, that the Senate refused to agree to the sum of $6,500, not because it was opposed to any increase, but because the increase proposed by the House was not enough. The Senate persisting in its refusal to agree to the action of the House, the bill went to a committee of conference, as a majority of the Senate had determined it should, and by the tenacity of the Senate members that committee, after sitting nine hours on Sunday, agreed to report the sum of $7,500 as the salary, and the bill, so reported, was passed in the Senate by 36 yeas to 27 nays, and in the House by 102 yeas to 96 nays.

That the passage of this measure was inexpedient and unwise I believed at the time, and still believe. But as I had steadily opposed it, I felt that wherever the responsibility for its passage might rest, it was not upon me.

But, Mr. Speaker, this action of Congress, however injudicious, was not without precedent, as the history of the increase of salaries abundantly shows. Let me examine, for a moment, the instances which Congress has given of its clear constitutional right to fix the compensation of its members. There are six of them.

The first is the act of September 22, 1789, approved by President Washington, which gave seven months' back pay. The next is the act of March 19, 1816, giving twelve months' back pay, and approved by Madison. The next is the act of December 1, 1817, approved by Monroe, and giving two months' back pay. The next is the act of August 16, 1856, approved by Pierce, giving seventeen months' back pay, about $2,200; a net increase for the Congress of about $3,840. The following-named members from my own State voted for this bill: Thomas B. Florence, Job R. Tyson, William Millward, Jacob Broom, John Hickman, A. E. Roberts, John C. Kunkel, James H. Campbell, Henry M. Fuller, John J. Pearce, John Covode, Samuel A. Purviance, and David Barclay.

Of the Senators from Pennsylvania, both democrats, Mr. Brodhead voted for the bill, while Mr. Bigler voted against it; but all the members and both Senators from Pennsylvania took the money, and, so far as I have ever known, have kept it. Senator Douglas voted for the bill, and every Senator and Representative accepted the increased salary. Senator Brodhead is dead; but Senator Bigler is living, and no member of either party stands higher than he today in the confidence and respect of the people of Pennsylvania.

The next increase was by the act of July 28, 1866, which was approved by President Johnson. The increase by this act was from $3,000 to $5,000 a year, a net increase of $4,000 per Congress; and it allowed back pay for sixteen months, amounting to about $2,700, and continued the old mileage of 20 cents a mile to and from Washington. The following-named members from Pennsylvania voted for this bill: Samuel J. Randall, Charles O'Neill, Leonard Myers, W. D. Kelley, Myer Strouse, Philip Johnson, George F. Miller, A. J. Glossbrenner, A. A. Barker, and J. K. Moorehead—four democrats and six republicans.

Among the republicans I find the name of my friend, Hon. A. A. Barker, the Representative at that time from my district, and my competitor for a seat here in the canvass of last year. He received the cordial support of his party press in the district; and, indeed, the republican papers there, whose indignation now against "salary grabbers," as they term them, is the fiercest, were then the loudest in his praise.

Of the Senators from Pennsylvania both Mr. Buckalew and Mr. Cowan voted for the bill, with Senators Doolittle, Hendricks, and others. All the Senators and Members took the money and "placed it where it would do the most good." Mr. Doolittle was the president of the last democratic national convention; Mr. Hendricks is the present democratic governor of Indiana; and Mr. Buckalew was the democratic candidate for governor of Pennsylvania last year. Now, if the charges of a portion of the public press against certain members of the last Congress are true, then all these illustrious men stand before the country as "salary grabbers," "robbers," and "thieves;" and the democratic party, which has crowned them with its highest honors since the commission of the crime, stands guilty before the world of supporting "robbers" and "thieves" for the most exalted stations in the gift of the State. Nor does the black catalogue end here; Presidents Washington, Madison, Monroe, Pierce, and Johnson should be added to the list of criminals; for each of them approved bills regulating the compensation of Senators and Representatives which embraced the retroactive feature.

It is no answer to tell me that the bill of the 3d of March last is condemned by the country. Many a bad law has been made by good men, and many a good law has been made by bad men. Had Congress the right to do what it did? If it had, from whom did it get the right? From the people, expressly placed by them in the fundamental law of the Republic. The power given by the people was in this case, in my judgment, unwisely exercised, and the bill should be promptly repealed; but, while saying this, I know that others, of larger experience and better judgment than myself, think otherwise. But as the question relates, not to the policy of the Government, but solely to its expenditures, the will of the people should be our supreme law.

I have, Mr. Speaker, briefly referred to the precedents on this subject. I do not affirm that they are binding upon us, or that they should be blindly followed; but I do say, that, having been established by men of the most eminent character, and of all parties, from the very foundation of the Government, they are at least entitled to respectful consideration. And it is alike unmanly and unjust to assail with charges of personal dishonesty and political treachery those whose only offense is that they have walked in the footsteps of the most illustrious men, both living and dead, that the country has known.

It has been said, and I admit its force, that it is indelicate for members of Congress to vote upon their own compensation. It is indelicate; but how is it to be avoided? The Senate is a perpetual body; only one-third of its members go out every two years. Now, if a new salary bill were passed to-day, to take effect in 1876, two-thirds of the present Senators at least would draw their pay under it; and also a large number of the present members of the House; for, judging from the past, not less than half the members of this House will be in the next Congress. A constitutional amendment definitely fixing the compensation would afford a remedy. But without this the control of the subject will remain with each Congress. The objection most frequently heard to the act of 3d March is directed to what is known as the "back-pay" feature; but when the constitutional right of Congress to fix the compensation of its members is admitted, as it must be, then it can make no difference, in law or morals, whether it exercises that right on the first day, the middle day, or the last day of the session. It not unfrequently happens that a bill introduced on the first day of the session is not passed until the last.

Many persons, while earnestly condemning the increase for the past, say this salary is right for the future. Their position to me is singularly inconsistent. Which is the worse, or which is the better, to take the pay after you have performed the service, or to take it nine months before you have performed it, and when you may not live to perform any part of it? Suppose those gentlemen who returned their increased pay for the Forty-second Congress, but who have been drawing the increase since last March, had died the first day of this month? They would have in their pockets nearly six thousand dollars of front pay for which they had not rendered an hour's service. I denounce not those who took back pay or front pay, for I have received both; but to me it is utterly and logically absurd to censure a member for having accepted increased compensation for service performed, and to justify him in taking increased compensation for service not performed, and which may never be performed. Nearly all the members of this Congress—both Senators and Representatives—were elected before the salaries were increased, and hence upon the basis of the old pay. The last Congress had three regular sessions, while this one will have but two. Now, why should members of the Forty-third Congress, for less service, be entitled to more compensation than members of the Forty-second, when they were all alike elected before the increase was made? If there is any sound reason for such a distinction I have yet to hear it. And why should any man, elected to both Congresses before the increase was made, refuse it for the one, and that the one in which he performed the most service, and yet accept it for the other?

Retrenchment and repeal are the demands of the hour, and it is our bounden duty to hear and heed these demands. But while we profess reform, let us practice it. The pending bill repeals the law of March 3, as to Senators and members, but after this Congress, it restores the monstrous abuse of the old mileage. When members had to come here in stages or on horseback, there was justice in paying them 20 cents a mile each way; but now, when a member gets into the cars at San Francisco and rides to Washington on a free pass, it is a gross outrage on the people to pay him, as this bill proposes to do, over five hundred dollars mileage. If the old law had not been repealed, the Delegate from Washington Territory in the last Congress would have drawn $3,517.65 mileage; the member from Oregon, $3,900; the member from Nevada, $3,313; the members from California a little less, and so on with several other States and Territories. And now our committee of reform, professedly so anxious to serve the country, propose to re-establish this hoary-headed abuse, and pay a member of this House from Maryland $5,000 a year, while a member from Oregon would get $9,000. It was largely in consideration of the abolition of this mileage evil that the bill increasing our salaries to $7,500 was passed. I remember well when the gentleman from California [Mr. SARGENT] now a Senator from that State, who opposed the increase to $7,500, rose on this floor and said that, as a member from California, he had time and again had this mileage abuse flouted in his face, and he wanted it stricken down. I am utterly opposed to its restoration, and, therefore, I have offered the following amendment as a proviso to the second section of the bill:

That the mileage previously allowed by law shall not be restored; but instead thereof actual traveling expenses only shall be paid.

As we enter at the opening of this Congress upon reform, let us make it intelligent, earnest, honest reform. Let the word of promise made to the public ear not be broken to the public hope.

The act of last March, so far as it increased official salaries, was unwise and obnoxious to the people. It was passed by the votes of members of both parties; but the President could in an instant have struck it dead. He preferred to make it a law, and by his own act he will receive an additional $100,000 during his present term, for no action of Congress can affect him. The party in power, by the consent of the nation, claim and receive the credit and the honor for legislation that is wise and good. So, by every principle of political justice, must they meet and bear the responsibility for legislation which the people condemn. Such is the theory of our Government, and such the verdict of our national history.

Correcting, then, in proper deference to the popular will, the errors of the past, so far as we can, let us next and promptly address ourselves to the pressing duties of the future, and join hands in an honest effort to legislate for the common good of the people and the common glory of the Republic.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CROCKER. Mr. Speaker, I crave the indulgence of this Chamber for a few minutes. I had intended, if I got the floor at an earlier period, to treat upon this subject at some length; but in the present stage of the discussion, when it has been so completely gone over, and when men have gone clear back to the time of Christ in search of information, I deem it my duty to do no more than to place myself right upon the records. I owe that much, at least, to myself, to the House, and to the constituency whom I have left at home and who have returned me here by an overwhelming majority.

At the time the salary bill came up I deemed it inopportune. I did not think it was then a proper time to increase salaries. We had just gone through an internecine struggle to save the national life which had exhausted the whole country, North and South, East and West, and I did not feel that it became us to yield to any increase of pay whatever. I opposed it at that time in season and out of season. I did everything in my humble way, except by speeches upon the floor, to prevent its passage. But, sir, while I did that, I am not the man to attempt to affix the brand of condemnation upon those who acted differently from me at that time. I believe they were as honest and as sincerely desirous to do their duty as I was to do mine. I am not here to believe that those who have been branded over and over again for their action on this salary bill are any worse than I am myself. Perhaps, sir, they are much better.

There were various things which occurred at that time to which I will allude for a moment. I shall speak briefly. There were various things at that time brought to the consideration of the House which led those gentlemen to act as they did. I mean to be, and if I know my own heart I am, a candid man, acting according to the dictates of my own conscience. At that time there were charges of corruption made which were spread broadcast throughout the country, made against members in this and the other branch of Congress; and there was a feeling here among some of the best thinking and wisest men upon the floor of the House that it was our duty to increase the pay to such an extent that members would be removed from any and all temptation. Such was the feeling which existed at the time, as every member knows. Many members came to me and said they could not pay their actual expenses, and if the pay were not increased would have to go home in debt. I felt that, and appreciated the motive which actuated those who honestly differed from me in the course which they took at that time.

There is another thing. It was felt that the abolition of the franking privilege, the abolition of mileage, and the abolition of our stationery allowance went very far towards counterbalancing the increase of our pay. I promised to be brief, and I am watching the dial of that clock; but I want to allude to another thing, which is not understood, I believe, on the floor of the House very fully. I do not say it in any disparagement of the city of Washington, for I am proud of the city; but I do say, Mr. Speaker, that there is not so expensive a place to live in, within my knowledge, anywhere, in any capital of the world, as this very city of Washington. My friend from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] saw a placard "Farmers to the front, and politicians to the rear." I wish he would invite farmers here with their families, and let them stay for a fortnight, and, my word for it, they will begin to feel it down here, [slapping his pockets, amid great laughter.] Farmers to the front! They are good men; but if they bring their families and stay here, I would like to see their pockets at the end of the month. [Laughter.] I have lived in London and Paris, and I say that there is no capital where the expenses of living are so high as in Washington. What is the reason? The cities of London and Paris live upon trade. What does this city live upon? I do not blame them; they are obliged to do it, and we have to face the music. [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. Say what it is.

Mr. CROCKER. Do you want to know? Look at your bills. A hundred dollars a week is what I have to pay for myself and my wife. I wanted to bring my family here, and I began to look to see where I was going to land myself. [Laughter.] But I promised to be short, Mr. Speaker. [Cries of "Go on."] No, I won't. [Great laughter.] But I will say a word about back pay, about which we have heard so much. And I am in that category. [Laughter.] Yes, I am in it. I have collected all my pay here according to law—every cent; and nobody need ask me about it. In regard to the back pay let me say that when I returned from Congress at first, without knowing what the country thought about it, I asked various members with whom I was intimate if they would join me in an association in order to leave the pay entirely. That was my feeling at the time. Mine was a small matter, Mr. Speaker; I was only here a fraction of the term. Old as I am—and I believe I am the oldest member in the House—I was a mere parvenue, a neophyte, here; I had been here only a very little while, and had got a very small sum of money. Well, I tried to get a little company to join me, as I have said, and I failed. [Laughter.] I found some noble men who had great doubts about it, but who finally concluded that they would give their back pay for the improvement and education of the young. I found there were all sorts of plans. and then I finally deposited my own in one of my banks. Thinks I, it will lie there safe enough. After a while I became grievously sick. I had not made up my mind—I had not actually made up my mind—what my conscientious duty was. So, being very sick, I called my confidential clerk, and said, "Here, put the amount to the credit of the United States. It is a small amount, but there will be enough effects to meet it, and my executors will take care of it." [Laughter.] I did it because I intended to do right about the matter. Now comes the sequel. I began to get better. [Roars of laughter.] I took up one paper, and it told me I was a "salary stealer;" I took up another, and it said I was a "salary grabber;" and another one said this, and another one said that; and then by and by I began to open letters on the subject, and have continued to do so up to this day, and so long as this clamor continues, unless by the act of this House here, that money will lie where it lies now. [Laughter.]

Now, I say that boldly. I do not act from intimidation. I act only from my own sense of duty to my God and my country. I had a letter since I have been here which gives us a glorious idea. I think something was said by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] to-day, that we ought to lead public opinion a little. But I got a letter the other day informing me that the best place for me was down at Blackwell's Island, and that I should find some company there that was very congenial. [Great laughter.] Now, sir, I was sent here to this House, to take the oath administered by yourself, by every vote in my own city, where I have disbursed millions and millions of dollars. But if, in coming here, I am to be called a salary thief, I shall retain that money until there is a better feeling in the country, unless Congress shall vote in the matter and direct otherwise; and then I shall cheerfully pay my little stipend into the Treasury. In closing, I appeal to my friends on this floor that we will come to some conclusion at once, and let it be a unanimous one. I have been gratified to-day by the dignity and decorum and propriety which have characterized our debate. It is worthy of such a House of Representatives, emanating from the most free and glorious Republic that the sun ever shone upon.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey. The embarrassment in regard to this subject seems to depend upon this, that under the Constitution of the United States, the Congress must necessarily fix the compensation of the members of that Congress, or the compensation of members of some succeeding Congress. The difficulty, therefore, which hangs around this question is, that men are thus oftentimes made the judges in their own cause; that gentlemen who vote for a rate of compensation of members of the Congress of which they are themselves members must necessarily be judges in their own cause. That, I think, is one of the great embarrassments which attends this subject, because if the salary could be fixed by some body or some party outside of the persons who are to be affected by it directly, then there would be less difficulty about the question.

Now, so far as the question of salary is concerned, I take it that it is out of the power of this Congress to change the past. The salary fixed by the last Congress was lawful under the Constitution of the United States, whether it was wise and proper or not. Those gentlemen who took that salary took it under the law of the land, and so far as the law of the land is concerned they were entitled to it. A repeal of that law could not in justice be so made as to be retroactive, and take away the right of compensation either of the party who received it or of the party who was entitled to it but has not yet received it. The right to the salary becomes vested under the act of Congress, whether received or not. Therefore as it seems to me with reference to the past, while we wish to deal practically with this subject, we must deal with it as a thing fixed.

Now, then, with reference to the future. It strikes me that it is the sense of the country that the old rate of compensation we established prior to the last Congress, independent of mileage, was the true test and criterion. Then if you take the rate of compensation established prior to the last Congress, leaving out the question of mileage and let the mileage be represented by the actual expense of travel of members of Congress, you will then be placed in this position, you will have a rate of compensation which the country at large has acquiesced in.

That is a great gain. You will have a rate of compensation which was fixed by a Congress including many persons who are not members of this Congress.

It strikes me, therefore, that this bill should be framed so as not to be retroactive—not to touch the past; for to attempt to touch the past would, on legal principles, be of no avail. The expressions we have heard on that subject can never be embodied in any act of Congress, for any useful practical purposes. As to the executive officers of the Government; as to the President of the United States, for instance, while certainly he is not too highly compensated, it would have been best, so far as he is concerned, if you had not increased his salary to the extent you have, but have made provision for a retiring pension. Who can ever be President of the United States and then afterwards go back and take part in the ordinary affairs and pursuits of life? The country does not ask it, and the public at large would not acquiesce in it.

It seems to me, then, that this whole question could be solved by simply going back to the status which we were in before the enactment of the last Congress, except in relation to the matter of mileage. Do that, and leave it there; leave those gentlemen who received their compensation to retain it in peace and quiet, for they have had it under the laws of the land. It is a matter with them and their own consciences. In that way, at all events, we would put an end to this question for some years to come.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not wish long to occupy the attention of the House; but I desire to make a single remark or two in support of an amendment which I saw fit to offer when amendments were being received. I believe that there is but just one way to extricate ourselves from the difficulties that surround us at this moment. We have here a majority report and a minority report, and a large number of amendments, involving different and conflicting provisions. We are, therefore, surrounded by difficulties from which we must early free ourselves, or we may be compelled to vote in a direction contrary to our real convictions. The amendment which I have offered reads as follows:

That the law approved March 3, 1873, increasing the salaries of the President, Senators, Representatives and Delegates in Congress, the judges of the Supreme Court, and other officers, and employés of the Government, be hereby repealed.

For myself, I see no easier or more certain way than this. The law of last winter, increasing the compensation of these officers, should be repealed. We should re-enact the law as it existed on the 2d of March last. It is utterly impossible, in my judgment, for the majority of this House to indorse the majority report of the committee. I do not think Congress should be called upon to reduce its own pay and leave untouched the salaries of the President and of the other officers of the Government, as provided for by the law of the 3d of March last. The people demand the repeal of the whole law, reach whom it may.

We are all ready to admit that a great offense was committed by the passage of the law. That offense was the result of the passage of a single law. That offense cannot be so well removed as by the simple, unconditional, unqualified repeal of that law. The law was passed; the offense followed. Let us repeal the law, and we will remove the offense.

I do not think, as others have argued, that the pay of members of Congress should be reduced, while, for instance, the pay of the Assistant Secretary shall remain at $6,000 and $6,500 a year. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has remarked, that would be out of character. I think, also, that the bill we shall pass should be retroactive. This would be consistent with what we have claimed in regard to the law of March last. We have said that the last Congress had the right, though late in the session, to pass a bill rating the salary of members of Congress $7,500 a year; that they had a right to make it retroactive. We have to-day the same right to pass a retroactive law. Let us then be honest with the people and not attempt to defy them, or elude the demand which they have made upon us. I was instructed by the republican State convention of Minnesota to vote for the repeal of the law increasing salaries; not the congressional salary alone; not the salary of the President merely, but the "law increasing all salaries." To those instructions I propose to listen; I propose to obey them. Hence I shall vote for the minority report, rather than the report of the majority, because the former includes all the officers whose salaries were increased, while the latter does not.

Mr. AVERILL. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DUNNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. AVERILL. My colleague seems to favor a retroactive provision. I wish to ask him whether he is willing to support a provision so far retroactive as to cover the back pay?

Mr. DUNNELL. I am.

Mr. AVERILL. That is all I wish to inquire.

Mr. DUNNELL. There is one provision in the majority bill which I think ought not to escape the attention of the House. I mean that which provides for the reëstablishment of the mileage system. If that system be re-established it will be very difficult to get rid of it. However much the Forty-second Congress may have been censured, and justly censured, for the increase of salaries, I am firm in the belief that the American people will, at some time, thank that Congress because it repealed the mileage system. Under the mileage law I received as mileage $506 for each session, while the journey each way cost not more than $55. Was there any reason in giving me $506 for a service that cost me so much less? I have been, for many years, radically opposed to the mileage system. It was corrupt and pernicious, and I am glad it has gone to the shades. I believe in a distinctly-stated salary, and without perquisites; and then the person receiving it will be free from censure and public criticism.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CROSSLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that either the pending bill or any substitute or amendment now before the House ought to be adopted. In other words, I do not believe that the legislation enacted at the last session of Congress touching either the privileges or the salaries of members ought now in any wise be altered, and gentlemen insist that the salary of the President, judges of the Supreme Court, and Cabinet officers cannot be altered during their term of office. I shall confine myself to the consideration of the salaries of members of Congress. I was one of those who voted against the increase of salaries every time the proposition was presented to this House as a separate measure; and I only voted in favor of the adoption of the report of the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, on which the salary bill had been ingrafted as an amendment, because it contained other legislation of so much importance for good as to greatly outweigh the evil entailed by the salary amendment, and presenting a question so plain in regard to expenses, and making and saving money to the Government, that no man capable of adding two and two together could for a moment doubt as to his duty in casting his vote.

I have explained this vote and satisfied my people, so far as I was able to meet them during the vacation. I do not believe that the salaries of members of Congress were increased by the legislation of the last session. We abolished the franking privilege and now have to pay postage on all documents, books, and seeds we send to the people. We abolished mileage, stationery, and other allowances, and save to the country and the people more than $1,730,000 per annum. The Postmaster-General has clamored year after year for the abolition of the franking privilege; he repeatedly told us that it was costing the Government more than $2,543,000 a year, and that during last year it had cost $3,500,000. The increase of salaries amounts to less than $1,030,000. It is now plain to every man that, if the salaries are reduced, these expensive privileges and allowances will be revived. Bills are now pending for that purpose, and will be adopted if the salaries are reduced, and in this way increase the expenses of the Government $1,730,000 every year, and every fourth year, when presidential elections occur, $2,730,000. The odious and unequal mileage allowance, under which some members received salaries of $8,000 a year, while others received but little over $5,000, ought to have been abolished and ought not to be revived.

Gentlemen argue that the people were satisfied to allow members of Congress $5,000 a year and these other allowances and privileges, and that they are not satisfied with the salary as now fixed with the privi leges and allowances abolished; and, therefore, we ought to make the change and stop the clamor of the people.

I insist, sir, that the clamor we have heard has not been raised by the people, or if any part of it has proceeded from them, it has resulted from the misrepresentation of busy, selfish demagogues, who seek the places some of us hold here, and from newspapers who have spoken and acted in their interest we have heard the mutterings of place-hunters and their allies. The people have not generally understood the effect of the legislation of last Congress on this subject. When they have an opportunity to investigate for themselves, when we send them the enactments, and they read for themselves and arrive at the truth, they will clamor if we undo what was done, and increase their expenses an average of $2,000,000 a year. If gentlemen have paid attention to the figures presented by my friend from Nevada [Mr. KENDALL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] they have seen that the salaries of members of Congress have not been increased, and that the expenses have been lessened about two million dollars. Now, Representatives of the people, will you, under a pretense of befriending them, perpetrate this wrong? You reflect on their intelligence if you believe they desire it to be done. Then let the salaries alone, and prevent the re-establishment of abuses so much more expensive. Much as the last Congress has been abused and reviled, they did what no other Congress had ever done that increased salaries. They deducted all mileage paid during the entire Congress from the salary allowed for that Congress, and abolished all these expensive privileges. Some of the gentlemen are here who voted for the increase of salaries in 1856 and 1866, amounting in each instance to nearly as much as the last increase, and did not deduct a penny of mileage from the back pay which they voted for, took, and kept. Some of the salary saints on the other side of the House [laughter] took back pay, I am informed, twice, and in neither instance deducted mileage from it as the last Congress did. Nor did they abolish mileage, or any other allowance or privilege, as the last Congress did. They increased salaries and expenses. The last Congress increased salaries but abolished other expenses so as to save the people about two million dollars a year.

But, Mr. Speaker, I sought the floor mainly for the purpose of replying to certain gentlemen who, under pretense of defending themselves from charges they have said had been made against them, have taken occasion not only to parade their own righteous conduct before this House and the country, but have, by express language and innuendo, reflected strongly upon those who differed from them in action on the salary bill of the last session. Some of them, I understand, have used the language "back pay steal," "salary grab," &c.

Now, sir, I am one of those who took the back pay. I carried it home and used it in payment of honest debts. I could not return it if I would, and, so help me God, I would not if I could. [Laughter.] I believe I was entitled to it and had the lawful right to take it, and I shall keep it. In doing this I followed the precedent set by such men as Clay, Calhoun, Webster, Cass, Bell, John C. Breckinridge, and a hundred others, who, I venture to say, are the peers of any man now on this floor, when we consider them in all the qualities that constitute true manhood.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CROSSLAND. I hope I will be permitted to go on for a few minutes and conclude.

There was no objection.

Mr. CROSSLAND. I love to see men do that which their judgment and conscience dictate to be right, and I have no reflections to indulge against those who returned the money. I honor them for doing what they believed their duty demanded. But gentlemen have accused myself and others who took and kept the back pay of the perpetration of a high crime.

I now say to these accusers, I surrender myself and demand a trial. I accuse them. I am ready to be tried by the law, and I desire the law enforced against them. How does it read? "Thou shalt not steal." What is stealing? Taking and carrying away. Nothing said about bringing back. [Laughter.] I took it and carried it away—carried it home. The gentleman from New York, the accuser who calls himself the "dew drop." took it and carried it to Florida. If I have done wrong, like the poor publican, I sincerely, earnestly pray God to have mercy on me a sinner.

The gentleman, like the Pharisee, comes up into the temple and turns the white of his eyes up to heaven and says: "I thank God I am not as mean as other men, for I brought the money back." [Laughter.] He says he always intended to bring it back. I do not dispute it, and will defend him if others dispute his word in my presence. He says he spoke to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] about putting it back. I do not doubt that. But he did take it and carry it away. He says he did not know how to put it back. He knew how to take it and how to get away with it; the asportation was completed. It was there and he knew how to let it stay, I presume. [Laughter.] He knew how to get it out, but the trouble was how to get it back. [Laughter.] He took it and carried it away, and on that point stands exactly as culpable as I do. He said he would take it; I heard him. He went into the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms and did take it, and perhaps I heard of that, and being an inexperienced young man from the country, and seeing that a man so distinguished for honesty had received it and was about to start for Florida with it, naturally thought it was right, and took it and carried it home. [Laughter.] I insist he did nothing wrong about it; but as he has seen proper harshly to judge others, which I warn him is wrong, because it is contrary to Scripture, I do not judge him. I tell him there are uncharitable people who will judge him, and say that if Mr. Brooks had not died and the gentleman been offered a chance to get back to Congress, that his back pay would have never found its way back to the Treasury. [Laughter.] And people will say that his repentance and righteous conduct was begotten of this clamor of the people that he began to hear about the time he returned from Florida. I believe he did all that his brother-in-law states in his letter to the Herald. I believe he said all that he says he said to his brother-in-law and all he says his brother-in-law said to him. But, Mr. Speaker, taking and carrying away the back pay is not the only "back pay" reason why the gentlemen ought to have refrained from accusations against others. He was elected to this Congress to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Brooks, on the 5th day of November—last month. Yet he has employed a double back-action machine and drawn pay back to the 1st day of last June, and has drawn $3,125 for time that passed before he was even elected. He was not a member of Congress between June and November, but draws back pay for that time.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me to make a remark?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not know that I can yield further.

Mr. COX. Permit me a very few words. The law on which that pay was got has been read, and I say that that law was made to remedy a mischief. The mischief was this:

Mr. CROSSLAND. I decline to yield further. The gentleman from Maine is a little impatient. I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] did right to take the money.

Mr. COX. Let me have an opportunity to make just this statement: Formerly, when a gentleman was elected to fill a vacancy, he got the money from the 4th of March. To stop that, and to divide the money equally between the out-going member, or the family of the dying member, and the in-coming member, that law was passed. It was to remedy a mischief. I came here under that law.

Mr. CROSSLAND. I cannot yield to the gentleman further.

Mr. COX. You do not want the facts.

Mr. CROSSLAND. I want to have the truth out, whatever it may be. I do not refer to the matter in order to prove that the gentleman has done wrong. The law gave him the money, and it was right for him to take it. The law gave me the money, and I had the right to take it, and perpetrated no dishonesty in taking it.

Mr. COX. I do not accuse the gentleman of dishonesty.

Mr. CROSSLAND. The gentleman is charged with having used the word "steal" in connection with this matter.

Mr. COX. I never did, till I was charged with being a demagogue.

Mr. CROSSLAND. The gentleman was elected in November, and jumps back to last June to draw his pay from that date.

Mr. COX. I was sworn in on the day on which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CROSSLAND] was sworn in.

Mr. CROSSLAND. The gentleman may sit down. I will brush him off the rose. [Great laughter.]

My friend from New York is a great man; he is a great lawgiver; a great law-maker. He has introduced and passed through this House many wise and wholesome laws. I will read you the title of one of them:

By Mr. COX: Bill No. 38, to change the name of the ship Industry to William M. Tweed. [Great laughter.]

Shades of Solon, the great patron of industry! He had a law enacted that provided that every man who did not pursue habits of industry should be declared infamous, and disqualified from holding office or exercising the franchise of a free citizen. Yet the name Industry must be changed to Boss Tweed. I wonder if there are any grangers in the gentleman's district.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman want me to answer?

Mr. CROSSLAND. I wonder if that was the ship that was to transport the "dew-drop" to Europe last spring. [Great laughter.] I hold now in my hand the picture of the ram Judge Lawrence, the noblest ram of them all. [Laughter.] It has been torn out of the Agricultural Report for 1867.

I understand that this ram was named for the distinguished gentleman and ultra-economist of Ohio, who addressed the House a few days ago on the back grab. And I understand that by way of compensating the owner for calling the ram for him, he brought the animal up here, had him boarded at the Agricultural Department all winter at the expense of the Government, and had his picture put in the book at our expense. Now, after the back-pay grab the gentlemen made in 1866; the expense the Government incurred to put the gentleman's picture in the book, as exhibited by his colleague the other day; and after he imposed on us the expense of boarding the ram and putting the picture of the ram in the book, it is high time he gave some symptoms of economy and retrenchment.

Mr. Speaker, I am a little astonished that these gentlemen from New York—from Tammany, the headquarters and head-center of the most infamous villainies, roguery of every grade, robbery bold and unblushing—should come here to preach honesty and read moral lectures. The distinguished gentleman told us yesterday of his prosecution and conviction of the Tammany chief, Tweed. I commend him, and congratulate the honest people of New York, the victims of the Tammany roguery; but I remind the gentleman that his good work has but just begun. Tweed did not concoct and carry out all these disgraceful infamies alone; he had aiders and abettors who are still unwhipped; they are there yet; go bring them to justice. If gentlemen from New York are missionaries, devoted to the suppression of crime and the punishment of criminals, they are in the wrong field. Congress is bad enough, but perhaps ours is not an instance of total depravity; and under the lash of the people and the prayers of our pious Chaplain we may be reformed and saved. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CROSSLAND. I ask just a minute or two more; I have not spoken in the House this session, and will promise never to speak again if allowed to proceed now.

Several MEMBERS. "Go on, go on."

Mr. CROSSLAND. I suggest to these gentlemen to go home. You are wasting your sweetness here. I understand that in the Tammany region crime boldly stalks at noon-day. Go hunt up the rogues and send them after Tweed, and be sure you let your own light shine there as it shines here.

Mr. Speaker, if our salaries are too high we ought to reduce them. I can live here on as little as any man. I am accustomed to the plain living and habits of a poor man. I have never eat bread which I had not honestly earned, nor do I want it otherwise. I believe that the people are willing for us to have salary sufficient to pay the expenses of a plain, decent, comfortable living here, furnish comfortable support of our families at home, and have enough left to pay the postage on the documents, books, seeds, &c., which are furnished us to send to them. They ought to be constantly informed of what we are doing here. I understand that the rich men who were members of the convention that framed the Federal Constitution desired to shape our Government after the British idea and allow no compensation to members of Congress, arguing that the Government ought to be in the hands of the owners of the country. Perhaps some of them had become rich by accident and could afford to go to Congress without any pay. They sought in this way to exclude all the ability of the country that was not backed by money. There may be some rich men here who desire to impose this exclusion. I am not in favor of it. I would offer such salary as will allow poor men to come here if qualified. And, in the language used yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts, "it will be a sorry day" when the laudable ambition and aspirations of our poor young men to reach positions and fields of honor, distinction, and usefulness is met by a rich man's law that tells them that they are too poor to go to Congress.

Mr. Speaker, no man on this floor is more profoundly grateful for the honor conferred by a seat here than I am. I owe my people a debt of gratitude that I can never pay; but if there had been no salary I should have been obliged to decline the honor. I am a poor man, and am obliged to earn something every day to support my family. I have found no one here willing to board or shelter me for honor. They require money. I have none except what I draw here for my services.

Mr. Speaker, I heartily concur, with my friend from Ohio, [Mr. LAMISON,] in our action on this subject; we shall pursue strictly the dictates of duty. Let us act manly. The time approaches, sir, when we will care very little for the clamor of the demagogue and office-hunter. The important question then will be, "Have we discharged our duty in a manly, upright manner, as our judgment and conscience have presented it to us?"

These walls that know us to-day will very soon know us no more forever. Even the sweet, fresh little "dew-drop" from New York will evaporate and be as nothing. I shall act on this question as my duty may dictate, wholly unmindful of any other consideration, and will leave the consequences in the hands of a just, intelligent, and generous people. I must thank the gentleman from Maine for his kind indulgence.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, obtained the floor.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask the House to indulge me in a few remarks.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I propose to call the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope the House will hear me.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope we shall hear the gentleman from Ohio; it is only fair.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I did propose to call the previous question at three o'clock. Nearly an hour has elapsed since that time. The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] who is a member of the committee, has notified me that he wishes to speak some three or five minutes before the previous question is called. It seems to me to be fair, as he is a member of the committee, to grant him that. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] who has been attacked from many quarters, also wants five minutes. I notify the House, now, that in fifteen minutes I shall feel compelled to insist upon the previous question, and I hope the intervening time will be divided between the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DAWES. I hope my friend from Maine will not limit the gentleman from Ohio to five minutes.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will be brief.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The gentleman from Ohio himself has only asked me for five minutes.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Well, give me a little more.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Well, say ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, of course, it was his duty to recognize the gentleman having charge of the bill to test the sense of the House on the previous question. If the House desire to continue the discussion they will refuse to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this measure goes over until to-morrow, so as to give gentlemen an opportunity to be heard, is the Chair aware of any business which will be interfered with?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of any.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call attention to the appropriation bill pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. I sought the floor and desired to address the House upon this bill. I found myself unexpectedly a member of the committee that had it in charge, and the only member of that committee who voted in the last Congress for the increased compensation. I would have been very glad, had the debate continued, to have had an opportunity to say something in connection with the measure. But at this time, at the wish of the gentleman who has the bill in charge, I did not propose to do it. I have sought the floor now at the request of some two or three gentlemen who have been personally assailed, and desire a few moments to reply, and also to present what is the precise condition of the law touching the cases of those members who die before they are admitted to their seats. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has referred to that in such a way as almost to obviate the necessity. I will simply remark that by the fourth section of the act of August, 1866, it was provided:—

> That, in the event of the death of any Senator, Representative, or Delegate, prior to the commencement of the first session of Congress, he shall be neither entitled to mileage or compensation; and, in the event of death after the commencement of any session, his representatives shall be entitled to receive so much of his compensation, computed at the rate of $3,000 per annum, as he may not have received, and any mileage that may have actually accrued.

Subsequently the law was amended so as to provide that the representatives of the deceased member should receive the pay up to the time of his decease, and that his successor should receive it for the remainder of the time. That was done in order to remove what was thought to be an injustice to the family of a deceased member. That is the state of the law. I have been requested by several members of the House to make this statement; and now if I have any time left I will yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. LEACH.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will please understand that the member having charge of a bill has a right to test the sense of the House on the previous question, and it is the duty of the Chair, under the rules, to submit that question. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] has intimated his purpose to do so, but he yielded first to the gentleman from Tennessee, and then to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] who is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I understood the gentleman from Maine to include in his statement five minutes for myself.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I have been made the subject of so much misrepresentation—I will not say intentional—that it is due to myself that I should make some reply. I will always endeavor to discuss every subject in a spirit of candor and fairness. This is due to the dignity of this House and to the subjects on which we are called to act. We cannot escape the duty to legislate in accordance with right and justice by reference to what any individual may have said or done. The argumentum ad hominem, as all the books on logic tell us, can have no weight on the general merits of a question.

I have urged the repeal of the salary act of March 3, 1873, for reasons I have stated, and others I might add. In doing this I have not sought to attack the motives of others. On the 3d day of November a constituent of mine, of high character, addressed me a letter, respectful in its terms, asking how I would vote on the question of repeal. In my answer, which I could not with propriety decline to make, I said, among other things, that "there are questions connected with this salary bill about which honest men may differ. I do not design to cast imputations upon the motives or judgments of other members of Congress with whom I have associated or may associate—men for whom I have high regard."

And now it may be proper to say a few words in reply to some remarks during the discussion. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] said he understands that I was "opposed to this back pay because it was too much;" and he desired me to say "how much back pay" I "would go for." It is a sufficient answer to this to say that I am for the repeal of the salary act, and, of course, would not have voted for the bill which increased salaries if I had been in Congress when it passed. I am opposed to the law, because of the increase of salaries, especially of those of members of Congress, and would not have voted for an increase either in the shape of back or forward pay. This, it seems to me, is a sufficient answer.

But the gentleman [Mr. DAWES] further said he desired "to ask * * one question more." And then he affirms that in 1866 I took the back pay because, as he alleges, I said that "every member took it." And then he adds that I go "whatever way the multitude goes." I do not see the question in this. I cannot suppose that he believes that my course is dictated merely by a desire to go with the "multitude." I know how readily the motives of any member may be suspected; and no man can avoid this, whatever his action may be. I can only say that my course now, as it was in 1866, is dictated by what I believe right; and when I feel a consciousness of this I can leave others to judge of my motives. The gentleman himself was a member of this House in 1866, when he and I both voted against the bill of that year; both took the pay; both went with the same "multitude."

But the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] in his remarks, gave the names of some who voted for the bill in 1866, which increased salaries from $3,000 to $5,000 a year, while, as he says, "There were others of equal character for integrity who voted against it, among whom" he is pleased to name myself. He proceeds to say that all of these—> whether voting for, or against, or not voting at all, took the benefits of the increase—the "back pay."

He then inquires "if the principle was wrong last March, whether it was any the less wrong in 1866."

To this I will answer, I did not say "the principle" was necessarily and under all circumstances wrong.

The Constitution undoubtedly gives Congress the power to fix the pay of its members, retroactively as well as prospectively. If the pay for any Congress is clearly too low, a retroactive increase is authorized by the Constitution; and I will not now discuss the question whether the Constitution is or is not wrong in principle. While it stands as it is, it is to be deemed right. If an increase is made retroactive as well as prospective, and an impartial public judgment shall sanction it; if, in view of the circumstances, the increase is deemed only just, I have not said that it is necessarily wrong in principle to so increase it.

But if the increase is beyond what is necessary—is such that an impartial public will not sanction it—it may certainly, under such circumstances, be regarded as wrong, whether it be back pay or front pay. That is my position as to this subject, and I must have been unfortunate if I was not so understood. We cannot by any law affect the "back pay" of the last Congress; and that question is not before us now for discussion.

I may repeat again, I have not attacked or impugned the motives or judgment of any who differ with me as to what the proper amount of salary should be, or otherwise.

And I have already said that I do not claim infallibility for the public judgment; but only that, when deliberately formed, it is very likely to be correct.

And now as to the increase made by the act of 1866, there has been a very general acquiescence in its provisions by impartial men. If I can learn the judgment of impartial men, competent to judge, from all the sources I have already in this discussion named, there has been no such acquiescence in the salary increase made by the act of March, 1873.

I submit, therefore, that there is no necessary inconsistency in receiving the pay fixed by the act of 1866 and declining to receive the increase fixed by the act of March, 1873. I do not undertake to prescribe duties for others, but will endeavor to perform my own as best I can.

I may say, too, that my judgment does not stand alone. All the members of Congress in 1866 received the pay fixed by the law of that year, with one exception; while many members have declined to accept the increase under the act of 1873. When I find myself thus corroborated by respectable members here I submit that the opinions of all these are entitled to the same respect which should be accorded, and which I do accord, to those who may differ from them.

But my distinguished colleague [Mr. LAMISON] has called the attention of the House to an old speech of mine, made some seven years ago, in which it seems I said, in substance, that "the Constitution declares that Representatives in Congress shall receive a compensation, to be ascertained by law," and that "when members have taken an oath to obey the Constitution, * * I take it that it is the duty of a member to accept the provision which is made by law."

I have not seen that speech, until recently, for a good many years. I have several answers to make as to that.

The true inquiry now is not so much what any gentleman may have said, but what every member of this House ought to say and do now. That is the real question.

Then, again, it will be seen, by reference to my speech, that the remark which has been quoted was made on the spur of the moment, in reply to a question, without any time for consideration, and I will not warrant all my opinions on constitutional law expressed in that form.

The statute of limitations has run upon that opinion and it cannot, therefore, be made available now. Gentlemen who stand by the salary law may need the benefit of such a statute in the future. But whether the remark then made was correct or not, I did not say that the Constitution prohibited any member, who deemed it his duty, from returning any portion of his pay to the Treasury.

But my colleague has presented a report made to this House on New York election frauds, and says he does "not know by what appropriation bill the features" to which he refers "were embalmed forever as the frontispiece to this book."

I can say to my colleague that it comes from no appropriation bill. If my memory is correct, he cannot find a half-dozen volumes with such frontispiece extant. These were originally bound up for no public use, but for a different purpose. We all know that William H. Barnes keeps up a "History of Congress,"—sketches of members—and the plates engraved for that, not at the public expense, but at private expense, furnished the means of giving so much delight to my colleague. I have before me a volume by Barnes, with probably a hundred and fifty engravings—faces familiar to this House—and I understand that a forthcoming volume will contain a sketch, and it may possibly be ornamented with the countenance, of my friend and colleague, [Mr. LAMISON,] and may also be "indelibly preserved in the public libraries of the country."

Mr. LAMISON. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him to ask by what authority that book is published?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is an individual enterprise of the publisher.

Mr. LAMISON. And who pays for it?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I presume the members whose pictures are in there contribute to it; and I make no complaint of my colleague, for I believe that most of the members of the last two Houses have had their pictures in it.

Mr. LAMISON. Does my colleague say that it goes into the Congressional Library as a public document?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is put there, I suppose, as any other book may be.

Mr. LAMISON. One word more.

Mr. LAWRENCE. No, sir; I prefer not; the gentleman would not yield to me, and my time will not allow me to yield to him further.

For several successive Congresses this "History of Congress" has been continued, and is now being continued—not at the public expense, but by the enterprise of the publisher. Here is one of the volumes. [Mr. LAWRENCE presented one of the volumes, with sketches and portraits of members.]

One word in reply to the member from Kentucky, [Mr. CROSSLAND.] Some years ago an enthusiastic friend and constituent of mine, largely interested in my district in fleece-producing flocks, did me the honor to give my name to one of his best specimens, as he conceived, in recognition of services which he supposed I had rendered in behalf of agricultural interests. The editor of the Ohio Farmer newspaper published the fact with comments at large complimentary to my friend and his flock and myself. For nearly two years I kept out of the Agricultural Report, what my friend demanded should go in, as a right accorded for many years to the owners of other and, I think, less meritorious animals. He furnished the picture of the animal found in the book for that purpose, with no request of mine for any such purpose. If it be treason to have friends so devoted, gentlemen may make the most of it. One thing is certain, no constituent of mine will ask to have put into any book, the picture of any man who was false to the country during the rebellion, one who during that great struggle never uttered one loyal word.

I know very well that no man who is a man can pass through a public life, if he does his duty, without inciting envy and encountering malice. I have not escaped these misfortunes outside of this Hall, but I thank God that I am able to believe that no honest man has called in question my integrity; and I am conscious at least of the rectitude of my motives.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, obtained the floor.

Mr. ORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I cannot now. I wish to obtain the sense of the House in reference to this bill. I rise now to call the previous question. I ask the Chair to state the position of the bill now before the House, so that members may see just what the previous question, if ordered, will operate upon.

The SPEAKER. The bill of the committee is pending, with a motion to recommit made by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] who reported the bill. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT,] moves to amend the motion to recommit by adding certain instructions. Should the previous question be seconded, it will first operate upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I would like to have that amendment read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to amend the motion to recommit by adding thereto instructions, which will be read by the clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill under consideration be recommitted to the committee, with instructions to report as a substitute for the first and second sections of the bill reported by the committee the bill offered as an amendment by Mr. HURLBUT, of Illinois, on page 15 of the printed bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall be at the rate of $6,000 per annum, payable monthly, and in addition thereto the actual individual expenses of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate, in going to and returning from the seat of Government once in each session, to be certified in writing by each.

SEC. 2. That the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be at the rate of $2,000, in addition to his pay as Representative, amounting in all to $8,000; and that of the Vice-President shall be the same amount, with the same allowance for traveling expenses as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I ask the Clerk to read the third section of the committee's bill, which that amendment proposes to leave as it now stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is required to cover into the Treasury all sums that may remain undrawn, or which have been received as increased compensation, under the provisions of said act, approved March 3, 1873, and which shall have or may come into his possession by the return thereof.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.]

Mr. ORTH. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] so as to recommit the bill and pending amendments to the select committee, with the following instructions:

To report a bill repealing the whole salary act, so far as the same can be constitutionally done, and to ascertain the average amount of salary, mileage, and all other allowances, (exclusive of any estimate for the use of the franking privilege,) paid to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the Forty-first Congress; and to report a bill to-morrow, after the morning hour, determining the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress hereafter at the amount, as near as practicable, thus ascertained, with necessary traveling expenses, and restoring all other salaries as they were before the passage of said act.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that susceptible of division?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. It is in the nature of an amendment to the instructions moved by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.]

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] moves to amend so as to recommit the bill and pending amendments. There are no pending amendments.

Mr. KELLOGG. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] that the third section of his bill should be modified by inserting after the words "which have been received as increased compensation" the words "by members of the Forty-second Congress."

Mr. CESSNA. He can do that by making the bill all right, if it is recommitted.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. There is no objection to that modification, I think.

Mr. KELLOGG. That will make it definite and clear.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is seconded it will first operate upon the substitute moved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] for the instructions moved by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.] If the House should add instructions to the motion to recommit, those motions are indivisible, and must be put together, to recommit with instructions. Should that be negatived, then the House will be brought to a direct vote upon the bill of the committee.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. But the previous question having been seconded, before the House shall be obliged to vote upon the bill itself members will have the opportunity to vote upon the propositions of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.]

The SPEAKER. First upon the instructions moved by the gentleman from Indiana. If they should be negatived, then the question will be upon the instructions moved by the gentleman from Illinois; should they be negatived, then upon the motion to recommit; and if that should be negatived, then the vote will be directly upon the bill reported by the committee.

Mr. COX. I would like to have a chance, by unanimous consent or otherwise, to vote upon the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I have some instructions which I wish to move.

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimous consent now, because the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] is an amendment in the second degree. The Chair will endeavor again to state the question, so that every gentleman may vote understandingly upon the motion for the previous question now submitted.

Should the previous question be seconded, the first vote will be upon the substitute moved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] for the instructions moved by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.] Should that be negatived, then the vote will be upon the instructions moved by the gentleman from Illinois. Should that be negatived, then the vote will be upon the motion to recommit simply, and should that be negatived, then upon the bill of the committee. If either instructions should be adopted, then the vote will be upon the motion to recommit with those instructions, that motion being indivisible.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Is there any further opportunity to offer a motion for instructions?

The SPEAKER. Not at this time, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. If the bill of the committee should be rejected——

The SPEAKER. If the bill of the committee should be rejected, then the House will be free to make such further order in the matter as it may see fit.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to make a single statement. If the previous question be now put and sustained, of course there will be no chance for any amendment, either in the form of another bill or as instructions to the committee. If, however, the previous question should be voted down, I shall then, if the Speaker should assign me the floor, move a substitute, and then give the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] an opportunity to offer his proposition that the committee report to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the proposition would have to be presented in the form of instructions. If the pending bill should be defeated, the committee would be functus officio, except so far as the subject might be again committed to them by order of the House. The committee by the terms of its organization is not limited to a report on this bill.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the question is upon the demand for the previous question; and the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] who has charge of the pending bill, and the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] who presented the minority report.

Mr. MAYNARD. The Chair has stated very fully and explicitly what will be the effect if the previous question should be seconded. I wish to inquire what will be the position of the bill if the previous question should not be seconded?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is obliged to the gentleman for the suggestion. Of course if the previous question should not be seconded, it simply leaves the bill pending for further debate.

Mr. LEACH. I wish to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer every proper parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LEACH. If the House should refuse to order the previous question, will it not place the bill in such a position that I can offer my amendment for the restoration of the franking privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that might possibly be the result; but he cannot answer explicitly, because he cannot tell at what subsequent stage the previous question might be moved, nor upon what proposition.

Mr. LEACH. But the refusal to second the previous question will give members an opportunity to vote on my amendment, if they wish to do so.

Several members called for the regular order.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 145.

So the House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to recognize the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO,] who wishes to continue the debate; but he will first answer several inquiries addressed to him privately as to how the House may get to a vote on any amendment which it desires to adopt. The pending amendment stands just as it did before the previous question was moved. The question is first upon the instructions offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH,] and next upon those proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.] The previous question may be called upon both those propositions together, or upon either singly. Thus members, if they desire to get any one amendment out of the way, may order the previous question on it, and negative it by a vote. In this way any amendment which a majority of the House desires to act upon may be reached.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to ask a parliamentary question. Could we not, in the manner just suggested, call the previous question on each amendment, and act seriatim upon every proposition which has been offered?

The SPEAKER. If the House so desires, that can be done.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to have the Speaker state that the pending motion is the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated the precise attitude of the question when the previous question was called. If it is desired that the previous question shall act partially, the mover of it can state on which motion he desires it to operate. It may be called simply upon the instructions of the gentleman from Indiana; it may be called upon those in connection with the instructions of the gentleman from Illinois. It may be called so as to operate also upon the motion to recommit. It may operate just as far as the gentleman moving it may choose to indicate; and in that way, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has suggested, the House may successively and seriatim pass its judgment upon each amendment that it desires to consider.

Mr. KASSON. I would be glad to know whether it is the desire of the House that the instructions offered by the gentleman from Indiana shall be adopted, in order that the committee, if it is the will of the House, may have a meeting to-morrow morning to prepare a report upon that subject. I had intended also, if the House is satisfied that the twenty-minute debate has run long enough, to ask that the debate to-morrow be limited to five-minute speeches, including the offering of amendments, to test the sense of the House.

The SPEAKER. There is a very large demand upon the Chair for an opportunity to speak, which of course he has endeavored, as far as possible, to accommodate. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] was especially anxious to speak, and the Chair has recognized him.

Mr. KASSON. I would not press my motion to his prejudice, if he desires to speak twenty minutes; but the gentleman, I think, will be satisfied with five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] moves that, after the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri, speeches shall be limited to five minutes each. Before putting this proposition to the House, the Chair desires to make a remark in reply to a question which has been addressed to him, as to the operation of the previous question. Nothing in the arrangement which has been made, unless that order shall be modified by the House, will interfere with the right of the member closing the debate to occupy one hour under the rules.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Does that apply to anybody except to the chairman of the committee?

The SPEAKER. It might apply to other gentlemen.

Mr. DAWES. That right belongs, under the rule, to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

The SPEAKER. It does belong to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Maine has made a motion to recommit, and on that motion demanded the previous question. Now, I wish to know whether, according to the usage, the House having refused to second the demand for the previous question, he does not thereby lose the control of the floor.

The SPEAKER. He loses the control of the floor so far as the motion to recommit is concerned; but suppose the House should afterward second the demand for the previous question and close debate, the Chair then thinks that the usage would not deprive the gentleman from Maine of his right under the rule. It took away from the gentleman, when the House refused to second the demand for the previous question, his further right to the floor at the time, and the Chair therefore recognized another gentleman. But if the House should, at some subsequent period, determine to order the previous question, it will not deprive the gentleman of his right to close the debate. The Chair will not undertake to interpret the significance of votes. Nor is it clear to the apprehension of the Chair, or to members themselves, whether, by refusing to second the demand for the previous question, it was not because the House wished further discussion of the subject.

Mr. RANDALL. If, upon anybody else's motion, the previous question had been ordered on any single amendment, or upon the entire proposition, would not the gentleman who was sustained in making the demand by the House be entitled to an hour?

The SPEAKER. If there should be a substitute agreed to by the House, separate and distinct from the original proposition, the Chair thinks the mover of the substitute, and not the one reporting it from the committee, would be entitled to the closing hour.

Mr. ORTH. The refusal by the House to second the demand for the previous question was apparently for the purpose of prolonging the discussion on this measure; and I would suggest that some hour to-morrow, after the discussion had continued for one, two, or three hours, according to what seems to be the sentiment of the House, the motion shall again be made, and the House again asked to pass upon the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman refers to his own proposition coupled with the motion to recommit.

Mr. ORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KASSON. If the House desires information to be reported by the special committee under the resolution of instructions, I desire to give that committee the opportunity to meet to-morrow morning, and to have its report ready at the service of the House during to-morrow's session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may try the sense of the House on that without prejudice to any gentleman upon the floor.

Mr. KASSON. That is all I ask.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I suggest, sir, we all know exactly, as well as we can by any information from the committee, that about $6,135 was the average pay during the Forty-first Congress. I do not think it worth while to recommit this bill and start on that a new report from the committee. Having this report, it is the best judgment before the House, both of the majority and of the minority. I hope, therefore, the House will now adjourn, and let the debate run on for such time as may be deemed proper, and then the previous question may be called.

Mr. ORTH. One estimate, I believe, makes the average pay during the Forty-first Congress about six thousand dollars.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is within a few dollars. It is so near, that that sum can be fixed without any reference to the committee for information.

Mr. ORTH. If the subject be recommitted to the committee with instructions, that committee can report it back in thirty minutes.

Mr. KASSON. Two members of the committee, I know, have already made the investigation for their own satisfaction. Any gentleman can gather the facts from the officers of the House. I do not think it necessary to refer it to the committee merely for that purpose. When the substitute I have moved is before the House, and we come to the fifth section, there the question will be raised as to the aggregate, in one sum of pay and allowances. I do not think it necessary to have the committee called to report merely on those facts, but I am willing to demand the previous question, to settle now whether we will to-morrow take up the bill for decisive action or not.

Mr. COBURN. The instructions have not been printed and are not understood in this part of the House. They were read on the other side of the House; and, in order that we may understand them on this side, I ask that they again be read.

The SPEAKER. The instructions moved by the gentleman from Indiana will again be read.

The resolutions were again read.

Mr. COBURN. That is a sweeping clause. It is such a definite and absolute fixing of the shape in which this bill should go that I think the House should have time to consider it.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move an adjournment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is on the floor and moves the previous question on the committal of the bill with the instructions which have been read.

Mr. KASSON. I do not know that it is necessary, in order to get at the main point, that the House should recommit the bill. I desire, however, to get the sense of the House on these instructions, and that we may then dispose of the matter to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman does not desire the motion to recommit to be submitted, but simply that the House shall indicate its purpose, and that the sense of the House be taken on that.

Mr. KASSON. That is what I want.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to try the sense of the House on another question. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 470) relating to the limitation of steam pressure of vessels used exclusively for towing and carrying freight on the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was agreed to.

And thereupon (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BURLEIGH: A petition of 100 merchants, ship-owners, and masters of American vessels of Portland, Maine, for the repeal of the shipping act.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: A petition of citizens of Red Bird, Illinois, in regard to the postage on newspapers.

By Mr. COBURN: The memorial of John S. Moore, late lieutenant in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

By Mr. COX: The petition of General W. W. Burns, for relief.

Also, the petition of Richard Edgeworth and 25 crippled soldiers, for increase of pension.

Also, a petition for the relief of the heirs of Colonel Gates, United States Army.

By Mr. DAWES: The petition of Marie Barton Greene, for relief.

By Mr. FRYE: Twenty-five petitions from citizens of the State of Maine, asking for the appointment of a commission of inquiry on the alcoholic liquor traffic.

By Mr. HANCOCK: The petition of Benjamin H. Thompson, and others, druggists, asking the repeal or reformation of the law imposing stamps on drugs, prescriptions, &c.

By Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts: The memorial of Nathan H. Dauphe, of Bridgewater, Massachusetts, asking remuneration for 75 hogsheads of sugar, seized by United States forces in the State of Louisiana, in the year 1863.

By Mr. HATHORN: The petition of James S. Cutbush, late private in Company A, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, for a pension.

By Mr. LANSING: The petition of S. Macomber, for an extension of patent.

By Mr. LAWSON: The memorial of Seth Driggs, assignee and attorney of the heirs of John Clark, for a rehearing of claim against the late Colombian confederacy.

By Mr. MITCHELL: The petition of Gottlieb Schweitzer and others, commissioned officers, claiming that bounty and three months' extra pay are due to them, and asking that such may be paid.

By Mr. MYERS: A petition of citizens of Philadelphia, asking Congress to give those who have lost both arms or eyes a pension of $50; both legs or one arm and one leg, $40; one arm or one leg, $30 per month.

By Mr. NESMITH: The petition of Captain James M. Robertson, for the passage of an enabling law to promote him a major of artillery, &c.

By Mr. O'BRIEN: The memorial of Philip C. Friese, esq., of Baltimore, Maryland, to give to the colored population their legal status.

By Mr. SENER: The petition of Charles Fitchett, of Fredericksburgh, Virginia, praying for an increase of pension.

Also, the petition of Mary B. Belfield, of Richmond County, Virginia, widow of Colonel John W. Belfield, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying for a pension.

By Mr. SHANKS: A memorial signed by 300 citizens of Alta City, Utah Territory, setting forth their grievances, and asking relief from the despotism of the Mormon theocracy.

By Mr. STRAIT: The petition of A. C. Sherwood and 40 others, praying for a mail-route from Hancock Station, in Stevens County, to Appleton, in the county of Chippewa, and State of Minnesota.

By Mr. WILSON, of Indiana: The petition of M. C. Mordecai & Co., praying compensation for mail service between Charleston, South Carolina, and Havana, Cuba.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Leave was given under the rule of the House for the withdrawal from the files of the House, and reference to appropriate committees, as follows:

Mr. LAMISON: The memorial and accompanying papers in the claim of Edmond Gallaher—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the memorial and accompanying papers in the claim of Antonio Pelletier—to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, the memorial and accompanying papers in the claim of H. B. Denman—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the memorial and accompanying papers in the claim of James L. Henry—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the memorial and accompanying papers in the claim of Chauncy M. Lockwood—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the memorial and accompanying papers in the claim of the trustees of Wildey Lodge, I. O. O. F—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the memorial and accompanying papers in the claim of Eva, Etta, Henry, and Guy Carleton, heirs of General James Carleton, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 12, 1873.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask that, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 130) to remove the disabilities of Thomas S. Bocock, E. J. Harvie, and Daniel Trigg, of Virginia, and John H. Reagan, of Texas, be taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration.

There was no objection; and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The question was on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That all political disabilities imposed upon Thomas S. Bocock, E. J. Harvie, and Daniel Trigg, of Virginia, and John H. Reagan, of Texas, by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, by reason of their participation in the rebellion, are hereby removed.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENTS TO RAILROADS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following resolution to obtain certain information from the War Department:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House whether any payments have been made by his Department to the Illinois Central Railroad Company for the transportation of troops and supplies of the United States over their railroad since the 1st day of January, 1866; and, if so, the time of such transportation, the amount paid, and for what particular transportation such payments were made; also whether, since the date aforesaid, the Department has made payment to any other railroad company to aid in the construction of whose railroad any grant of public lands was made prior to 1862, and if so, the amount paid, the date of such transportation, and the company or companies to which such payments shall have been made.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I ask if this comes here from a committee, and upon what idea it is based?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not object. The information called for is very essential to the public interest. It is in reference to the payments made by the War Department for the transportation of supplies over roads to which land grants have been made. I trust there will be no objection to this information being obtained.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. This comes from no committee. To furnish this information would cause considerable expense to the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will cost nothing.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Let it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the resolution will not be referred. I have submitted it in consequence of definite information which I have received.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. If it is allowed to go to the committee I will make no objection.

Mr. DAWES. We have been in the habit of referring resolutions like these to committees.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair will state that when such reference is made it has generally been accompanied with the right to refer back at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will have to acquiesce in that arrangement.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Subsequently—

Mr. HOLMAN said: After examination, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] will withdraw his objection to my resolution in regard to the Illinois Central Railroad.

No further objection being made, the resolution was agreed to.

REPEAL OF THE BANKRUPT ACT.

Mr. DUELL. I present the petitions of a large number of business men in different sections of the Union—merchants, lawyers, and bankers—asking for the repeal of the bankrupt act. They represent 27 different States, and more than 3,000 of these gentlemen have signed the petitions, which are 80 in number.

The SPEAKER. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which has that subject in charge.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair as to what is the proper reference or disposition of a petition asking the appointment of a special committee of this House. A great number of these petitions are coming in; and I make this inquiry publicly, instead of privately, that information may be given to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could answer that question if he knew what the subject is on which the committee is to operate.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It is a petition asking the appointment of a special committee of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that subject might well be taken in hand by the Committee on Education and Labor, as they are dealing with the moral questions of the day. [Laughter.]

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call the committees for reports of a private character.

JOHN S. MILLER.

Mr. BECK, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 488) to authorize the cancellation of the export bond for a portion of the distilled spirits of John S. Miller, on board of bonded cars of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, on the production of proofs satisfactory to him of the destruction by fire of 50 barrels of alcohol, without fraud, collusion, or negligence on the part of the owner of said alcohol, while the same was in custody of the United States in bonded cars at Sterling, Illinois, in transitu for export to Buenos Ayres, in South America, on or about the 18th of August, 1872, to cancel such bond as may have been given for the exportation of the alcohol destroyed, provided landing certificates shall have been produced showing the landing, as required by the regulation of the Secretary of the Treasury, of all the alcohol or distilled spirits except the 50 barrels destroyed, included in the said bond.

Mr. BECK. I desire to make a brief statement to the House before calling the previous question. But before I call it I will allow any gentleman who knows any reason why the bill should not pass to state any objections he may have to it, or I will answer any questions any gentlemen desire to ask. We passed a law on May 27, 1872, providing for the cancellation of bonds where distilled spirits were destroyed in any bonded warehouse of the United States. I have followed the language of that law in all its requirements in the bill I have reported. On the 3d of March, 1873, we passed a further law, providing for the cancellation of bonds given for the exportation of distilled spirits upon presentation of satisfactory proof and certificates that the distilled spirits had been landed at the port of destination, or satisfactory proof that after shipment the same were lost at sea without fault or neglect of the owner or shipper. Neither of those laws provides for this case. These spirits were destroyed on board bonded cars of the United States while being shipped from Sterling, Illinois, to the collector of New York, for shipment to Buenos Ayres. Mr. Miller had 5,000 barrels of alcohol, 50 barrels on a car. One car was entered by a thief in the night, and, somehow or other, the car and the 50 barrels of alcohol were burnt up. I have here the statement of Mr. Miller himself, setting forth all the facts of the United States district attorney, and of the agent of the railroad. The thief was arrested, convicted, and is now in the penitentiary. The facts are undoubted. I submitted them to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to his assistant, and to the men in charge of that Department; and I can say to the House that this bill is presented with their approval. Suits, of course are entered upon all bonds, and a suit is now pending in this case among others. It is quite important to this gentleman that the bill shall pass early, so that the suit may be dismissed. I have no question about the case being a clear one. It was presented by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] and the proof is abundant.

Mr. MELLISH. I would ask the gentleman if we have any recommendation from any official who has investigated this matter—from the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. BECK. We have no recommendation of record. When the case was submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means, according to our usual way of doing business, it was put into my hands for examination. I went, in company with the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] to see the Commissioner. I saw him and he sent for his assistant, and they of course only made a verbal communication to us. The facts, however, independent of any communication, in view of our past legislation, make it a clear case, in my judgment.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Ought not we to have a general law to cover such cases?

Mr. BECK. We thought of that; but we have already provided for all spirits destroyed in banded warehouses and while at sea, and we were afraid that if we passed a general law relating to cars, it would open a door to fraud and collusion. Water, for instance, might be substituted for spirits. We thought it best, in relation to that class of cases referring to spirits passing through our own country, to let each case stand on its own merits; to have each case specially investigated, rather than to pass a general bill. We preferred to do it in this way in order to guard the Government.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] this question: Whether or not there is any difference in principle at all between this bill and the general bills already on the statute-book? The only difference, as I understand it, is that this loss occurred on the railroad.

Mr. BECK. There is no difference at all; and we propose a special bill in this case only because frauds might arise under a general law.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS. And this, as I understand, is the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BECK. It is; and it is also recommended by the Department. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BECK moved to reconsider the vote by which the biil was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSENGER TO STENOGRAPHERS.

Mr. ARCHER, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That authority be given to the stenographers of the committees of the House to continue the employment of a messenger, during the sessions of the present Congress, at the rate of compensation heretofore allowed.

Mr. ARCHER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting to the House certain reports in relation to the late Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands.

Mr. WOOD. I ask that that communication be read.

The SPEAKER. It is very voluminous.

Mr. WOOD. I think the letter of the Secretary himself is quite short, and I do not ask that the accompanying documents be read.

The SPEAKER. The letter consists of eight foolscap pages. Does the gentleman want it all read?

Mr. WOOD. The same letter, as I suppose, was published in a newspaper of New York yesterday, and appeared in print to be an exceedingly short one. I desire to have it read for the purpose of afterward submitting a resolution based on the contents of that letter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to have the whole of it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., December 4, 1873.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: In the course of business connected with the settlement of affairs and paying unsettled claims of the late Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, certain developments have been made which I deem it proper, under the circumstances, to submit to the House of Representatives for such action as may appear to be right. On the assumption of the duties by the Adjutant-General, under the act of Congress (general nature, No. 133) approved June 10, 1872, and War Department General Orders, No. 55, of 1872, there was no reason to suppose that such developments would be made; hence no special search was made bearing upon them. But as complaint after complaint was received that claimants had not received from the late Bureau their bounties, arrears of pay, &c., and the said complaints were referred, in the course of business, to the Second Auditor, with whom rested all settlements and the final adjustment of the accounts, it gradually became apparent that vouchers to a considerable amount were filed as if paid, and credit taken for the amounts, when strong proof was presented that the claimants had not been paid; and in a similar manner developments embracing other subjects called for consideration.

From the incomplete and disordered condition of the records of the late Bureau, when received by the Adjutant-General, and from the fact that examination had also to be made in two offices of the Treasury Department to arrive at the true condition of certain accounts and claims, so much time elapsed that the trial of the late Commissioner by general court-martial became barred in part, under the statute of limitation, before it was discovered that he was probably amenable to trial at all. Though it is true that he could now be brought before a military court on some specific charges, yet for the reason that they would be more or less dependent on transactions which are barred, the trial would hardly be productive of public benefit, and also for the reason that the honorable House of Representatives has already ordered and had an investigation by a committee upon the affairs of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, I have deemed it best not to give the case to a military tribunal, but to submit it and the entire subject to the House of Representatives. The Department of Justice, however, has been furnished with some cases, and others are to follow, of apparent malfeasance, with a request to institute either criminal suit or civil suit, to recover moneys belonging to the United States, or both suits, as may be proper, against such of the officers and agents of the late Bureau as may be liable. In this connection, attention is invited to correspondence with the Attorney-General, found herewith, marked A.

The late Commissioner, Brigadier-General O. O. Howard, United States Army, has been promptly informed of the absence of important records and of the apparent exhibits against him, with a view to his offering explanations and supplying the missing records. How far he has done this will appear by the correspondence pointed to in the reports. In one item, stated at upward of $121,000, (see heading 7,) not accounted for it will be seen that accounts cannot be produced, and no attempt has been made to prove what has become of the money. Accounts, covering the amount in part, are alleged to have existed, but the disbursing officer, George W. Balloch, has stated that as they were not considered of much importance, they were not kept in the cases with the other accounts. The said accounts have disappeared, and it seems that neither the late Commissioner nor the late disbursing officer can account for their disappearance. This item is known as the retained bounty fund.

As to the misapplication of public funds, (see heading 8,) the records are in evidence, and these irregularities and violations of law, seemingly, have had much to do with the confusion of records, their defective condition, and the almost entire suspension of work by the late Bureau. The responsibility and accountability attaching to the late Commissioner, so far as now developed, amounts to upward of $278,573.66, and may be stated under the following headings:

1. Claimed by colored claimants, who allege that they have not been paid their pay and bounty, although the records of the Treasury Department show settlement of the claims, and vouchers have been filed by the late Bureau as evidence of payment, $33,888.39.
2. Defalcation of Saint Clair Mandeville, $8,503.29.
3. Defalcation of O. C. French, reduced to $3,014.54.
4. Defalcation of B. P. Runkle, $673.24.
5. Acknowledged by George W. Balloch to have been paid to B. P. Runkle, to reimburse the latter for mistakes made by his agents in paying bounties to the wrong parties, $1,331.03.
6. Due by the late Bureau in consequence of illegal double payments and certain accrued interest, several thousand dollars.
7. Irregular fund, called retained bounty fund, under the act of March 2, 1867, (Stat. 14, page 145,) not accounted for, upward of $121,000.
8. Misapplication of public funds and filing vouchers with the accounts covering a certain month when payments were made in a prior month—misapplication, $36,314.77; vouchers covering time subsequent to the actual date of payment, and therefore erroneous, $73,048.40: total, $109,363.17.

The accompanying reports of the Adjutant-General, dated August 4, 1873, and September 23, 1873, marked B and C, the report dated October 3, 1873, herewith, marked D, of Inspector-General E. Schriver, who made a critical examination of the records, in verification of the Adjutant-General's reports, point in detail to the transactions exhibited in the above summary.

War Department General Orders No. 7, of 1873, promulgated the proceedings of a general court-martial in the case of Major B. P. Runkle, one of the agents of the late Bureau. Reference is also invited to Executive Document No. 109, Forty-first Congress, third session; Miscellaneous Document No. 87, Forty-second Congress, third session, and report of Adjutant-General, dated February 20, 1873, the latter transmitted to the House of Representatives February 28, 1873. Copies herewith marked E, F, and G, respectively.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. W. BELKNAP, Secretary of War.

Mr. WOOD. I offer the following resolution with reference to the communication just read:

Resolved, That the letter of the Secretary of War, with accompanying reports of the Adjutant-General and of Inspector-General Shriver, relating to the defalcations, &c., of Brigadier-General O. O. Howard, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with instructions to report a resolution providing for the trial, by military court-martial, of any officers of the Army implicated thereby.

The question was upon adopting the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the resolution by striking out all that portion instructing the committee. Let the committee take such action upon the subject as their judgment may dictate.

Mr. WOOD. I will accept any proper amendment or modification that the gentleman may suggest.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest the simple reference to the Committee on Military Affairs without special instructions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about making that reference, as usual in such cases.

Mr. WOOD. In view of the antecedent history of the Freedmen's Bureau, and the connection with it of General Howard, I would prefer that there should be some instructions given to the committee. In saying that, I desire it to be distinctly understood that I have the utmost confidence in that committee. I desire to express no doubt of its disposition and sincerity to protect the country in every regard.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Is debate in order upon this resolution, and is it before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question is simply one of reference, and the Chair thinks that under the usage of the House debate is not in order.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Then I object to debate.

The question was upon the amendment moved by Mr. DAWES; and being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 94, noes 72.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. WOOD called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to say——

Mr. RANDALL. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I object to debate.

Mr. MAYNARD. Would it be in order to move to amend the resolution by inserting the word "alleged" before "defalcations?"

The SPEAKER. That would be in order after the pending amendments, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered, have been disposed of.

The question was again taken; and there were—yeas 174, nays 88, not voting 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Conger, Corwin, Crocker, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Farwell, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McDougall, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Mellish, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Niles, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Phelps, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, William A. Smith, Sprague, Stanard, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Thomas, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Woodford, and Woodworth—174.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barnum, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Davis, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunton, Jewett, Kasson, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Luttrell, Magee, Marshall, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Potter, Randall, Rapier, Rawls, Read, Robbins, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, Southard, Speer, Standeford, Stone, Storm, Swann, Todd, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—88.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banning, Barry, Roderick R. Butler, Freeman Clarke, Clinton L. Cobb, Coburn, Cotton, Crossland, De Witt, Elliott, Field, Hooper, Lewis, Martin, Mitchell, Phillips, Purman, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, George L. Smith, Snyder, and Stephens—22.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire to screen General Howard, or to take any step that looks in that direction, but——

Mr. WOOD. If debate is in order, I desire to be heard.

Mr. DAWES. But the resolution recites as a fact what it seems to me cannot properly be so recited in advance of a hearing. It states as a fact defalcations by General Howard. I do not understand that there has been any hearing or examination which warrants us in stating as a fact that General Howard has committed defalcations. I move to amend the resolution by inserting "alleged" before the word "defalcations."

Mr. WOOD. The resolution states as a fact what has been authenticated in two official documents sent here by the Secretary of War—the report of General Vincent at the last session of Congress, and the letter of the Secretary of War, with accompanying documents, sent in here to-day. I think we can well afford in a matter of this kind to stand on facts which this Administration declares to be facts. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] goes back of the action of the Administration on this subject, I will not.

Mr. DAWES. No matter how strong the proof may ultimately appear against General Howard, it is sufficient for us to say at present "alleged defalcations." I therefore make the motion to amend by inserting "alleged" before "defalcations." No tribunal has rendered any judgment to the effect the gentleman states. While I make this motion I do not stand here to shield any officer who may have been guilty of anything wrong.

Mr. WOOD. The Secretary of War submitted these documents to the Attorney-General, who gave his official opinion that General Howard was liable to be tried by court-martial, and should be so tried; but there was some technical difficulty in respect to the time when the crimes were committed.

Mr. DAWES. All that may be; yet the proper thing is for the Committee on Military Affairs to report upon the facts.

Mr. WOOD. Well, it is a very small matter, and I will not detain the House by quibbling about it. Let the amendment be inserted.

The SPEAKER. The word "alleged" will be inserted before "defalcations" if there be no objection.

Mr. WOOD. If the other side of the House wishes to take the responsibility of shielding this man, let it do so.

Mr. DAWES. This side of the House will take the responsibility of shielding no man who has done wrong; but we will take the responsibility of passing judgment after conviction, not before.

The SPEAKER. With the modification suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] the Chair hears no objection to the adoption of the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] referring this communication, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Military Affairs. The resolution will be considered as adopted.

ROOMS OCCUPIED BY THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting a communication from the Chief Justice of the Court of Claims respecting the room occupied by them; which was referred to the Committee on the Rules.

ARKANSAS CONTESTED ELECTION.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House papers in the contested-election case of L. C. Ganse vs. Asa Hodges, from the first congressional district of Arkansas; which were referred to the Committee on Elections.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting reports of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on two private land claims in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT BENT AND JACK SMITH.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting to the House a draught of a bill for the relief of Robert Bent and Jack Smith, half-breeds of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe tribes of Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the commissioners of claims, transmitting their third general report; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES PROPERTY IN STATE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in compliance with the act of July 15, 1870, an inventory of the property belonging to the United States in his possession; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES PROPERTY IN INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of July 15, 1870, an inventory of the property belonging to the United States now in his possession; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RESERVATION OF CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting agreements, three in number, with the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians for the relinquishment of the reservation provided for them by the treaty of 1867; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting his annual report of contingent expenses of the House; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TREASURY RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting his adjusted quarterly accounts of general receipts and expenditures of the United States for the third and fourth quarters of 1871, and the first and second quarters of 1872, being for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS, ETC.

Mr. TYNER, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers relating to the claim of Julius Sprandel, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the Forty-first Congress.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, the memorial and papers relating to the claim of Benjamin Holladay were taken from the files of the last House and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers and bills referred in the last Congress for the relief of Mrs. Julia A. Nutt, and for the relief of William Ivers, of Santa Fé, New Mexico.

On motion of Mr. STORM, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Charles E. Buck.

On motion of Mr. STORM, leave was also granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Mary L. Reich; and the same were referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. ORR, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of James C. Livingston; and the same were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. ORR, by unanimous consent, leave was also granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Mary V. B. Joice and Deborah A. Swan; and the same were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

On motion of Mr. ORR, by unanimous consent, leave was also granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of C. C. Spaids; and the same were referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Robert McKee.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker will state that requests for withdrawal of papers from the files of the House for the purpose of having them referred to committees may be done by leaving a notice to that effect at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. COX. In reference to the withdrawal of papers from the files of the House, I would like to know what is the rule.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule, but the gentleman from New York is aware of the fact that the Committee on Rules has that subject now under consideration.

Mr. COX. There ought to be a condition attached to the withdrawal of papers from the files of the House, that copies be left upon file.

Mr. RANDALL. That has been the practice, if it has not been the rule.

On motion of Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of John E. Tulloss, of Williamson County, Tennessee.

On motion of Mr. PERRY, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of John J. Hearn; and the same were referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HAVENS, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of L. S. Campbell; and the same were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TRAVELING EXPENSES OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee on Mileage asks that the following notice may be read for the information of members.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 1, 1873.

The Members and Delegates of the House are respectfully requested to furnish the Committee on Mileage with statements of their individual traveling expenses, severally, in coming to Washington.

H. S. BUNDY, Chairman.

REPEAL OF INCREASED CONGRESSIONAL PAY.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 471) to repeal the increase of certain salaries and to regulate the same, and to cover undrawn and returned balances into the Treasury. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COMINGO. I will yield for one minute to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. I wish to have read by the Clerk the resolution which I send up, deferring to such time as I may get the floor my reasons in support of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill now under consideration be recommitted to the Special Committee on Salaries, with instruction to report a bill repealing the act of March 3, 1873, so far as it provides an increase of the salaries of any of the officers of the Government; also to so change the law which was in force prior to the passage of said act of the 3d of March, 1873, as to substitute for the mileage therein allowed the actual expenses incurred by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, in coming to and returning from the capital once during each session of Congress by the most direct route of travel; and also such repeal as may restore the franking privilege.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order at this time as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. COMINGO. Mr. Speaker: I propose to vote for the bill under consideration, or for one of similar tendency. I think it may be greatly improved, but I shall vote for it, if necessary, without modification or amendment. This I shall do in obedience to what I believe to be the will of the constituency I represent; not that I believe the compensation now allowed members of Congress and others affected by the provisions of this bill too great, for I do not; but because the subject on which we are attempting to legislate is one of those in relation to which the people have an unquestionable and a pre-eminent right to demand definite action, and in relation to which their known wishes must be heeded regardless of the opinions and preferences of their Representatives. I think, however, and shall attempt to show, that the public sentiment that has been created on this subject is most unjust, and that it is the result of gross, if not willful and malicious, misrepresentation. Be this as it may, there is no doubt that the people demand a reduction of the salaries now allowed certain Government officials, and of the compensation allowed members of Congress.

While I am not only willing, but regard it as my duty, to yield to these demands in this behalf, I also regard it as my privilege to present and vindicate my own views and action touching the obnoxious legislation, and to verify what I have premised with reference to the prevailing public sentiment.

I am not, Mr. Speaker, unmindful of the fact that men listen impatiently, if they listen at all, to the words of those with whom they seriously and widely differ, and that they turn a deaf ear to arguments in support of a measure they have denounced, or the defense of an act they have condemned. Experience teaches us that opinions once formed, however hastily, become fixed, if not immovable, when combated by those who from any cause have incurred our displeasure. It matters but little in what manner, to what extent, or on what account the actual or supposed offense may have been given, arguments and appeals and explanations are seldom heeded, but are generally misrepresented and ridiculed, and unceremoniously denounced as unworthy of consideration, and with their authors are buried beneath an avalanche of opprobrium. This method of disposing of a subject is convenient, but it has not the merit of being the fairest and most satisfactory that might be adopted in the prosecution of an inquiry after truth. It presupposes purity of purpose and infallibility of judgment on the part of those who accuse and condemn, and an impartial exercise of the high prerogative they assume. Not even the worst passions and prejudices that ever embittered partisan strife will tolerate such a presumption.

I therefore, Mr. Speaker, feel constrained and encouraged to come before those with whom I have dared to differ, before those by whom all who have exercised this privilege have been unceremoniously and unqualifiedly condemned and denounced, and explain the views I entertained concerning the "salary bill," as it is called by some, or the "salary steal" and "salary grab" as it is courteously called by others, the assumed iniquities of which we are about to remove, in obedience to the demands of the people, which I have admitted we, acting in the capacity of Representatives, cannot disregard.

This I do without hesitation, notwithstanding it is a poor privilege I claim and enjoy; notwithstanding I have been assured that the effort will prove abortive, and that it looks like presumption; notwithstanding I encounter at the very outset the obstinate prejudices that have been engendered by unprecedented misrepresentation and false clamor; and notwithstanding the motives that now impel me, as well as those that have hitherto controlled my action, may and probably will be assailed and impugned with intensified bitterness. I alone know what they are and what they have been, and I alone am responsible for them. But let them be searched and tried, as in the fire, and let the consequences fall upon me alone. My reasoning may have been false, and may have led me to the commission of a great mistake. This, I cheerfully admit, is possible; but I have yet to be convinced that those who have shared so freely in the bitter denunciations of the press and from the hustings, during the past nine months, made a great mistake—much less that they committed a crime. Nor do I believe that one in ten of those who have been most noisy and malignant in their denunciations sincerely state their own views as to the propriety and effect of the measure they profess to condemn.

Be this as it may, there can be but little doubt that much of what has been written and spoken concerning the measure under consideration is unjust, and that in many cases it was prompted by motives the purity of which may well be doubted. Neither the tendencies nor the effect of the measure that has been so vigorously assailed, nor the motives of those who favored it, at any or all of its stages, seem to be correctly understood, or properly represented, or, if so understood, honestly and fairly discussed by those who have undertaken to enlighten the public mind upon this subject. If they were as pernicious and dishonorable as represented, the fact, it occurs to my mind, might be established more satisfactorily and clearly by some other method than the mere use of vituperative epithets and scandalous billingsgate. These are not generally considered very forcible arguments, nor do they ordinarily evince sincere conviction in the minds of those who use them most vigorously and fluently; nor are they often considered marks of honest disapprobation. If, however, the act and the motives are correctly given by those whose virtuous indignation has been so elegantly and clearly signified, the style of the argument is a matter of little moment to any one. But if, on the other hand, after an impartial and thorough examination of the law and its bearings, and a careful inquiry into the motives of its authors, it shall be manifest that the former is not as detrimental to the public good, nor the latter dishonorable, as represented, it will be difficult to justify the use of the opprobrious epithets in which some of these censors have so extravagantly indulged; and the presumption will become exceedingly strong that far more than from an honest conviction that a wrong has been done, or from a sincere desire to promote the public good.

> These crops of wit and honesty appear
> From envy, malice, hatred, spleen, and fear

There are those, however, who are sincere in their condemnation of the law referred to, and who, from a misapprehension, as I verily believe, of its bearing and its effect are unqualified in their expressions of disapprobation and discontent, and earnest in their condemnation of those who gave it their support, or opposed it and thereafter shared in its benefits. With such I have no quarrel, nor do I ask them to change or modify their opinions, unless after a re-examination of the whole subject they shall honestly believe they have been mistaken in their first conclusions. While it is the duty and interest, as well as the privilege, of the people to closely scrutinize the acts of their representatives, and hold them to a strict account for their misdeeds and mistakes, it is equally their duty and interest to deal justly and fairly with them, and govern themselves by the principles of the "golden rule" when they sit in judgment and try their public servants.

That the people and their representatives should be in perfect accord at all times, or on all subjects with which the latter may have to deal, is morally impossible. However pure may be the motives of the representative, he is almost certain to give offense at times to those whom he attempts to serve; nothing short of infallibility could prevent him from incurring the displeasure of at least a portion of those whose interests are committed to his hands; and it may be doubted whether that degree of perfection would relieve him from this unpleasant dilemma.

When, however, the acts of the representative produce wide-spread discontent, and severe and uncharitable criticism, it is, or at all events it has heretofore been, his privilege to explain the views and motives that controlled him; and the people have heretofore considered it their duty to hear him respectfully before unqualifiedly condemning his conduct. This, it appears, is no longer the rule; for public servants are now condemned without a hearing, and informed that they are absolutely presumptuous when they seek to avail themselves of that time-honored privilege.

It is my present purpose, however, Mr. Speaker, as already intimated, to show, or at least attempt to show, that the wide-spread discontent and the constant clamor that have filled the country for months past have been produced in part by a willful misrepresentation and partly by a misapprehension of the facts that should be understood and considered by those who desire to arrive at a correct conclusion in the premises and do simple justice to those concerned.

None of those who have shared in the scandalous and vulgar abuse of the press and the aspiring and coming patriots, who promise to reform the present pernicious habits and practices of our Government officials, and correct the abuses and remedy the evils of the past, desire, and none of them will ask, more than a full and fair discussion of the measure condemned and an unprejudiced exercise of judgment in a reconsideration of the facts that bear upon the subject and that controlled their action. If they made a mistake, they were to that extent unfortunate; if they committed a crime, and are therefore thieves and robbers, as declared, they are still more unfortunate; but in either case they may derive much consolation from the fact that many of the wisest and best statesmen of the past, whom the people have most delighted to honor, made the same kind of a mistake and committed the same crime. And still further consolation may be derived from the fact that it appears in these latter days that a class of patriots and politicians has risen up whose wisdom and purity are such that they, according to promises and pretensions, cannot make mistakes, and of course will not do wrong, as others have done, and as did the fathers whose names have hitherto been household words, and whose memories have hitherto been revered even by their political foes. These are "crumbs of comfort." But let these modern immaculates—

> Go and pretend their family is young,
> Nor own their fathers have been thieves so long.

It is most singular that the true characters of the representative men of the past should not have been discovered sooner. That period has hitherto been regarded with much favor, in a moral aspect at least. So much so that we have been accustomed to hear it spoken of as "the better days of the Republic," and to regard it as a kind of "golden age," the equal glories of which we may not hope to see. But this was all a mistake. Modern patriots have unveiled the moral deformities of the statesmen and sages of the past, and denounced them—indirectly at least—as thieves and scoundrels, and branded them as felons.

Although they hurl their denunciations and anathemas at none but those who favored the law referred to or availed themselves of the benefits of its provisions, yet, as I will show, all their criminal accusations and malignant tirades apply with as much force to many of the most upright and faithful representatives who have served the people within the last three-score years.

The law that has produced so much discontent, and which, as well as its authors, has been so bitterly assailed, we have been told is infamous; and its repeal has been, and is now, demanded, for the following reasons: First, because it is unjust and oppressive to the people; secondly, because its passage was a violation of an express contract between the people and their representatives, and its enactment, therefore, a felony. If these objections are well founded, or if either of them can be successfully maintained, there can be no doubt that the act should be repealed. But if neither is true or well taken, it follows that a wonderful clamor and a vast amount of slanderous accusation have unnecessarily found their way into this world of ours, in consequence of which there have been exhibitions of fear and trembling and penitential sorrow, the like of which hath not occurred at any time since panics were first ordained.

But, Mr. Speaker, let us inquire whether the law about which I am talking is unjust and oppressive to the people.

In order that we may answer this question fully and fairly, it becomes necessary for us to ascertain, as nearly as possible, what is the operation or effect of this law on the finances of the country when considered in connection with another law enacted at the same session, in consequence of which the bill increasing the compensation of members of Congress and other Government officials was, in my opinion, first introduced, and without which the House amendment to the Senate amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, embodying to some extent the provisions of the former bill, would not have been adopted. I refer to the act abolishing the franking privilege, approved January 31, 1873. The necessity of the amendment as it passed the House, and of the law as it now exists, depends in some measure on the effect the last-mentioned act had on the compensation members and others were entitled to under the then existing law. Was it more than adequate before the abolition of the franking privilege? and was it adequate after its abolition? were questions it was thought proper to consider—that it is now proper to consider—and that influence to a great extent views of members. The prospective and retrospective effects of the two acts on the Government Treasury were also—properly, I thought, and still think—taken into consideration; and that we may even now consider. But I presume they have been but little considered or cared for by those who have been most active in their efforts to excite popular discontent and avail themselves of this as a means of securing popular favor. At all events, I have yet to find one of them who has attempted a full and fair discussion of the measure by honestly stating what are its provisions and their effect by contrasting it with similar measures of the past; by considering the precedents that have been set for such legislation; or by attempting to show that it was unnecessary, except so far as this may have been done, or attempted, by untrue and unsupported assertions and bitter and unqualified denunciation.

Mr. Speaker, before I attempt to present the facts that bear upon, and, in my opinion, justified to some extent, the legislation that has been so furiously and generally denounced, I beg leave to state that I was absent from the House at the time the proposition to amend the Senate amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appriation bill was first made. When the motion to reconsider the vote whereby that amendment had been rejected came up for consideration, the next day, I was present and voted against the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. I also voted in favor of the motion to reconsider. Before these votes were taken it was understood, if not agreed upon, that the amendment that had been rejected the previous evening should, if the motion to reconsider prevailed, be amended by striking out the words seven thousand five hundred and inserting six thousand five hundred, and making the latter amount in full of all compensation and allowances, except actual traveling expenses. Had it not been for this understanding, the motion to reconsider would not have prevailed. But few members, after the franking privilege had been cut off, considered, I apprehend, that their compensation was adequate, and there were but few of them, I presume, that did not think some change was necessery, and there were but few, I imagine, that did not desire it should be made. I desired it, believing that it was both necessary and just, and voted accordingly.

I then thought and believed that $6,500 per annum, with actual traveling expenses in lieu of mileage, would be about equal to the compensation allowed by the act of July 28, 1866, including mileage, stationery, &c., as allowed by the laws in force at the time of the passage of that act. I am now well satisfied, however, that I was mistaken as to this, and that the compensation of members under the laws that regulated their compensation from and after the passage of the act of 1866, was better than that proposed by said amendment. I was unwilling at that time to favor an increase beyond the amount proposed by the House amendment, to wit, $6,500 per annum, as provided in that amendment. The Senate, however, disagreed with the House as to this and divers other amendments, which resulted, as will be remembered, in the appointment of a committee of conference, by whom the House amendment was struck out, and it was recommended that the sum of $7,500, with actual traveling expenses, should be paid each Senator, Representative, and Delegate. With the opinion I then entertained, I would not have voted for the conference report had I been present at the time the final vote was taken in the House.

An ardent desire for office has no doubt caused some to denounce and condemn the act increasing salaries, hoping, at the same time, that they might in the future reap the benefits that they profess to believe flow from a measure they now characterize as a crime, and whose authors they denounce as criminals; benefits, as we shall see, that are in a great measure imaginary, and a crime-charge as baseless as the dream of a lunatic. Let them realize their hopes if they can, and let the country enjoy the benefits that may be derived from their wisdom in council and purity in action.

But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to examine this much-cursed law, and discover, if possible, its effect and tendency financially, both as to the people and their Representatives, and to ascertain whether it is, as charged, unjust and oppressive to the former, and materially beneficial to the latter.

In order to arrive at a correct conclusion on these points, I propose to show in this connection what the Forty-third Congress would probably have cost the people under the provisions of the law in force at the time the members were elected, and what it would probably cost them under the act of March last. The amounts can be approximated with a fair degree of certainty.

This Congress, as every one knows, is composed of 376 members—74 Senators, 292 Representatives, and 10 Delegates—each of whom, under the act last mentioned, is entitled to receive annually, as compensation for his services, $7,500, and actual traveling expenses to and from the Capital once for each session. Assuming that the actual average traveling expenses of each member will not exceed $75, the Forty-third Congress would cost the people annually for these expenses and their compensation $2,848,200. It may be that the average traveling expenses will be more than $75 per capita, but I think not; indeed it is probable they will be less.

Under the provisions of the law of July 28, 1866, the direct pay of the Forty-third Congress would amount to $1,880,000 annually; and the annual allowance for stationery would amount to $47,000. I assume as probable that the cost to the Government of the copies of the Congressional Globe and other books, together with other allowances to each member, under the law last mentioned, all of which are cut off by the act of March last, was not less than $400 per capita; according to which supposition, they would have cost $150,400. assume further, as probable, that the average mileage per capita was not less annually than $700; and that the aggregate, therefore, for the Forty-third Congress would have been $263,200.

The exact cost to the Government of the free matter that might and probably would have been sent and received by members of Congress cannot be estimated with much certainty. Assuming, however, that the Postmaster-General is probably correct when he estimates the free matter sent through the mails during the year 1872 at a cost to the Government of $3,500,000, (see Abridgment Message and Documents, 1872-'73,) and assuming that, by reason of the increase in the number of Representatives under the last apportionment, there would not have been any diminution in the amount of free matter, and that the 376 members would have sent and received one-fifth of the amount, the expense to the Treasury on this account would have been $700,000; thus making the probable aggregate cost, or rather what it would have been, to the Government, under the law of 1866, amount to $3,040,600, or $192,400 more, as we have seen, than it would be under the existing law. Or, in other words, the cost per capita of each member in the Forty-third Congress, under the old law, would have been $8,086, while under the act of March last it is only $7,575; thus showing, unless my approximations are excessive, an annual saving to the Treasury, on this account alone, of $192,400, as before stated.

But the effect on the Treasury does not stop here. To the extent that the members of Congress exercised the franking privilege, to that extent did they drain the Treasury. Each member now, to the extent that he sends and receives mail matter, contributes to, instead of draws from, the funds in the Treasury. According to the estimate I have made, the free matter sent and received annually by the 376 members would be $700,000, or $1,861 per capita. I believe it has been ascertained that the postage on the public documents each member receives annually, through the folding-room alone, will, if paid according to present rates, amount to $800. If we add to this postage on other books and papers, and seeds, &c., and on letters and letter packages sent and received by him, all of which heretofore passed free through the mails, we will find the approximation as to this very nearly accurate. But it is not probable members will burden the mails with books, &c., to the extent they formerly did. It is not improbable, however, that the postage that will be paid on the matter sent and received by each member will amount to $800. But we may estimate it with safety at $500. This will of course add annually $188,000 to the amount in the Treasury, which, added to the $192,400, on account of the supposed saving in expenditures, makes a difference in the annual balance of $380,400; the annual balance being that much greater than it would have been if the Forty-third Congress had served, and been allowed compensation, mileage, stationery, &c., in pursuance of the laws in force at the time it was chosen. This estimate, it must not be forgotten, has reference to the compensation of members of Congress only, and is designed to show as nearly as possible the probable difference of the expenditures of the Government in that behalf under the law of 1866 and that of 1873.

There is yet another view of this subject that is in my opinion worthy of consideration, and to which I invite attention. Let it be kept in mind that the act of the 3d of March last is condemned and denounced because it imposes additional burdens on the people, because it was a wanton waste of the people's money, &c. Let it be remembered, also, that but for the total abolition of the franking privilege the act increasing salaries could not have been passed. They could not have been increased to $6,500, as they were by the House amendment; much less could they have been raised to $7,500. I believe members were generally satisfied with the compensation they received directly and incidentally under the law of 1866, and but very few, if any, desired to change that law, or even thought of changing it, until after the passage of the act abolishing a privilege that had long been enjoyed, and that was both convenient and useful—convenient to members, and useful, if not necessary, to the people—a privilege the revocation of which imposed quite a burden on each member in the way of postage, as we have seen, and the abuse of which scarcely warranted its repeal.

But if it is true that the abolition of the franking privilege superinduced the legislation that followed it, and which we are considering, we ought to see to what extent the burdens of the people have been increased and to what extent there has been a reckless waste of their money. If it shall appear from a consideration of these two acts, and of their effect on the Treasury, that they have resulted, or rather would result, beneficially to the Treasury, and increase the annual balances therein, as I think they would, the conclusion becomes almost irresistible that the complaints, censures, and denunciations that have been uttered are unjust, however sincere may have been the convictions of those by whom they were uttered.

In order that we may ascertain the effect of the condemned legislation, considered in connection with that which preceded and superinduced it, I again invite attention to the report of the Postmaster-General for the years 1872–'73. If the cost of carrying the free matter was $3,500,000, as he states, the repeal of the law that permitted this burden to be imposed on the Treasury manifestly saves that amount, or increases the annual balance to that extent. Again, if the annual saving to the Government, on account of the expenditures for the two Houses of Congress, is, as I have endeavored to show, $380,400, it follows that the annual increase will be $3,888,400. Deducting from this the increased annual expenditures on account of the increase in the salaries of the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme Court, and others, which amount to $47,000, we have a net annual saving of $3,841,400. But this balance will be further augmented by the amount of postage annually paid on matter that passed free through the mails under the law of 1866. This amount cannot, of course, be definitely ascertained. It is not unreasonable, however, to suppose that it will not be less than half the total of 1872. If so, it will be $1,750,000 annually, which, added to the $3,841,400, makes $5,591,400 as the probable annual increase in the balances in the Treasury by reason of the two acts, which, I believe, we must from necessity connect, if we desire to reach correct conclusions and do justice to those who are most concerned. I do not assume that the estimates I have made are exact, but I have made them as nearly so as possible by what I consider fair approximations. If these are unreasonable in any instance, I am not aware of the fact. It may be that they are. If so, I will be obliged to any one who will point out the errors, and thus enable me to correct them, as I have no desire to deceive myself, and certainly none to deceive others.

Another consideration that influenced some, at least, of those who have shared in the denunciation I have characterized as unjust, was a desire to equalize the compensation of members by abolishing the mileage system that obtained prior to the passage of the act we are about to repeal. The irregularity or inequality of compensation resulting from that system will be perceived by any one who will take the trouble to examine a distance table, and calculate the mileage at forty cents per mile, between the principal cities lying near to and remote from Washington. This inequality will be the more apparent when it is remembered that the mileage was allowed at each session. It was unjust to members and equally unjust to the people.

But, Mr. Speaker, the retroactive feature of the law is the one which has been most furiously assailed; and in consequence of which those who shared in its benefits, as well as those who favored its adoption, have been denounced as thieves and robbers. It is difficult to perceive how, in view of all antecedent legislation of a similar character, and in view of the position of those who participated in it and shared in its benefits, such epithets can be justified. It is insisted that the rate of compensation being established by law at the time the members of the Forty-second Congress were elected, there was a contract on the part of the latter to serve for that compensation, and that the act increasing it was a felony; and further, that all who received the increase received stolen property, and are felons.

I will remark, in passing, Mr. Speaker, that this argument and denunciation apply with equal force to the present and the last Congress, and fixes the alleged crime on the former as clearly as on the latter. For if it was a felony to receive the benefits of the act, for the reason given, the law that fixed the rate of compensation when the Forty-second Congress was elected, being in force at the time the Forty-third was chosen, the conclusion, if just, is equally applicable to both; and whatever of wrong was done must be shared by both; the only difference being in the amount of the benefits received. But it has been further insisted that the turpitude of the act is aggravated by the fact that the increase was made at the close of the last session of the Congress; and hence that there can be no doubt as to the criminal motive on the part of those concerned.

This argument, Mr. Speaker, if argument it may be called, impliedly admits the power of Congress to fix the compensation, but questions the right to exercise it at the close of one of its sessions. Indeed, I do not suppose there is any one who has read the provision of the Constitution as to this that will pretend to doubt the power. I do not think that any of those who voted against the measure even, in all of its stages, pretend to doubt the power that was exercised. What difference, then, can it make as to the time at which it was exercised? If the Forty-third Congress may fix a value upon the services that may or shall be rendered by the Forty-fourth, as is impliedly admitted by the argument referred to, may it not with greater propriety fix the value of its own services after they shall have been rendered? If not, why not? Is it not reasonable to suppose that it is easier to fix a value on services rendered than upon those that are to be rendered? It unquestionably is; and especially is this true when those to be rendered are unknown, or, at least, uncertain, and are rendered more uncertain by reason of our want of knowledge as to their quantity and importance. In the one case we have an opportunity to consider and pass upon all the facts necessary to a just conclusion, and in the other we are left to mere conjecture as to all of them. The policy of exercising, and not the right to exercise, the power can be safely questioned; and there can be no doubt that it is safer and more appropriate to fix it after they are rendered than before, and while they are merely conjectural.

But, as before stated, all the precedents that bear on this branch of the question are in harmony with the course pursued or action taken by the Forty-second Congress. The latest occurred during the Thirty-ninth Congress. That body, on the last day of its first session, July 28, 1866, passed an act by which the compensation of its members was increased from $3,000 to $5,000 per annum, and its provisions were retroactive, just as are those of the act we propose to repeal.

In both the Senate and House of Representatives there were at that time a few prominent democrats and many prominent republicans, some of whom were members of the Forty-second Congress, and a few of whom are members of the Forty-third. All of them, without exception, if I am not misinformed, took the increased compensation, retrospective as well as prospective, and kept it. Among them we find the names of Senators Fessenden of Maine, Sumner and Wilson of Massachusetts, Harris and Morgan of New York, Buckalew and Cowan of Pennsylvania, Saulsbury of Delaware, Creswell and Johnson of Maryland, Hendricks and Lane of Indiana, and James Guthrie of Kentucky; and Representatives Hooper, Banks, Boutwell, Washburn, and Dawes of Massachusetts, Brooks, Raymond, Conkling, and Goodyear of New York, Randall, Myers, Kelley, Stevens, Mercur, and Scofield of Pennsylvania, Niblack, Kerr, Julian, and Orth of Indiana, and Farnsworth, Washburn, and Marshall of Illinois, besides many others, equally honorable and worthy, whose names I must omit.

Another precedent is found in the action taken by the Thirty-fourth Congress at its second session, and within two weeks of its adjournment without day. The bill providing for an increase of the compensation was introduced by Senator Butler, of South Carolina. It passed the Senate and House on the 15th day of August, 1856, and was approved by the President on the day following. It increased the compensation of members from $8 per day to $3,000 per annum, and allowed the latter rate from the beginning of the first session. Although Senators and Representatives differed as to the propriety of the act, no one questioned the authority, none refused to accept the increased compensation, and none of them returned it to the Treasury.

Among the distinguished Senators who participated in that crime we find the names of Judah P. Benjamin and John Slidell of Louisiana, Charles Sumner and Henry Wilson of Massachusetts, John J. Crittenden and John B. Thompson of Kentucky, Benjamin F. Wade and George E. Pugh of Ohio, James C. Jones and John Bell of Tennessee, Hamilton Fish and William H. Seward of New York, James A. Bayard and John M. Clayton of Delaware, Henry S. Geyer of Missouri, Andrew P. Butler of South Carolina, and Lyman Trumbull and Stephen A. Douglas of Illinois, besides others I might mention were it necessary.

In the House, too, at that time, were many of those who were honored by the people, and whose characters have hitherto defied reproach. There were Kennett, Porter, Lindley, Oliver, Miller, Phelps, and Caruthers of my own State; Banks, De Witt, Hall, and Burlingame of Massachusetts; King, Dickson, Spinner, and Morgan of New York; Pennington of New Jersey; Grow, Packer, and Covode, of Pennsylvania; Letcher of Virginia, Ruffin of North Carolina, Keitt, Brooks, and Orr of South Carolina; Cobb and Stephens of Georgia, Giddings and Wade of Ohio, Underwood and Humphrey Marshall of Kentucky, Zollicoffer and Etheridge of Tennessee, besides many others. If any of those who have hitherto honored these Representatives and Senators desire to know how they voted and spoke on the proposition to increase their compensation, they can ascertain by consulting the Congressional Globe for the second session of the Thirty-fourth Congress. The fact, however, that they received and appropriated it to their own use is of greater importance.

Still another and earlier precedent may be found in the action taken by the Senate and House during the first session of the Fifteenth Congress. It increased the compensation from $6 per day to $1,500 per annum. The act was approved March 19, 1818, and, like the obnoxious act of the 3d of March last, was retrospective; that is, it allowed "back pay" at the increased rate for a little more than three months, and forward pay, if I may be allowed the expression, for the remainder of the two years. That Congress was in session, all told, about seven months. The total compensation of its members, at the rate fixed by law when they were chosen, would have amounted to about $1,260; and at the rate established by themselves after their election, it amounted to $3,000; in addition to which they were allowed mileage and certain perquisites. Thus, it will be seen, they more than doubled the compensation allowed at the time of their election; and it is said that each Senator, Representative, and Delegate accepted and retained the retrospective as well as the prospective allowance; not knowing, I presume, or, if knowing, disregarding the fact that he was committing a theft and a robbery.

If we consult the Senate and House Journals of that period, we find among the members of that Congress some of the purest as well as most honored patriots and statesmen our country has produced. In the Senate, among other distinguished names, we find those of Rufus King, John W. Eppes, James Barbour, David J. Morrill, and John J. Crittenden. In the House of Representatives, we find those of Henry Clay, Nathaniel Ruggles, Ebenezer Huntington, William Lowndes, William A. Burwell, James Pleasants, Joseph Desha, George Robertson, Richard M. Johnson, and William Henry Harrison. These men have all passed away. Here and there, all over the land, in the stately and costly monuments that have been erected in honor of their memories, are to be found evidences of the fact that they were thought worthy to be remembered with the patriots and statesmen and heroes of our country; and it sounds strange to hear them called "thieves and robbers," or "salary grabbers and rogues." If I shall be told that no such epithets as these have been applied to these sages and heroes, but that they apply, and have been applied, to the members of the Forty-second Congress alone, I beg to be informed as to the peculiar facts that justify the application to the latter and not the former. What is it that constitutes the difference in the moral quality of these respective acts? If all those who favored the legislation that is denounced, or opposed it and afterward shared in its benefits, are "thieves and robbers," how is it possible for the members of the Fifteenth, Thirty-fourth and Thirty-ninth Congresses to escape the same condemnation? If these questions can be satisfactorily answered by those whose duty it is to answer them, they surely will not refuse to do so; and if they cannot, it necessarily follows that they in their efforts and desires to injure others have injured themselves. I apprehend that none of them will attempt to accept the logical results of the position they have assumed; but they may, and if they merit success I hope they may achieve it.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have not adverted to the fact that others have set us precedents that sustain us in what we did, for the purpose of justifying a wrong, if wrong was committed. Crime can not be justified by precedents. If the acts of July 28, 1866, August 16, 1856, and March 19, 1818, were thefts and robberies, or moral wrongs, that of March 3, 1873, was equally wrong; and if they were right the latter is right. The moral quality of each is the same, except so far as it may be made to differ by reason of the motives that produced it; and this quality was fixed the moment the act was performed, and it could not be changed by any subsequent act. I have before stated that I have been unable to discover either legal or moral wrong in the act increasing the salaries, and which we are about to repeal. Other members think differently, and pronounce it both a legal and moral outrage. They may be right and I wrong. They, or some of them at least, have indicated their views by returning their increased back pay to the Treasury, and by retaining their increased forward pay. I have indicated mine by refusing to return either. Those who drew the increased pay from the Treasury must, at the time they did so, and during most of the time they retained it, have believed that they had both a legal and a moral right to the property of which they thus acquired possession. It is uncharitable to believe otherwise. But, subsequently, by some means they became convinced that they were mistaken, and from time to time, during a period of almost nine months, as light beamed upon their pathways, they brought forth fruits meet for repentance by returning to the Treasury the amounts they had respectively drawn. This was not only right, but it became an imperative duty, so soon as they discovered or became convinced of their error in this transaction.

Each of them virtually admits that he had become satisfied of this, and that he desired to make reparation; but none discloses the argument that carried conviction to his mind and heart. This, had it been done, might have carried conviction to the minds and resulted in the conversion of the hearts of others who have not gone and done likewise. What the potent argument was that worked such important results is left to that most unsatisfactory source of information—mere conjecture. In this I will not indulge, in relation to a matter ofsuch importance. Is it probable, Mr. Speaker, that public opinion could have been the convincing power? The moral character of the act we all know and admit did not depend upon public opinion, but upon its inherent qualities, and had to be, and must be, determined by them alone. But, sir, I beg permission to ask those with whom I have honestly differed, and who have as honestly differed with me, on this subject, what their convictions would have been, and what their action in the premises would have been, had a majority of their constituents and of the public press approved and not condemned the act? And, further, had it been generally approved and commended, would they have been convinced by the other arguments and considerations that were addressed to their minds that it was their duty to return to the Treasury the several sums they did return? Much depends on the answers each may be able to give to his own conscience in reply to these questions. At that tribunal alone can the case be properly tried. If he stands acquitted and justified there, popular disapprobation and denunciation will be robbed of half their terrors; and if condemned or censured, popular confidence and popular applause, though they be unbounded, will be a barren if not a bitter triumph.

And to those whose clamor and denunciations have filled the land for months I here propound similar questions, and beg that they give themselves a fair trial at the bar of their own consciences; that they take into consideration and calmly examine all the facts and circumstances that bear upon the questions as they really exist, and ask their consciences to tell them what they would have done had they occupied the places of those they so bitterly condemn. Should they by these faithful monitors be assured that they would not have accepted either the back or the forward pay, they will have the consolation of knowing that they are, at least in the opinion of that court, better and more honest men than Clay and Crittenden and Johnson and Harrison, or any of the other patriots and statesmen with whom they were associated or by whom they were succeeded.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, permit me to repeat that it is my intention, and for the reason given, to vote for the bill under consideration, admitting, as before, that the views and arguments that controlled my action may have led me into grievous errors; and if they have, which I by no means admit, asking no extenuation therefor, except such as is due to human fallibility.

Mr. ORTH. How much time, Mr. Speaker, have I?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes.

Mr. ORTH. I will yield, then, for five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I desire in a very few words to state one or two aspects of this case as it presents itself to me. This is a peculiar measure, and it is before the House in a peculiar position. It is a peculiar measure, because it is one of the very few where the servant can say to his master what shall be the price of his labor. The distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] yesterday intimated that it was one of the prerogatives of Congress to fix the compensation of its members, and that right was sanctified in law as well as in morals. And some gentlemen on this floor have said that, instead of the present increase, the salary ought to be $10,000 if it were put at what was just and proper. It all reminds me of what was told of Lord Clive when he took money from the East Indian treasury. He was there as the conqueror of India. He was there with ample power, and yet he took only £100,000; and when called to account for it by the British Parliament he said, "Gentlemen, there were millions there, and I had the amplest power to appropriate to myself whatever I wanted; and I am now only amazed at my own moderation in taking what I did." But, Mr. Speaker, there must be some limit to this, and that limit is fixed by popular opinion. The people have already spoken. Where they have reposed so much confidence they expect economy and moderation. But, Mr. Speaker, this is a peculiar measure for another reason. The American Congress stands to-day at the bar of public opinion because of the passage of this bill increasing pay. The present proposition is peculiar, because it is not proposed to be put through the regular course. It does not go to the regular committees. It was put through under whip and spur, and not with that investigation and consideration by committees which are necessary for intelligent and effective legislation.

The Forty-third Congress has inherited this from the Forty-second, and it makes haste, in deference to popular wrath, to baptize its birth as a Congress by a sacrifice of obedience. And whence, Mr. Speaker, came the popular wrath? What was the measure that provoked it? The last Congress abolished the franking privilege, passed an act which increased the salary of the majority of members, and reduced the salary of some members. This was a first step on the part of members to meet public expenditures which they might have to pay out of their own pockets. Some were for abolishing mileage, some for abolishing stationery, and so $2,500 in lieu of all allowances were placed in the appropriation bill.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to one point. I do it with all respect to the Forty-second Congress. I do it in justice to history. That Forty-second Congress had all the stationery, all the postage, nearly all the mileage, and then they gave themselves this additional $2,500 a year. I say this was the main feature which excited the popular wrath. Uncle Sam said it was not "fair tradin," and that it was indirection. This was the first step; but the people afterward said that the increase of salary was too much—this bill increasing the salaries of the President, the Vice-President, and the Cabinet officers, members of Congress, and a whole host of other officers; and this, too, when the country was on the verge of financial trouble, when the farmers were getting only 15 and 20 cents a bushel for their corn, and when laborers' wages were being reduced, and they justly thought every shoulder should bear its share of the burden. It might have been a fair measure at some more prosperous period. The public said that this was not the time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ORTH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.]

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Speaker, the debate thus far has been instructive as well as interesting. Gentlemen who have addressed the House upon the salary question with few exceptions have advocated a modification or repeal of the present rate of compensation. Amid a wide diversity as to methods proposed and reasons assigned for legislation, the greatest unanimity has been manifested in regard to this practical conclusion. Whether impelled by individual conviction or in obedience to popular demand, it will be fortunate for the country and for Congress itself, if the prevailing sentiment here expressed shall ripen into legislative enactment. Our action concerns not merely the personal reputations of members but the honor of Congress itself, and will, I trust, be a vindication of its right to confidence and respect in public estimation. Nothing undermines the morality and virtue of the people more rapidly and effectually than the prevalent belief that its public men are venal and corrupt. When men selected to fill high and responsible positions for their talents, experience, and previous good character are condemned as untrustworthy and dishonest, the people lose faith in the possibility of resisting temptation; the standard of general morality is lowered, and incentives to virtuous action are weakened or wholly eradicated.

It has been charged upon our public men, and is by many still believed, that the increase of congressional compensation was induced from the most sordid and unworthy motives; that the tempting pecuniary consideration of the proposed increase swerved the action of members from following the dictates of their own judgment and secured the passage of the law. This idea is especially entertained in regard to the retroactive increase and the out-going members of the last House, although the record shows that as many, or almost as many, of the latter voted against as for the law.

The legislative branch of the Government, by the restoration of the former rate, will dissipate the distrust pervading the public mind and regain the credit it justly deserves and has heretofore possessed. I shall not, Mr. Speaker, attempt to defend or justify the action of the last Congress in raising salaries. I opposed the measure on every occasion and in every form, from its first introduction to its final passage. I pronounced it inopportune, unnecessary, unwise, and unjustifiable. My opinion remains unchanged. I thought then the salary was sufficient. I so said and voted, and say so still. Others thought differently. I did not then doubt, nor have I since questioned here or elsewhere, the honesty of their opinions and votes.

Gentlemen from rich and apparently thriving commercial and manufacturing districts, measuring their own compensation by the larger earnings in professional and mercantile pursuits, might honestly support and expect their constituents to approve of an increase. They were incredulous at the predictions of dissatisfaction and discontent uttered upon this floor. They failed to notice the lavish expenditures in other directions, the large appropriations for improvements, not only here at the capital, but for public buildings and public works throughout the country. Even then agricultural industry at the West was depressed and suffering. The sea-board market prices of its great staples scarcely realized the cost of transportation. Corn was then, in Iowa, worth as much for fuel as to ship for food.

In the light of subsequent events and the universal condemnation of the increase, its advocates and supporters acknowledge it to have been at least a grave political blunder. But if the increase was then unwise and unnecessary, how shall we justify its retention for ourselves?

The distress which then pervaded the agricultural regions of the West has extended to the manufacturing towns and villages of the East. Business and industry in the wealthiest portions of the country have been paralyzed, and workmen by the thousand are out of employment. The Treasury itself startles us with a diminution of receipts—an actual increase during the last month of over $9,000,000 of national indebtedness. Times are hard, money stringent, and taxes seem unusually oppressive. It becomes the nation's representatives to set the example of economy and frugality. They ought not to continue an unreasonable or extravagant rate of compensation which augments the public burden.

It has been urged that the so-called back pay allowed by the act of last March was the objectionable feature of the law, and that the people do not demand a reduction of the rate for the subsequent Congress. It is true that public criticism and censure were first and chiefly directed to the Forty-second Congress, and the supposed controlling consideration believed to have secured the passage of the law bitterly denounced and condemned. But the public voice, the sober second thought of the people, in view of precedents and authority which permit, if they do not justify, retroactive compensation, has settled down to the position that, whether the five preceding instances of congressional back pay were right or wrong, this increase was unjustifiable, for it was too much pay. It was not only, in the language of the gentleman from Ohio, "too much back pay," but it was too much both back and forward pay.

I agree that the compensation for the Forty-second Congress was by that law made too high. But that question is now before this House for consideration only as it involves the proper compensation for members of this Congress. Granted that the increase was wrong for the Forty-second Congress, how can the Forty-third Congress justify the retention of the same rate? It has been suggested that the members of the last Congress contracted to serve at the old rate. If so, their contract with the people was made at the time of their election, and the members of the Forty-third Congress already elected, and holding certificates of their election when the law was changed, had also contracted to serve at the old rate, and should not be paid the increase.

It may be said the argument as to a contract applies to neither, since each Congress has the legal constitutional and moral right for sufficient cause to regulate and fix its own compensation. If this is true, the Forty-second Congress could, with more justice and propriety, claim the increased compensation than the Forty-third. The members of the last Congress had a better excuse for increasing their salary than we for retaining the rate they fixed. They attended three regular sessions during their term; the law now requires but two. Their expenses were proportionally greater than ours. They were sworn into office at the commencement of their official terms, and many of them assigned to arduous and important duties during the summer recess. We have been called upon to do no official act until this December session, unless the filing of election certificates with the Clerk and the monthly receipt for congressional salary may be considered such.

The members of the last House represented larger constituencies in population and territory with proportionably greater labor, expense, and responsibility. The number of Representatives in this House has been increased by the addition of fifty members, and the congressional districts we now represent proportionally reduced in most of the States. Official labors for our constituents at the Departments, and correspondence relating to pensions, bounties, and the administrative affairs of the civil service, have been necessarily lessened. If we regard the compensation too much for their expenses and services, how shall we justify the retention of the same rate for ourselves? Much more, Mr. Speaker, if the rate should be reduced hereafter, how can we defend our action in not applying it to ourselves for the full term? Are we worth less to the country when sworn into office and in session than when private citizens and merely members-elect? Can we claim or accept a greater sum for the period while waiting at home without increased expenses to assemble here for legislative duty, than we assert is a proper compensation for the whole term? The committee's bill does not in this respect meet my judgment as to our duty. Let us repeal the law and make our compensation for our whole term no more than it would have been had the act of last March not passed.

Mr. Speaker, we are not called here to sit in judgment upon our predecessors. We are ourselves upon trial before the country. It has been predicted that no repeal or reduction of the salary increase would be made by this Congress. It has been affirmed that members of Congress would not act with unselfish regard to the public good in a matter so peculiarly affecting their personal interests. Let us disprove these prophecies and disabuse the public mind of its false and unworthy estimate.

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House by a general discussion of this salary question, but simply say a few words in elucidation of the proposition that I had the honor to present on yesterday. And here let me premise that this is not my proposition. It is as much the proposition of a dozen, or twenty, or fifty members in the House as it is mine. I consented to offer it, more in the nature of a compromise than anything else, because it must be apparent to every one who has listened to this discussion that unless there be a compromise on the principle of give and take, this House will never arrive at any conclusion. While ample discussion of this question will be justified by the people, it strikes me that this matter has been already amply discussed; and hence, before taking my seat I shall ask the House to second the previous question on my proposition, and bring the House directly to vote upon it. I notice that my colleague from the Indianapolis district [Mr. COBURN] yesterday spoke of my proposition as containing "a sweeping clause." I intended that it should contain a sweeping clause; and it strikes me that upon this subject the people of the country have in unmistakable terms told us what they expect at the hands of their representatives.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that four propositions have been definitely settled by public opinion: First, that the law of the last session of Congress should be repealed; secondly, that mileage should never again be restored; thirdly, that the franking privilege, so far as it relates to the personal privileges, if any, of members of Congress, should never be restored, whatever else this House may do with reference to providing for the distribution of the public documents of the country among the people; and, in the fourth place, I think it has been equally settled that the salary of members of Congress shall be substantially what it was under the old law. Hence I provide in the instructions which are now pending that the committee shall report "a bill repealing the whole salary act, so far as the same can be constitutionally done." And at this point I desire to modify my proposition, if I am authorized to do so, by inserting after the word "done" the words "excepting the salaries of the justices of the Supreme Court."

Mr. TREMAIN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that his amendment, as I understand it, makes no provision for covering into the Treasury any portion of the back pay which may have been returned or which may not have been drawn.

Mr. ORTH. If the gentleman from New York will permit me, I will soon come to the point he has raised. I desire, then, to except from the repeal of the law of last winter the justices of the Supreme Court, and I do it for the reason, that by the Constitution their salaries cannot be reduced during their terms of office; and the result of repeal would be that whenever a judge resigned or died, and his successor was appointed, we should have two classes of judges, one class drawing one compensation and another class drawing another compensation. I doubt whether our people have seriously objected to the increased compensation to our judges.

I then come to the proposition suggested by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAIN,] and that is as to when this law shall take effect.

Mr. TREMAIN. I think the gentleman did not understand my question.

Mr. ORTH. Yes, I understand it; that in meeting the new compensation we shall take into consideration what has been received since the 4th of March up to this time.

Mr. TREMAIN. I am satisfied you did not understand me. I understand the effect of your amendment to be that there is no provision made whereby those gentlemen who have drawn their pay shall be permitted to return it to the Treasury, or by which the pay of those gentlemen who have not drawn it can be so returned.

Mr. ORTH. I did misunderstand you. That is a matter of detail to be settled by the committee. This question is one that has already addressed itself to the mind of every member within the hearing of my voice as to the point of time at which the new law shall take effect. The history of legislation upon this subject is simply this: that whenever Congress has heretofore increased its compensation that increase has related back to the commencement of that Congress; and when Congress has reduced its compensation that reduction has taken place from and after the passage of the act. That has been the history of our legislation on this subject. I am not willing, as one member, by my vote here to say that I have taken money since the 4th of March which was not mine. I came on this floor, as a large majority of the members did, having no part nor lot in the enactment of the law of last session; and the compensation fixed by that law has been received regularly, I believe, by every member upon this floor with but three exceptions. Now, then, I am satisfied that while there has been disapprobation on the part of the people with reference to the increase as provided in the act of March last, on the other hand the American people do not desire a substantial reduction of our pay. What has been paid us has been paid under that law. I would have no objection myself to let the law we are about to pass retroact; but as a matter of compromise, for the purpose of meeting the various conflicting opinions which I find expressed, both publicly and privately, I think it better, and that it will meet the wishes of the people, to let the reduction commence from and after the passage of the law. That will be in accordance with the previous legislation of the country on this subject. My proposition affects only the political salaries; that of the President of the United States—not the present incumbent, because he is beyond the reach of our legislation, even if we desired to reach him—but that after the expiration of the present presidential term it shall be brought back to where it was prior to the 4th of March last. I believe the people are as much in favor of the reduction of the President's salary as of that of Senators and Representatives; and so with regard to the members of the Cabinet. My amendment, then, applies only to what are known as political salaries provided for in the act of last March, and not judicial salaries.

Now, then, an objection has been urged to recommitting this bill to the committee, because it will take time. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that this is what influences me in asking the committal of the bill. We do not know precisely what the average compensation will be; and hence it is desirable to have the official report of the committee on this point. When we fix this compensation we desire to go before the people and state to them that upon an official report made to this House by one of its committees we found the salary thus averaged to be so many dollars, and we fixed it at that substantially. My impression is that it would vary but very little from $6,000 per annum; and if placed at $6,000 per annum, I am satisfied it would meet the approbation of our constituents.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana if it is his judgment that a salary of $8,000 for a member of the Cabinet is a fair and respectable salary, and especially if he considers that a fair and respectable salary in proportion to the pay of members of Congress at $6,000?

Mr. ORTH. I will answer the gentleman very cheerfully. And I say that, in comparison with the expenses of a member of this House—who every two years has to go before his people, upon whom devolves in a great measure the responsibility of keeping up the organization of the political party of his district; who has to neglect his business by coming here, having to stay here during the long session of Congress, then again during the short session of Congress, so that he has no permanent residence—$8,000 received by a Cabinet officer is a larger salary in proportion than $6,000 received by a member of Congress.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I desire to ask one more question.

Mr. ORTH. I dislike to yield. My time has almost expired.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I desire to ask just a single question. Is the gentleman not aware that by the first act regulating the salaries of members of the Cabinet and members of Congress, in 1789, the salaries of members of the Cabinet were fixed at more than three times the salaries of members of Congress, and that they stood in that way for twenty years?

Mr. ORTH. I have not examined the law; it was passed before I was born, [laughter,] but presume the gentleman is correct.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the previous question. If I understand the effect of it—and if not I will thank the Chair to correct me—it will be this: that the House by seconding the previous question will come to a vote, not on the rejection or adoption of my proposition, but will simply decide this: that it will have a vote and determine whether it shall be adopted or rejected. The first question is on seconding the demand for the previous question. The next question will be on the adoption or rejection of the instructions I have moved.

Mr. KASSON. Has the time of the gentleman from Indiana expired?

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned last evening, as gentlemen will remember, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] had risen to call the previous question. The Chair did not submit the gentleman's motion, because he was taken off the floor by a motion to adjourn. And this morning the Chair assigned the floor to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO,] but only by consent, under the call of the gentleman from Iowa really still pending for the previous question, which, if seconded, will operate first on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.]

Mr. SHANKS. I hope the previous question will not be sustained now. There are other gentlemen quite as anxious to state their views on this question as the gentlemen who have spoken. And if the country is again to be overrun with talk about this subject, I say let us talk about it till the people are satisfied that we understand it as well as they do.

Mr. KASSON. If I have the floor now, I wish to state the purpose for which I have risen. I propose for myself solely to call the previous question. I have, however, an agreement to give up my twenty minutes—five minutes to one gentleman, a few minutes to another, and so on. As soon as that is disposed of, I assure the gentleman from Indiana that I will call the previous question; but not so as to prevent any gentleman hereafter from speaking on the subject. The proposition will be after the seconding of the previous question, which I desire to be seconded, not on the bill but on the motion to recommit with instructions; so gentlemen may vote "ay" on the previous question and "no" on the subsequent question.

That brings us to the work upon the bill. And when we get to work at the bill under the five-minute rule, then those gentlemen who wish five minutes to speak can have it upon the work in hand. I trust that arrangement will be satisfactory, as I think it will be, for I have heard from all sides of the House a desire expressed that we may be brought to the bill.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS. I would inquire of the gentleman if he proposes to permit a vote on any other amendments than those of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH,] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT?]

Mr. KASSON. I intend to be liberal so far as it is in my discretion at all.

Mr. E. H. ROBERTS. I believe it is the desire of the House rather to have a vote on certain amendments than to spend time in debate.

Mr. KASSON. That is precisely the point I wish to arrive at.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. How does the gentleman propose to get the five-minute rule in force, to which he has referred, giving those members who desire to speak for a short time an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. KASSON. As soon as the pending motions are disposed of, so that we can get rid of the incumbrances between us and the bill, I shall then move—or I will move now if it can be put in one motion—to proceed with the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ELDREDGE. What objection has the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to allowing debate to be continued, so as to give an opportunity to persons to speak who have been waiting here during all this discussion?

Mr. KASSON. Simply because the same things will be again said when we come to consider the amendment.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I apprehend not. That, however, the gentleman must leave to the good judgment and the good sense of those who speak, for certainly he would not deprive them of saying what they desire. This is one of those questions in which gentlemen feel more than an ordinary interest. And most of those who were in the Forty-second Congress have had their motives impugned. They have been charged with the commission of crimes of which they think they are not guilty. They desire to give expression to the feelings and ideas they entertain upon this subject. I think the latitude of debate should be much greater on that ground, because the honor of this Congress, as well as the honor of individuals, is concerned.

Mr. KASSON. I appreciate the force of what the gentleman says, and so far as it is in my discretion I desire to give to gentlemen who desire it that opportunity. But I have been pressed from all sides of the House to get this question at an advanced stage; and the only way I know to do it is the way I have suggested. If the control of the floor is at any time in my possession for an hour, after the previous question shall have been ordered, I would give away all of it but ten minutes. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE,] to whom I have promised to yield for five minutes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question is seconded, as indicated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] and called by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] does that not cut off the five-minute debate, and is not the House at once brought to a vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the previous question now asked for to be only upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. In that event it would not cut off the five-minute debate on the bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It does, until that amendment is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. And if it should be voted on, and the matter recommitted to the committee, there would be no debate.

Mr. KASSON. I do not desire any mistake in the vote of the members of the House. I believe I can state the question so clearly that no gentleman can mistake it. My purpose is, after a few minutes, to move the previous question on the motion to recommit and the amendments thereto. If the previous question is sustained, and the motion to recommit and the amendments voted down, then we get at the bill. And I propose then to consider it, and the amendments to the bill, under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Suppose the motion to recommit is voted up?

Mr. KASSON. Then the bill goes to the committee, and when they report it back it is again before the House for some discussion.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. And the committee may then call the previous question and shut off debate.

Mr. KASSON. That is, if the committee choose to do it. It certainly would not be done under the view I entertain.

Mr. ORTH. I made the motion for the previous question before I yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman after the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] gets through, which will be in five minutes.

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] desire to take the question entirely out of the jurisdiction of the House? As his motion was made after his time had expired, I supposed the Speaker recognized me.

The SPEAKER. The only question is whether the motion for the previous question shall be made now or five minutes hence. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] shall have concluded.

Mr. MONROE. I do not desire to take up the time of the House, and shall not do so to any great extent, because I know how many gentlemen are pressing for an opportunity to occupy the floor, and I also know how nearly the patience of the House has become exhausted with this debate.

I desire to say only a single word in explanation of the vote I shall give upon this measnre. My position in regard to the salary bill is this: I believe that the true thing for this House to do is to repeal, as completely and thoroughly as it possibly can consistently with the Constitution of the United States, the salary bill which was approved on the 3d of March, 1873. That is the object which I would like to accomplish by my vote, if I can do so. I disapproved at that time entirely of raising salaries; I so voted, and I am of the same opinion still. I wish to see that law totally repealed. I think that that is the simplest course. I think it is the right course and the course which will best satisfy the country. Having that feeling, that being my conviction, I desire so to vote, if possible, as to make my vote effective toward that end.

I discover that there is likely to be some difficulty in our so voting as exactly to represent our views; and it was for this reason that I felt desirous for one moment in which to state precisely my position and the end which I would like to accomplish. I honestly believe that it was wrong for the Forty-second Congress to raise salaries in the circumstances in which we were then placed. I was opposed to back pay, and I was opposed to "forward pay," as it is called; I am still opposed to them both. I thought the action of Congress on this subject was wrong, and I also thought it a great error as a matter of policy. I would be glad to see the law of last session on this subject wholly and utterly repealed. That is my feeling in regard to this matter; and my votes will be given with an honest desire to accomplish that end. I confess that in spite of the numerous explanations we have had, my mind is not perfectly clear as to what will be the most effective course of voting to accomplish that end; but that, with all the light I can get from all these distinguished sources, is the object I shall endeavor to accomplish.

One word further and I shall sit down. In my opinion the way to peace, quiet, and rest for this House upon this question of the salary bill is to get rid of the whole of it. That is my honest conviction. I believe that the sooner we repeal the act entirely, so far as it relates to this question, the sooner we shall have peace upon the subject. If we repeal but a part of it, I suspect we shall feel a certain lingering tendency to go back to the subject, to introduce new bills, to see whether we cannot finally and completely abolish what in the beginning we had repealed only in part. I fear, sir, that if we do not make a clean business of this matter at the very outset, this measure will haunt us all winter. This is an additional reason why I wish to get rid of the whole question; and I hope this House will so vote. I have made this statement simply to satisfy my own judgment and conscience in regard to this matter, and to explain the grounds upon which my votes will be given.

Mr. SPEER. The gentleman does not wish mileage restored?

Mr. MONROE. No, sir.

Mr. ORTH. Before calling the previous question I wish to say a single word. I am sorry there has been a misunderstanding between the Speaker and myself, for I gave, as I thought, ample notice of my intention in this matter.

The SPEAKER. There has been no misunderstanding involving any essential point.

Mr. ORTH. I wish to state, in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] that if my motion should prevail and the bill should go to the committee with these instructions, the bill when reported will be before the House for amendment or discussion under the five-minute rule, or any other rule which the House may see fit to adopt. I now move the previous question.

Mr. CLYMER. With the consent of the Chair, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. For the benefit of the numerous new members on this floor, including myself, I hope it will be the pleasure of the Chair to state, so that we may vote understandingly, the effect of the motion made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to respond to the gentleman's request. It may simplify the matter somewhat with gentlemen when they come to vote if they understand that, of all the numerous amendments which have been indicated by various gentlemen, none are pending except those offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.] The motion to recommit the bill is pending. The gentleman from Illinois moved to amend that motion by adding the instructions which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out sections 2 and 3 of the bill and insert the following:

That from and after the passage of this act the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall be at the rate of $6,000 per annum, payable monthly, and in addition thereto the actual individual expenses of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate, in going to and returning from the seat of Government once in each session, to be certified in writing by each.

SEC. 2. That the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be at the rate of $2,000 in addition to his pay as Representative, amounting in all to $8,000; and that of the Vice-President shall be the same amount, with the same allowance for traveling expenses as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. By this amendment the third section of the pending bill, in regard to covering into the Treasury amounts undrawn, is allowed to stand. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] moves to substitute for the instructions of the gentleman from Illinois those which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To report a bill repealing the whole salary act, so far as the same can be constitutionally done, except the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court, and to ascertain the average amount of salary, mileage, and all other allowances, (exclusive of any estimate for the use of the franking privilege,) paid to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the Forty-first Congress; and to report a bill forthwith determining the compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress hereafter at the amount, as near as practicable, thus ascertained, with necessary traveling expenses, and restoring all other salaries as they were before the passage of said act.

The SPEAKER. If the House should now second the demand for the previous question, the first vote will be upon the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Indiana as a substitute for those moved by the gentleman from Illinois. Should the House agree to this substitute, the vote will next be upon recommitting with those instructions. If the House should refuse to recommit with instructions, the question will then come directly upon the bill of the committee.

Mr. BURCHARD. The previous question is moved upon the pending bill; is it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the previous question to be now moved upon the whole subject.

Mr. KASSON. I do not understand that to be the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.] As I understand, he only calls the previous question upon the motion to recommit and the amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. Then, whether the motion to recommit be negatived or adopted, that will exhaust the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. And the House will then be brought to the direct question upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question be limited in the manner just stated, and the House should refuse to recommit, the bill will then stand before the House just as it does now.

Mr. KASSON. Subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. Subject to amendment in the broadest sense.

Mr. KASSON. That is what I desire the House to understand—that the previous question is not to operate upon the bill so as to cut off amendments, but is limited to the motion to recommit, with the amendments to that motion.

Mr. CLYMER. And also subject to debate?

The SPEAKER. It will still be open to debate if the House should refuse to recommit. It will be for the House to say whether it will recommit or not; but if they decline to recommit, the whole subject will be open to debate unembarrassed by the previous question.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to my friend from Indiana that he will get the sense of the House just as well if he should enlarge the scope of his motion.

Mr. ORTH. I thought I had moved the previous question only on my instructions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's instructions unless coupled with the motion to recommit would amount to nothing. The gentleman means to recommit with his instructions.

Mr. ORTH. Recommittal with my instructions.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. MONROE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry—whether, if we vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, we must next, under the previous question, vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman limits his demand for the previous question, if the House vote down his instructions, that will exhaust the previous question.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. What will be the condition of the bill if the previous question be voted down?

The SPEAKER. If the House should now refuse to second the demand for the previous question the bill will remain precisely in statu quo.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Just exactly as if the gentleman had not made the motion?

The SPEAKER. Precisely the same.

Mr. KASSON. Is it in order for me to move a modification of his motion?

The SPEAKER. It is not, because his motion is an amendment in the second degree, being an amendment of the instructions of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KASSON. That is not the question I wish to ask the Chair but whether it is in order to move an amendment to his demand for the previous question so as to include not only the gentleman's instructions but also the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The gentleman who demands the previous question has the right to define upon what it is he wishes to take the sense of the House. The demand for the previous question is not amendable.

Mr. KASSON. In that case, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that if the previous question is not sustained I shall then demand the previous question upon the bill itself, which will include the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question now is, whether the House will sustain the demand for the previous question on the instructions of the gentleman from Indiana; and the Chair will repeat, for the information of members, that if the House refuses to second that demand the bill will remain in statu quo, but if the House should second the demand and order the main question to be put, then the vote would recur on the recommittal of the bill with the gentleman's instructions. The Chair will ask that the vote be taken by tellers, and appoints Mr. ORTH and Mr. CLYMER.

Mr. LYNCH. If the motion of the gentleman from Indiana should be decided in the affirmative would that commit the House to such an extent as to preclude the offering of amendments?

The SPEAKER. Should the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana prevail it will send the bill to the committee. When the bill shall be reported back again and before the House it will be open to all amendments which may be offered in order until the previous question is again called and ordered.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 132, nays 126.

So the previous question was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is in order—the main question.

Mr. RANDALL demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. PARSONS. I ask that the instructions be again read.

The Clerk again read the instructions moved by Mr. ORTH.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman must be mistaken in saying the Forty-first Congress. He must mean the Forty-second Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. The Forty-first Congress is right.

Mr. KASSON. I hope the Speaker will explain that this is not a vote on the passage of the resolutions, but only whether the question shall be put—that is, as to whether they shall pass or not.

The SPEAKER. The House has seconded the demand for the previous question, and it is now the duty of the Chair to put the question to the House whether the main question shall be ordered or not. On the previous question tellers have been ordered, and the Chair appoints Mr. ORTH and Mr. CLYMER.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 156, noes 56.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the instructions of the gentleman from Indiana, which are proposed as a substitute for those of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.]

The proposition will be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I wish to ask the Chair whether these instructions are divisible, so we can have a vote on the naked question of repeal. Are the instructions divisible?

The SPEAKER. They are not.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I should be glad to vote on the question of repeal by itself.

Mr. KASSON. I now ask the Speaker to state to the House that this motion, if carried, is not final.

The SPEAKER. If the House shall now vote to substitute the instructions moved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] for those moved by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT,] it will then require another vote to recommit the bill with the instructions thus substituted.

Mr. KASSON. Gentlemen may vote "ay" on this question, and then, if they choose, they may vote "no" on recommitting the bill with the substituted instructions?

The SPEAKER. That is for gentlemen to determine for themselves. It is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to submit a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that proceedings at this time are apt to be delayed by questions not parliamentary; but if the gentleman has a parliamentary inquiry to make, the Chair will hear it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There is some obscurity about this question and I wish to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that what a resolution means, or what the effect of the law is, is not a parliamentary point. A parliamentary point is merely as to the stages of progress in acting upon a resolution or a bill. The Chair answers no question as to the effect of laws or their provisions.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I meant to ask the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr ORTH.]

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done, because the previous question is operating. The gentleman can walk across the floor and ask the gentleman from Indiana privately. The question is on substituting the instructions moved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] for those moved by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.]

The question being taken,

The CHAIR declared on the vote, by sound, that the ayes had it.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 16 voting in the affirmative; not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas, called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering tellers, there were—ayes 22; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were not ordered, the yeas and nays were refused, and the instructions moved by Mr. ORTH were substituted for those moved by Mr. HURLBUT.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs, Will the House recommit the bill with the instructions which have just been voted?

Mr. KASSON. Upon that I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary. The previous question is not yet exhausted. The previous question exhausts itself on the motion to recommit. If the House shall now vote to recommit, the previous question would be exhausted. If the House shall vote not to recommit, then the bill is before the House. The Chair will again submit the question, Will the House recommit the bill with the instructions?

Mr. HALE, of New York, called for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order the count on ordering the yeas and nays to be taken by tellers. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] will act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 29, noes 167.

The SPEAKER. The affirmative being less than one-fifth of the whole vote, the yeas and nays are not ordered. The ayes have it; and the bill is recommitted with the instructions moved by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.]

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted with instructions; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] the chairman of the committee, that when he reports back the bill he will report it back for discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HALE of Maine. I hope that may be done.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I hope not.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I make that proposition.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Gentlemen who have expressed their opinions on this bill wish now to cut other gentlemen off.

The SPEAKER. Under the intructions just voted by the House the committee have the right to report at any time. The Chair would understand, unless instructed by the House otherwise, that when the bill is reported back it will be under the same rule under which the original bill was reported.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I hope there will be no objection, when the bill is reported back, at as early a day as practicable, that it shall be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If it requires unanimous consent I shall object. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] has had his opportunity for debate and should not prevent other gentlemen from having the same privilege.

The SPEAKER. The understanding, as recorded on the Journal, and as members will recollect, was that the bill was to be considered in twenty-minute speeches until the House, by a majority vote, should order otherwise; and that it should then be under the five-minute rule as in Committee of the Whole. That would enable amendments to be disposed of after one speech in favor of and another against, and bring the House promptly to vote on any amendment that might be offered to the new bill. The Chair would further observe that that is the only rule, he apprehends, which would give members the right, which many seem to desire, to have amendments of their own considered. It will bring the power of amendment within the reach of every member.

Mr. DAWES. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that when the bill is reported back it shall be considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair will explain what that means. It means that there shall be five-minute speeches in favor of or against an amendment. Gentlemen will understand that that gives a very large latitude to mere verbal amendments. And there is the difference between that arrangement and considering a bill in Committee of the Whole, that a gentleman may have the yeas and nays on his amendment.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. And at any time, the bill being considered in the House, the will of the House may control the length of the discussion on any particular proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state that on any given amendment it is within the power of the House to close debate.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Will the House now, in violation of that order which it made in this case, by a majority vote determine to take away the right we had to a twenty-minute debate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I suppose the House made an order, with reference to this bill, by unanimous consent, that twenty minutes should be allowed to each member until the House indicated an indisposition to hear further debate by ordering the previous question.

The SPEAKER. O, no; the gentleman evidently did not hear the Chair. The House ordered that the debate should proceed under the twenty-minute rule until by a majority vote it should order that it should be conducted under the five-minute rule. The House, by unanimous consent, agreed that a majority of the members should bring the debate down to the five-minute rule whenever they chose, and that the debate thenceforward should proceed as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a parliamentary question; and it is whether, when we are proceeding in the House as in Committee of the Whole, there can be votes by yeas and nays upon amendments.

The SPEAKER. There can; it is different in that respect from the Committee of the Whole, because the House cannot take away the right of one-fifth of the members present to order the yeas and nays. That right cannot be waived.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move, then, to amend the motion of my colleague so as to provide that the bill shall be considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not understand that the motion is to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. That has already been decided. It is only as to length of speeches.

Mr. DAWES. One further question. In the Committee of the Whole the bill cannot be taken out and brought to a direct vote so long as any amendment is pending. Does that apply to this arrangement?

The SPEAKER. It does not; because it has always been ruled that the House, whenever a majority chooses, can sustain the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to a question of order. Is there anything before the House? Has not the bill been recommitted; and is it not entirely away from the House?

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House except the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that the debate hereafter on this bill, when reported from the committee, shall be under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is it not necessary that he shall wait until the bill is in the House and we have something to act upon?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that point would not be well taken.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does the Chair hold that it is in order to regulate the disposition of a bill not yet introduced?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the House reserved to itself the right to do this thing by a majority vote. The gentleman from Tennessee will perceive that the whole of this proceeding is on the basis that a majority of the House have a right to direct their own business.

Mr. MAYNARD. The majority, I submit, must act under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. This is in strict accordance with the rules, and in strict accordance with what is a little more emphatic than the rules—an arrangement made by unanimous consent.

The question was then taken on Mr. DAWES's motion; and there were—ayes 128, noes 67.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be instructed to furnish to each Member and Delegate of this House twenty-four copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, either daily or at the end of the session, in bound form, as each Member and Delegate may elect.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. TYNER moved that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TYNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXTRAORDINARY EXPENSES OF THE NAVY.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. TYNER in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 481) making appropriations for extraordinary expenses of the naval service.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to meet extraordinary expenses in the naval service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, namely:

For pay of the Navy, $300,000.
For contingent expenses of the Navy Department, $25,000.
For the Bureau of Navigation, $20,000.
For the Bureau of Ordnance, $500,000.
For the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, $500,000.
For the Bureau of Yards and Docks, $20,000.
For the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, $300,000.
For the Bureau of Steam Engineering, $335,000.
For the Bureau of Construction and Repair, $2,000,000.

And the appropriations herein made may be, in case of emergency, transferred from one Bureau to another, by special order of the President.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order upon the bill; and it is that the last clause of the bill, providing that the appropriations therein made may be, in case of emergency, transferred from one Bureau to another, by special order of the President, is not in order, as it is independent legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that he can raise that point of order when the committee shall reach that portion of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee for a very few moments. This bill is not in any ordinary sense of the term a deficiency bill. The appropriations made for the support of the Navy for the current year were ample for carrying on all the various Bureaus of that Department of the Government, and there would have been, according to all appearances and all possibilities, no deficiency but for the extraordinary circumstances which occurred a few weeks ago. It is due to the Secretary of the Navy to say that during his term of office no deficiency has been asked for in that Department, but no amount of prevision or prudence can foresee or provide against such circumstances as have occurred within the last few weeks in the Navy Department. These are too well known to all who hear me to require any rehearsal here. I shall, however, in order that the record may show the grounds on which we proceed, call attention to the letter of the Secretary, which is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 8, 1873.

SIR: Under the circumstances of the present emergency, I am compelled to ask that a special appropriation be made to cover the expenses of putting the iron-clad and cruising Navy of the United States in condition for immediate and active service.

I have taken measures to put every available iron and wooden ship of our Navy in condition for immediate duty.

I have ordered all the ships of the various squadrons within reach to rendezvous at Key West. I am enlisting men to supply and fill up the crews of all our vessels. I have accumulated materials, provisions, and supplies for their maintenance and support; and ordnance, ammunition, and all the weapons of naval warfare for their use.

The circumstances which have constrained the Department to this unusual activity and consequent expenditure are known to you and to the country. The fact that they occurred during the recess of Congress made it necessary that I should myself assume the responsibility of prompt action, relying upon the wisdom and justice of the people and their representatives for support.

I have not as yet exceeded the appropriation for the current year, but these measures, with the cost of preparing, transporting, and concentrating everything necessary to carry them out, have already almost exhausted the money of the working Bureaus of the Department, and these must be supplied at once if the work is to go on.

The cost of putting our iron-clads in condition for service (a work already undertaken and in some instances far advanced,) will also require a large immediate appropriation. The amount required to reimburse the Bureaus, so as to carry them through the year, and also to put all our available monitors in order, will be not less than four millions of dollars.

If our force is to be increased, or if the powerful double-turreted monitors Miantonomah, Monadnock, and Puritan are to be put in a condition of usefulness, at least a million of dollars more will be required.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

I also call attention to the supplemental letter of the Secretary of the Navy, asking in addition a million of dollars for emergencies that may yet arise not provided for in the appropriations he asked. That letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 8, 1873.

SIR: I find, on review of my letter to the Speaker, that I omitted to ask that Congress give me the necessary authority to enlist men beyond the limit fixed by law. I shall be obliged, in order to man the ships now fitting out to exceed the limit by about 1,500 or 2,000 men, and this excess should be authorized. The number of men can be reduced at any time by discharges when they are not needed.

Also in view of the difficulty of deciding at once between the many things pressing to be done, and of the impossibility of enumerating in advance, or even foreseeing from day to day what calls the Department may have upon it, I think the fifth million asked for in the last clause of my letter ought to be appropriated, and the Department or the President given discretion in its use, to meet any emergency.

Yours, very respectfully,

GEORGE M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

The committee have, therefore, put this bill before the House, not as a deficiency bill, but as a bill making appropriations to meet special and extraordinary expenses that have arisen in that Department.

It is well understood by every gentleman here that when the apparent threat of war came upon this country we were not upon a war footing in so far as our Navy is concerned. And, although the power with which it seemed possible we might be involved in war was really inferior in military strength to ourselves, it so happened that nearly all the warlike strength of Spain lay in her navy. We were stronger in our Army than in our Navy; she much stronger in her navy than in her army.

So far as we understand the situation, Spain had afloat on the sea, at the date of these troubles, about the middle of November last, 8 iron-clad monitors, and 3 others, all mounting 351 heavy guns. She had 24 screw frigates of war, mounting 537 guns; 27 other screw vessels, mounting 75 guns in all; 9 side-wheel steamers, mounting 17 guns; 51 gun-boats, mounting 1 gun each; 2 school-ships, mounting 58 guns; and 7 transports, carrying an average of 100 tons burden. A large proportion of all this fleet was in American waters, or within easy reach of American waters, when the troubles threatened. To speak more accurately, she had 57 keels, carrying 391 guns, in American waters; and also 7 transports in American waters, ready for use.

It became a matter of absolute and overwhelming necessity that the Naval Department should be prepared for what seemed a possible emergency of war. And to meet that I am glad to say that the Secretary of the Navy has in no case exceeded the appropriation for the current year. There were, under the several heads of appropriations named in this bill set to the credit of the Naval Department, sums sufficient to run the Department through to the end of the current fiscal year, namely, to the 1st day of July next. But the Secretary of the Navy has expended the sums under these several heads, or so nearly expended them that they will have been expended by the end of the current month.

This bill, therefore, is to reimburse the Navy Department for these special and extraordinary expenses; and the Secretary of the Navy informs the Committee on Appropriations that, with the appropriations here asked for, the Department will be made whole again; and that if no further extraordinary emergencies shall arise he will go through to the end of the fiscal year by aid of the appropriations we here give him in this bill. The committee then asked him whether, if these appropriations were granted, it would be necessary that we should give larger appropriation for the Navy during the coming fiscal year. His answer was gratifying; it was that he would not only not be required to ask for larger appropriations for the next fiscal year, but that he would need less appropriations because of this present appropriation. That would come about in this way; what has been done already, or ordered to be done, in the use of the funds we are now reimbursing, has been for putting into thorough reconstruction and repairs ships that will be good next year. Of course this remark will not apply to the whole expenditure of this appropriation. It was the judgment of the Secretary that at least 90 per cent. of the appropriations we now give will go into the form of permanent betterment of the Navy, and will not need to be repeated next year. I hope this may turn out to be true.

Possibly 10 per cent. of what we are now giving will be for expenses that will measurably be lost; that is, in case there is no war and no further threat of war, 10 per cent. of what we are now giving will be the real waste resulting from the emergency that has arisen. The Secretary, in these various lines of appropriations which I have suggested, has put in commission a large number of ships that were before out of commission, and in repair a number of ships not before ready for sea. He has not only really strengthened the effective force of our North Atlantic squadron, but has re-enforced it by calling ships away from other squadrons, and put it in readiness to operate from its headquarters, Key West, in case of emergency.

I wish to say further, in general remark upon this bill, that we do not now ask Congress to touch upon the Cuban question. It is simply to take care of what has been done in view of what seemed at the time to be a possibility of war. I am glad to find that all the prospects are now for quiet and settled peace in reference to this Cuban trouble. The diplomacy of the Administration appears thus far to have been successful, and all good men everywhere will rejoice that with the comparatively small outlay that has been made we have perhaps aided in making peace certain.

If there be no question, and no gentleman desires to make general remarks, I will ask that we now proceed to read the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say a word or two.

Mr. GARFIELD. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BECK. Five minutes, perhaps.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. The only reason I desire to make a remark is this: while I have, perhaps, made objection to the expenditures of the Navy Department in times gone by, and may do so again, still when a bill is presented stating that it is to meet extraordinary expenses of the naval service, and when it would not, perhaps, be proper even for Congress to inquire what those extraordinary expenses were, nor would it be proper, perhaps, for the Department to inform us of the exact condition of our relations with Spain at this time, so that we could properly go into a detail of all matters involved in this bill, I merely desire to say that I shall vote for all the appropriations asked for under these circumstances, reserving the right, however, when the general bill comes in, to call the Secretary of the Navy and the executive officers of this Government to account for anything that may have been expended wrongfully. But, in the mean time, I feel that my mouth is closed, because I do not know what the full necessity has been for this expenditure; I have not the means of ascertaining. It would, perhaps, be improper for the Executive Department to tell now what those extraordinary expenses are. Therefore I am willing to trust them with this money, large as the amount seems to be.

Mr. WOOD and Mr. COX rose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield first to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.] I will afterward yield to his colleague, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. WOOD. I assume, sir, that if an emergency should arise, or, indeed, if that emergency has now, in the judgment of the Government, arisen, this House will withhold no vote in favor of the most liberal appropriations for the Navy or the Army, or for any other purpose essential to protect the honor and the interests of our country. But for the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] I should not have risen to say one word upon this question. He has, however, made some statements to which I desire to call his attention and the attention of the House. He reports a bill, asking, for several specific objects, an appropriation of $4,000,000. He tells us he is happy to say that this appropriation of $4,000,000 must not be considered as in the nature of a deficiency; that the ample appropriations made by the last Congress for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1874, are entirely sufficient to cover all the expenses of that Department during that period. He further tells us that, in consequence of the exigencies of the occasion, the Secretary of the Navy has drawn upon the appropriations for other purposes, to the extent of these $4,000,000, as in his judgment it was proper for him to do to put the Navy into a proper condition for the defense of the country.

Now, sir, we are all aware that since the first agitation of this Cuban difficulty, with which we are all conversant, but a very few weeks have elapsed. We also know that it was physically, pecuniarily, and in every other respect impossible that during those few weeks there could have been properly expended by the Secretary of the Navy $4,000,000. Now, what I desire to know from the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is, whether he will say to the House that every dollar of this proposed appropriation of $4,000,000 has been expended for the purposes indicated; and if not, whether he will say, from information in his possession and not in ours, that any contracts have been entered into, or any provision for expenditure has been made which will warrant this extraordinary appropriation to cover expenses already incurred, or which the Government stands obligated to incur. Further, I wish to know whether the gentleman is prepared to tell us that he himself is quite sure that the Secretary of the Navy may not have taken advantage of the late excitement for the employment of men and the disbursement of money, which under ordinary circumstances he would not have attempted. Lastly, I wish to know whether he is prepared to say distinctly, as he has said indirectly, that the whole emergency which caused and justified these expenditures has entirely passed away. If the gentleman can assure us that these moneys were properly expended without an appropriation by Congress, and that after making this appropriation we shall not hereafter be called upon to make up a deficiency in consequence of the recent transactions in the Navy Department, I, for one, will very cheerfully support this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. In response to the five questions of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD,] which I think can be consolidated into two, I have to say, first, that the gentleman entirely misapprehended me if he understood me to say that the Secretary of the Navy had drawn from one fund to pay expenses properly chargable to another. I not only did not say that, but, on the contrary, I said that he had used several of the funds in their respective lines of use to meet the emergency, and that those special funds, and those only, were substantially exhausted.

Mr. WOOD. I did not understand the gentlemen as saying that the Secretary of the Navy had transferred a fund appropriated for a specific purpose to another purpose. What I understood the gentleman to say was that moneys appropriated for the Navy had been used for purposes not comprehended in the original appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not only is it the fact that those moneys have not been used for purposes not comprehended in the appropriations, but they have been used strictly and only for the very purposes to which they were appropriated. But it was understood when the appropriations were made that they would carry the Department through its expenditures for such purposes to the end of the fiscal year; and so they would have done but for this extraordinary emergency.

I have here a list of estimates in these several departments in which we now ask additional appropriations. For example: last year we appropriated $6,000,000 for the pay of the Navy during the fiscal year. Now the Secretary of the Navy has been compelled, under what he considered the pressing emergency, to enlist additional mer and, of course, to increase in that respect the expenditures he would be called upon to meet; and, although he has not used up the whole of that appropriation, yet it is so nearly exhausted that he asks for $300,000 more to eek out the pay of the Navy, so that the new men thus enlisted may be paid.

In the second place, this extraordinary emergency has used up—or partly used up—the contingent fund, amounting to $125,000; and the Secretary asks $20,000 more to reimburse that fund for the balance of the year. So in regard to the Bureau of Navigation, the appropriation for the fiscal year was $430,000. The Secretary has been compelled to spend more of that appropriation than would ordinarily have been spent in the first half of the fiscal year; and he asks for $20,000 to reimburse that fund.

But the largest and most important portion of these extraordinary expenses has been in supplies, in providing ordnance, in supplying shot and shell for our guns; and under this head he asks for half a million dollars to meet the expense of the ordnance he has purchased. Again, in equipment and recruiting—the clothing of men and the equipment of vessels—the Secretary asks for half a million dollars to supply what has been used for these purposes. There has been no transfer of funds. There has been no drawing on the future.

But another branch of the gentleman's question relates to contracts. I will say the Secretary of the Navy did make some contracts for procuring supplies, but the money we are appropriating will make the payments on those contracts. The Secretary asked for $5,000,000; the Committee on Appropriations thought that $4,000,000 would do. We have cut down the estimate of the Secretary to the extent of $1,000,000, believing that if any emergencies shall hereafter arise requiring the expenditure of the additional million dollars, the Secretary can then show that necessity and ask Congress to make the appropriation. But this fifth million was asked for, not to meet expenditures already made, but to meet those which it was supposed might arise even during the holidays while Congress shall be away. We thought nothing could arise in that space of time which would require us to go beyond what we are now doing. We heard the Secretary of the Navy for an hour and a half on one morning, and for nearly an hour another morning; and the committee were unanimous in the opinion that this measure as reported ought to pass.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Allow me to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations one question. I notice in this bill an appropriation for the Bureau of Construction and Repair of $2,000,000. Has that amount been already expended, or is it an amount which is yet to be expended?

Mr. GARFIELD. This is to pay what has already been expended, and for work now in process of being completed. It is for what has already been contracted to be done.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Does it extend to any prospective increase of contracts already entered into?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at all.

Mr. COX. I wish to say a word on this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will yield to the gentleman from New York for a question, holding the floor so we may proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. COX. I have yielded to everybody, and only ask now for myself two or three minutes. I do not wish to discuss the Cuban question, nor do I propose to embarrass this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will yield to the gentleman from New York for five minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose, as I have said, to discuss the Cuban question. I do not think there is enough fight in this House to kill a mouse. [Laughter.] We tried it the other day on belligerency. The diplomacy of this Government is not to the satisfaction of our people in any respect, and especially in reference to Cuba and Spain. But I will not discuss the Cuban question. Our flag is draggled in the dust on that question to-day by our diplomacy.

But one thing I am sure of, and that is, we ought to make our Navy better and stronger than it is. I have been one of those heretofore in this House who have been jealous of the increase of the Navy. I did not know exactly how ships were built in the navy-yard, nor how they were built by private contract. There were various questions propounded on both sides of the House as to the best mode and the purest mode of building our ships. But I do know that at the end of our war the ships built during the war were utterly worthless, because built of unseasoned timber. They were a failure; and, as was well said the other day by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] the vessels worth anything were those built before the war, of timber seasoned for twenty or twenty-five years.

We need a better navy. I am willing to go to that extent, although I am utterly in the dark as to our recent diplomacy. I believe our interests and our flag have suffered by the diplomacy of this Administration; yet I am willing in the present emergency to vote what the Secretary asks in this bill. And why? I know that what I say my colleagues on this floor will confirm, and that is, that the city of New York to-day is at the mercy of any big English iron-clads which may choose to enter that harbor. They could shell us out of our business and destroy our city. By some peculiar refinement of naval architecture or of naval warfare we are to-day at the mercy even of so mean and weak a power as Spain.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the gentleman think, then, this is a good time to go to war?

Mr. COX. I am not speaking of going to war. But is the gentleman's vote upon this bill based upon a war or upon a peace footing? I am speaking of the increase of the Navy, irrespective of what may be our diplomacy in regard to war or peace; but when we get all our diplomacy published here we may have the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to understand this whole business better than we do. We have not, so far, come up to the sentiment of our people on the Cuban question. This House is pusillanimous before the world to-day with regard to the old principle that the flag of our country covers the ship—as it were a part of our territory. We have not shown a scintilla of the old patriotic spirit.

But, sir, I will vote at all times to strengthen our Navy from other considerations. Our marine is growing and our Navy should grow with it to protect our commerce all over the world. I would give our flag all the strength our guns can give it. It will take thirty days before we have 300 guns ready for Cuban waters. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ARCHER] said yesterday, that at the meeting of Congress we had but 22 guns there; and I say to the House what I believe to be true as a reason why our diplomacy is so pusillanimous, that even if we had the pluck we had not the guns to go inside the harbor of Havana and take the Virginius thence. What we want is a stronger navy, a better spirit—a little of that spirit which belonged to our country in the better days of the Republic.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, it is a very gratifying thing to note the sudden conversion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] who has just taken his seat. Knowing something about the fights in this House for naval appropriations, I bear in very near memory the attacks which have been constantly made by him on naval appropriations. I congratulate the House and the country that to-day he is in favor of good and fair, liberal and noble, appropriations. But there is, what must have appeared to everybody, a monstrous inconsistency in the gentleman's cry for war. He starts out by declaring that this House is pusillanimous, and that the Administration is lacking in proper sentiment, and that had it been wisely guided it would have proceeded to take the Virginius from the harbor of Santiago de Cuba and brought her into our waters. And at the same time that he is urging and hounding this on, he says, what is not borne out by the facts, but is all the more inconsistent in him, that a single Spanish frigate could blockade our coasts, could bombard our towns, could burn millions and millions of property. If that is so, or if the gentleman believes it is so, what sense is there in his infuriated cry for war?

Sir, the best thing about this appropriation bill and the conduct of the Secretary of the Navy in this emergency is, that all his naval preparation is an argument, not for war, but for peace. To be well prepared in an emergency, so as to show to the world that we will not bear insult, if such is put upon us, is the best protection against insult. And when the Secretary of the Navy found the battered ships of the American Navy in the different waters of the globe, old and rotten and hardly sea-worthy, and in the past five or six weeks has put a respectable navy afloat which is on its way to the Cuban waters, he did that in the best interests of diplomacy, he did it in the best interests of humanity. It was not to precipitate war upon this country, when to-day we are big with the memories of a war that, unless it be forced upon us, no sane man again wants in this generation. He did it in the interests of peace. And I venture to say, sir, now, when we see peace probable, when we see the speck of the war-cloud passing away, that it is more owing to the good conduct, the vigilance, the enterprise of the Secretary of the Navy in putting within this short time a good navy in the American waters ready for an emergency, if it should arise—it is more owing to that conduct on his part than to anything else.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS.]

Mr. MYERS. I am one of those, sir, who believe that the appropriation in this bill is demanded not only by the extraordinary event which hastened the necessity for it, but by the ordinary requirements of the Navy.

The Secretary of the Navy in his report for 1872 warned the country that our cruising Navy, unless new material were added to it, would rapidly pass away. Congress responded by ordering the construction of new ships of war, and doing something in the direction of repair to the old vessels. The Secretary also called attention to the fact that our iron-clad fleet needed extensive repairs. Much of the woodwork was going to decay, greatly crippling this branch of the service. Live-oak could not be procured from Florida or Georgia during the war, the timber we were compelled to use in haste was unseasoned, and the result I have stated was inevitable.

Congress had passed appropriations under which several of our monitors were repaired, but the majority of them remained in the state complained of, and it was urged that these should be made ready for any duty.

In reply to this some gentlemen contended here that our Navy was strong enough, and no emergency was likely to arise which would call for addition to its efficiency.

If I am not mistaken, my friend from New York [Mr. COX] was in that category. How suddenly that emergency came we all know, and it should prove a lesson for the future.

The massacre of the Virginius's passengers naturally aroused the indignation of the American people. It was done in defiance of the law of nations and of civilization, in violation of our treaty with Spain, and with a haste and disregard of the protest of our consul utterly unjustifiable. Not only was the Virginius an American ship, properly registered, properly cleared, flying the American flag, unresisting, illegally captured on the high seas, beyond the jurisdiction of Spain; but the seizure of the telegram which our consul sent in order to assure himself of the nationality of that vessel, and its delay by the Cuban authorities, followed by the speedy execution of American citizens captured on it, would of itself have furnished a ground for the most serious complaint.

What, sir, did the Administration do? Protection is the first duty of the State to its citizens. That nation is derelict to its highest obligation which fails to vindicate the sovereignty of its flag.

Right faithfully and nobly have the President and Administration fulfilled that obligation Ready for war if the necessity comes, the people are glad that the Administration have obtained from Spain an acknowledgment and reparation which does no dishonor to Castelar, as fervid a republican and eloquent a statesman as Europe has produced for many years, and which republican Spain could not do less than accord. Every demand which the President had a right to make has been made and acceded to. Yet the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] tells us we have been pusillanimous, and that our flag has been insulted with impunity. I tell him now, that the nation, eager as it was for reparation, is satisfied that not a moment has been lost nor a jot abated in vindication of our national honor in this affair, and that everything will be done to compensate for the wrong.

When the war of the rebellion came, we almost improvised a navy. Now, responding to the wishes of the people, Congress not being in session, General Grant took the responsibility and in a few brief weeks the Navy is almost on a war footing, so that however incredulous the gentleman from New York may be, the American people have faith that if the necessity shall arise it will be able, with the aid of these appropriations, to vindicate the national honor and protect the rights and persons of American citizens in Cuba or elsewhere.

It is alleged that the war cloud is passing away. I sincerely hope and believe this to be true. The nation, reunited, has had enough of war, enough of debt and taxation. The time has come when our attention should be turned to the wants of the people and their employment. The country is as rich in its resources as ever; but a panic, following the failure of many of our business houses, has for a time seriously crippled our industries and thrown great numbers of workmen out of employment. It is a matter for congratulation that this war speck, while it has added to the efficiency of our Navy, gives work to many of these, has aided to start the wheels of trade, and restore that confidence which alone is needed to dissipate the financial crisis.

I have every confidence that the Virginius will be restored without delay. The survivors of those captured on her are, however, still held captive; and though Castelar seems master of the situation, a few weeks might bring new difficulties to him and a necessity to enforce protection to American citizens in Cuba.

Such protection was needed and given last May in Panama, and, in my judgment, a sufficient power should be present in all our squadrons to enforce it at all times. Peace will be best preserved and foreign complications avoided in this way. Henceforth we are secure from danger within our borders, and it is of the highest importance that our naval power should not only co-operate in missions of civilization and humanity and protection, but by its very strength ward off the probability of war.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who have last spoken have anticipated in some measure what I desire to say to the House, but I wish to add a few words. I confess that my indignation was somewhat stirred by the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who dared to tell the House that it was pusillanimous; that it had not courage enough to kill a mouse; that our flag has been trampled in the dust, with other taunts of that description. Now I have no admiration for that cheap sort of bravery. I would not retort by remarks equally cheap, or I might retort by asking where the gentleman was when a late gigantic war threatened this nation. There was a grand opportunity to plunge into the struggle—whether he took one side or the other is indifferent so far as my point is concerned—a war that shook the continent and aroused the world, involving questions that concern the course of nations for centuries. Where then was the gentleman so eager for strife? Does he know what war is? Does he know what it is to see dear friends dashed in pieces by his side—to see men go down by the hundreds and feel ground slippery with blood? Why does he get up here in the council of the nation and rant in favor of war, which means the slaughter of thousands of our fellow-men and the squandering of hundreds of millions of dollars? I say the man is, before God and the country, guilty of a crime who dares stand here and trifle with this solemn question. He does not know what war is; or if he does then is he ten times more guilty.

I commend to the gentleman an illustration which I bring from my own recollections. I once before knew a gentleman who was extremely anxious to get into a little fight. The war had progressed for about a year and a half, and he had been on delightful, peaceful duty at a distant post, with a very fine regiment that looked charming on dress-parade, and was really in admirable condition. He complained that he had never seen a fight. Well, we started on an expedition and the gallant colonel was given the lead. We came suddenly upon the enemy in a thicket, and he deployed his men in line of battle; the confederates were on a slope beyond, knowing every inch of the woods, of which the colonel knew nothing; they opened a terrible fire upon him, and in three minutes he lost eighty men. He came out of it, however, handsomely; and I asked him at night, "Colonel, how did you like it?" "Well," said he, "I am satisfied, but when, in about a minute after the fight began, I saw my men going down all around me I thought, can't this confounded thing be compromised in some way?" [Laughter.]

I want to add another word. I want to say not only something in commendation of the Secretary of the Navy, who, I believe, has done his duty nobly according to the best lights before him, but I wish to add an emphatic commendation of the President and Secretary of State for the calm, self-respecting good sense and, I may venture to say, Christian temper and Christian statesmanship (unpopular as the expression is with some) which they have exhibited in this matter. It would have been easy to plunge headlong, unprepared as we were, into a great war, but even if we had the grandest Navy in the world, we should have had a right to demand from them the same reticence, patience, and self-respect they have shown in this case.

Sir, the time has passed when the American nation need go about the world with a chip on its shoulder challenging every rowdy to fight. The world knows how we can fight, and we know that we are ready, if God puts it on us, to meet any and all enemies. For that reason we can afford to be forbearing under the insults of foes weaker than ourselves, and moderate and temperate with all. I say that nothing General Grant ever did, from the time he left Galena until he passed through the Wilderness to the White House, does him more honor than the patient firmness with which he has met the Spanish difficulty, and I hope, in Heaven's name, settled it. We do not want unnecessary war.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CROOKE.]

Mr. CROOKE. I rise to make one remark in answer to the most remarkable assertion which has fallen from my colleague from New York, [Mr. COX.] He has stated that the harbor of New York is left defenseless and at the mercy of any attacking force. That is not so. He was speaking of that whereof he knows not, and I am speaking of that whereof I know. Thanks to the Secretary of the Navy, thanks to this Administration, the harbor of New York to-day is impregnable to all the naval forces of the world. If the Spanish navy, strong as it is—and I have inspected one of its vessels lying in the dry dock at New York—were to attempt to-day to force the harbor of New York, they would be sent to a warmer climate than that of New York.

One word more. I know the harbor of New York has been so protected within the last month; it was tolerably well protected before. It has been protected by torpedoes; by the Roanoke, a three-turreted ship, which, manned with a thousand sailors, and stationed in the Narrows, I believe could prevent the whole Spanish navy from passing it; by the Dictator; by other monitors, and by other means of naval defense. I wish the whole world to know, I wish the pusillanimous people of New York to know, and if there are any pusillanimous persons in this House I wish them to know, that the harbor of New York is to-day impregnable to the whole naval force of the world. And it is to the Secretary of the Navy and to this Administration that we owe the fact that our defenses have been quietly and secretly perfected, so that we might be ready for war if necessary.

Mr. COX. I desire to say a word.

Mr. GARFIELD. Hoping that my friend will liberate us from the charge of pusillanimity, and the city of New York from the charge of being defenseless, I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. COX. When I made the remark about the peculiar characteristic of this House, with respect to pusillanimity, I had in my mind the way they shoved the resolutions of belligerency into the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or rather the way they did not do it even. When I made my speech sustaining this bill, and if possible urging this House to pass it, I did not expect that a lot of these Captain Bobadils, who are fresh from the war, and who want to recount their own great deeds, would come up here and make these anti-war speeches. I never made a speech for war. But I can say that never in my life did I know any member of Congress from Connecticut, from the time of the Hartford convention down, who did not show some sort of war spirit, as against our own country or on sectional matters, and always cowed down when it came to fighting for the flag abroad.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. If the gentleman wants to know about cowards——

Mr. COX. I am not making a personal fight on you.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. You may do so as soon as you please.

Mr. COX. I said "cowed," not "cowards."

Mr. GARFIELD. Spell it with an "h"; make it "cow-herds." [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I say to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] who is so like most soldiers, that when he put in my mouth a speech for war he made a little mistake. I said nothing of the kind. What I did say was, that this House had not come up to the spirit of the people with respect to the Virginius. We have not yet vindicated the flag; we have not yet shown that old devotion to the flag which belonged to the other days of the Republic. That is what I said.

As to what I said about the harbor of New York, I did not consult with gentlemen who are politicians. I got my information from men who are engineers, and who understand this matter a little better than I do. I believe that to-day, unless our Navy is in some way enhanced and strengthened, unless our harbors are more or less strengthened, they are at the mercy of other powers who have these great iron-clads, and who have the advantage of this new system of aggression and defense that has grown up within the last five years.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. The Spanish navy never could get into the harbor of New York and get out again. I tell my colleague that.

Mr. COX. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I know it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now ask that the bill be read by paragraphs.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendments, and the following was read:

For the Bureau of Steam-Engineering, $335,000.

Mr. ARCHER. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making a few remarks. The remarks which I shall make I do not intend shall have any political bearing so far as the two parties of the country are concerned. But I wish to call the attention of this House, not to a state of war, but to the state of our Navy as it exists at the present time, and to the condition of the Spanish navy as it now exists.

The Spaniards have now afloat 880 guns. I hold in my hand a list of the vessels in the Spanish navy, showing where each one is stationed, the number of feet of water each draws, the number of horse-power, and the number of guns carried by each. I assert—and any member of this House will so find upon examination of this list—that the Spaniards can with great ease concentrate in Cuban waters 545 guns by the last day of this month.

Now let it be taken for granted that the Virginius is to be delivered up, that the American citizens captured upon her are to be handed over to us, that the indemnity for those executed is to be paid to their widows and orphans, there is yet a serious question for the country. That is, the demand of the popular heart, the demand of humanity, the demand of Christianity, that this Congress shall acknowledge belligerent rights to the people who have struggled so many years for their independence. That being a question which may come before us immediately after the settlement of this, it is well that we should be in a condition to defend ourselves.

I say now, and the gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations on the other side of the House who are posted in those matters know it, that it is not possible for us to concentrate more than 414 guns in Cuban waters, while the Spaniards can concentrate there over 545 guns by the first day of the coming year. That cannot be denied. We cannot do more than that, except by the purchase of merchantmen and mounting them with the heavy guns now being made by the Navy Department, and most properly made for that purpose in case of emergency.

Sir, not only ought this bill for $4,000,000 be passed, but a larger sum should be given to the Navy Department. Every nation now that pretends to anything like ascendency upon the seas has from four to eight of these large armor-plated vessels. We have none. Our naval officers cannot hold a line of battle unless they can enter into the contest with such vessels.

But, sir, in regard to this bill I submit that it ought to be passed immediately, and I hope that the Committee on Appropriations will at an early day ask for a still larger appropriation. While on the floor I wish to call the attention of the gentleman having charge of the bill to the fact that the committee ask no additional appropriation for the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. Appropriations are proposed for all the bureaus except this; yet I understand that a deficiency is just as likely to occur in this Bureau as in the others. Before closing I wish to submit as a part of my remarks the list, to which I have referred, of vessels in the Spanish navy.

Spanish navy.

IRON-CLAD FRIGATES.

Names.	Speed.	Men.	Guns.	Draught.	H. P.	Tonnage.	Station.
	Knots
Numancia	9–12	700	25	30	1000	....	In hand of insurgents.
Vitoria	9–12	700	23	30	1000	....	Spain.
Tetuan	6	....	40	32	1000	....	In hand of insurgents.
Arapiles	7	....	17	30	800	....	Dry dock, New York.
Zaragoza	8	....	21	30	800	....	Spain.
Sagunto	7	....	13	30	800	....	Do.
Resolucion	8	....	6	26	500	....	Asiatic waters.
Mendez Nunez	.....	....	6	....	....	....	In hand of insurgents.
Castilla*	.....	....	....	....	....	....
Aragon*	.....	....	....	....	....	....
Navarra*	.....	....	....	....	....	....

* Building.

SCREW-FRIGATES.

Villa de Madrid	8– 9	550	48	30	800	....	Mediterranean.
Almansa	9–10	550	48	28	600	....	Havana.
Navas de Tolosa	9–10	....	48	24	600	....	Do.
Gerona	9–10	....	48	30	600	....	Do.
Asturias	.....	....	51	....	360	....	Mediterranean, (unseaworthy.)
Carmen	.....	....	41	24	600	....	School-ship Ferrol, (unseaworthy.)
Lealtad	8– 9	....	33	26	500	....	Havana, (unseaworthy.)
Concepcion	.....	....	32	....	600	....	Ferrol.
Blanca	.....	400	38	....	360	....	South America.
Berenguela	.....	400	26	....	360	....	West Indies.
Maria de Molina	.....	....	18	....	300	....	Canaca.

SIDE-WHEEL STEAMERS.

Ciudad de Cadiz	6– 7	....	16	22	500	....	Havana.
Fernando el Catolico	9–10	....	16	22	500	....	Sunk by the insurgents.
Isabel la Catolica	9–10	....	16	22	500	....	Havana.
Chincurra	10–11	....	2	....	400	....	Do.
Colon	.....	....	6	....	350	....	Havana, (unseaworthy.)
Blasco de Garay	.....	....	6	....	350	....	In hands of insurgents, (unseaworthy.)
Pizarro	.....	....	6	....	350	....	Havana, (unseaworthy.)
Herman Cortez	.....	....	6	....	350	....	Do.
Ulloa	.....	....	6	....	350	....	Do.
Vasco Nuñez	.....	....	6	....	350	....	Do.
Leon	10–11	....	2	....	230	....	Do.
Vulcano	.....	100	6	....	200	....	Do.
Lepanto	.....	100	2	....	200	....	Barcelona, (unseaworthy.)

SCREW VESSELS.

Tornado	.....	....	6	....	250	....	Havana.
Consuelo	.....	....	2	....	200	....	Cadiz.
Vencedora	.....	....	3	....	160	....	Manila.
Narvaez	.....	....	3	....	160	....	Do.
Santa Lucia	.....	....	3	....	160	....	Cadiz.
Circe	.....	....	3	....	160	....	Manila.
Diana	.....	....	5	....	160	....	Cadiz.
Africa	7– 8	....	3	12	160	....	Havana.
Vad Ras	7– 8	....	3	12	160	....	Manila.
Andaluza	.....	....	3	....	130	....	Havana.
Guadiana	.....	....	3	....	130	....	Do.
Huelva	.....	....	3	....	130	....	Do.
Sirena	.....	....	3	....	130	....	Do.
Ligera	.....	....	3	....	120	....	Cadiz.
Favorita	.....	....	3	....	130	....	Havana.
Santa Filomena	.....	....	3	....	130	....	Do.
Constancia	.....	....	2	....	100	....	Mania.
Valiente	.....	....	2	....	100	....	Do.
Animca	.....	....	2	....	100	....	Do.
Prosperidad	.....	....	3	....	80	....	Do.
Condor	.....	....	2	....	80	....	Havana.
Santa Teresa	.....	....	2	....	80	....	Cadiz.
Buenaventura	.....	....	2	....	80	....	Vigo.
Caridad	.....	....	2	....	80	....	Canary Islands.
Concordia	.....	....	2	....	80	....	Fernando Po.
Edetana	.....	....	2	....	80	....	Balearic Islands.
Ceres	.....	....	2	....	80	....	South America.

Spanish navy—Continued.

SIDE-WHEEL STEAMERS.

Names.	Speed.	Men.	Guns.	Draught.	H. P.	Tonnage.	Stations.
Liniers			2		120		Catalonia.
Vigilante			2		120		Valencia.
Alerta			2		120		Malaga.
Venadito			2		120		Do.
Neptune			2		120		Havana.
D. Juan d'Austria			1		120		Do.
Guadalquiver			2		100		Do.
Pelez			2		150		Out of service.
Basan			2		160		Do.

SCREW TRANSPORTS.

San Quentin					300	1300	These vessels used to carry troops between Spain and Cuba.
San Francisco de Borgia					300	1300
Marquis de la Victoria					160	1200
Patino					160	1200
Escaño					130	800
Ferrol					120	800
San Antonio					90	600

SCHOOL SHIPS.

Esperanza							Laid up.
Ferrolana							In hands of insurgents.

SCREW GUN-BOATS.

Mindanao			1		30		Manila.
Calamianes			1		30		Do.
Paragua			1		30		Do.
Mindoro			1		30		Do.
Prueba			1		30		Do.
Panay			1		30		Do.
Samar			1		30		Do.
Filipeno			1		30		Do.
Bulusar			1		20		Do.
Iolo			1		20		Do.
Maribeles			1		20		Do.
Arayak			1		20		Do.
Pampunga			1		20		Do.
Bojeador			1		20		Do.
Balanquingia			1		20		Do.
Albay			1		20		Do.
Manileño			1		20		Do.
Cariteño			1		20		Do.
Activo			1		40		Havana.
Cuba Española			1		40
Argos			1		40		Havana.
Siree			1		40		Do.
Centinella			1		40		Do.
Salamandra			1		40		Do.
Quien Vive			1		40		Do.
Guadiana			1		40
Vigia			1		40
Astuto			1		40
Almendares			1		40		Havana.
Eco			1		40
Destello			1		40		Havana.
Contramaestre			1		40
Marinero			1		40		Havana.
Soldado			1		40		Do.
Ericsson			1		40		Do.
Zebret			1		40		Do.
Cazador			1		40
Canto			1		40		Havana.
Gaceta			1		40		Do.
Telegrama			1		40		Do.
Criollo			1		40		Do.
Ardid			1		40		Do.
Indio			1		40		Do.
Carib			1		40		Do.
Alarma			1		40		Do.
Descubridor			1		40		Do.
Yumuri			1		40		Do.
Flecha			1		40		Do.
Daido			1		40		Do.
Caiman			1		40		Do.
Cocodrillo			1		40		Do.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro-forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Bureau of Construction and Repair, $2,000,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move, pro forma, to amend the clause just read by striking out the last word. My object in making this motion is to give notice of a point of order that I propose to raise on the succeeding paragraph, which provides that "the appropriations herein made may be, in case of emergency, transferred from one Bureau to another, by special order of the President." In a time of real public danger, or of reasonable apprehension of such danger, I should not be willing by any motion whatever to embarrass in the slightest degree those departments of the Government having charge of our public affairs; but at such a time as the present, when even the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations concedes, what everybody knows, that there is no reason to apprehend danger in the immediate future, I doubt the propriety of an extraordinary provision of this kind.

Our Government has in the past submitted to outrages on the part of the Cuban authorities more atrocious than those which have dishonored humanity during the last few weeks. In the absence of any pending difficulty I am unwilling that we should incorporate into the law a proposition which will relieve the Navy Department from its just measure of responsibility. I am not willing that the Department shall be authorized to transfer at pleasure, from one fund to another, our appropriations in such a manner that no member of the House shall be able to tell whether the money is expended for the purpose of supplying a deficiency or to meet an extraordinary emergency. I want the law on this subject to remain as it is, unless the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is able to say that there is a pending emergency making it necessary to remove this ordinary safeguard upon the expenditure of the public funds. Unless some reason of this kind can be shown I shall press my point of order against the proposition, while I should not do so in the face of a condition of circumstances which would seem to demand the most liberal policy upon the part of the Representatives of the people toward the executive branch of the Government.

I wish to say one additional word. I represent a western constituency; and it has always been a source of mortification to me that items like this now pending—$2,000,000 for the Bureau of Construction and Repair—seem to excite the wildest enthusiasm here. Sir, we have no objection to giving an adequate support to the Government. We are willing to appropriate whatever may be necessary to maintain upon the high seas a navy capable of defending our national honor in every emergency; but we are not willing that one dollar shall be improperly expended for any such purpose. I withdraw my pro-forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the appropriations herein made may be, in case of emergency, transferred from one Bureau to another, by special order of the President.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order that the clause just read is in conflict with existing law.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that the gentleman, reserving his point of order, will allow me to explain the reason for inserting this clause.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the point of order be reserved I am willing to hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee were, in the first instance, requested to appropriate four or five million dollars in a lump. It was our opinion that that would be an unwise and unsafe way to legislate. We therefore asked for items, that we might distribute whatever we thought it proper to appropriate, to the various Bureaus in which the deficiencies had occurred and were occurring. The Secretary said it would be impossible until the work was completed to specify precisely what sum each branch of the naval service would require, because it could not be known in advance where the pressure would come. We then asked him to make the best estimate he could, so that we might distribute the appropriations accordingly, adding, however, a provision for transferability, not upon his own discretion, but on special order from the President, and only in case of special emergency. We thought that this would be a sufficient guard and that it would be better to distribute the appropriations in this way, giving them this flexibility, than to make an appropriation in a lump for all purposes. I hope the gentleman will not press his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Ohio of course concedes that this provision is in conflict with existing law.

Mr. GARFIELD. I presume that the gentleman, if he insists on his point, will be able to have the clause ruled out. I made my statement that he might see the propriety of withdrawing the point.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing to reserve my point till the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] shall have been heard.

Mr. BECK. I rose to indicate an amendment which I desire to offer to the pending paragraph. It is to add these words: "which order, with the reasons therefor, shall be communicated to Congress whenever the good of the public service will permit." In other words, I desire that we may be able to ascertain hereafter the reasons for making any such transfer, thus maintaining on the part of Congress a supervision over these transfers.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to that at all, but, on the contrary, will cordially vote for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw my point of order on this condition, that the gentleman shall modify his amendment. I do not see any reason for the provision contained in the last clause, that the reasons only shall be reported when the condition of public affairs will permit. The reasons for transferring from one fund to another can never be affected by any pending condition of affairs.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the proviso is a wise one, and will vote for it cheerfully.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the omission of the words I have indicated, I will agree to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw his point of order?

Mr. BECK. Let me state the reason why I make it in this shape.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is what I would like to know.

Mr. BECK. While I agree with the gentleman from Indiana that ordinarily it is dangerous to allow this to be done, we must not forget that we are now making appropriations, amounting to $4,000,000, to meet extraordinary expenses which have arisen from a sudden emergency, and that something may occur when it would not be proper or compatible with the public interest to communicate to Congress the reasons for any such transfer made necessary in any of the Bureaus of the naval service, instead of applying to Congress for an additional appropriation for that particular branch where the necessity existed. My amendment generally requires when the President gives those orders he shall communicate the reasons to Congress therefor whenever it is compatible with the public interest for him to do so. In other words, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to embarrass the President or to do anything which may tend to weaken us in our present difficulty with a foreign power. I have not been in the habit of saying many things in favor of the President or in favor of his Secretaries; but just here I wish to declare my concurrence in what has been said by the gentleman from Connecticut, that if there is anything which the President has done well it is, in my judgment, his negotiation with Spain in the dilemma in which we have been placed with that power in the seizure of the Virginius by one of her war vessels. He could, if he had seen fit, have plunged the country into a war by pursuing a different course from that which he has, and thereby perhaps have aggrandized himself at the expense of the nation. The course he has pursued, in my judgment, has been careful, moderate, and wise; and I do not wish in any way to embarrass him in reference to the appropriations which he now asks at our hands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be read, so we may know exactly what it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 26, on page 2 of the bill, these words: "which orders, with the reasons therefor, shall be communicated to Congress whenever the good of the public service will permit."

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my point of order, although I do not believe there is any necessity to include the words at the close of the gentleman's amendment. I believe the public interests will be better guarded by having those reasons communicated in every instance.

Mr. MAYNARD. I wish to make a motion to strike out, which will not be in order if I do not make it at this time. I move to strike out the words—

And the appropriation herein made may be, in case of emergency, transferred from one Bureau to another, by special order of the President.

